"In the summer, when these pastoral people are tending their cattle at a distance from the valleys, and occupying their chalets, or temporary cabins, upon the summits of the mountains, the clearness of the atmosphere allows the sound of the same Sabbath-bells to reach them, calling them to the worship of the Creator beneath the canopy of heaven. They assemble in a convenient place on the green turf to listen to the exhortations of their minister, who follows them on every seventh day to their remotest pasturings."

THE SABBATH BELLS.

"Those Sabbath bells, those Sabbath bells,
How many a tale their music tells,
Of hoary past, and hallow'd times
When martyrs heard their soothing chimes!

Those Sabbath times have passed away,
And many a throng that hail'd that day
Within the tomb now darkly dwells,
And hears no more those Sabbath bells.

And so 'twill be when these are gone;
That tuneful peal will still ring on,
While other saints will walk those dells,
And wake their praise with Sabbath bells."

POMPEII AND HERCULANEUM.

A railroad carried us from Naples to Annunciata—a small town about two miles from Pompeii. Here we encountered a motly throng of hackmen, who were as bland as zephyrs towards us, but would turn upon each other with the deep, hoarse growl of a tempest, which we soon lulled to repose by mounting the coach which chanced to be nearest. The instant we were seated, our charioteer cracked his whip, and went off at full gallop, singing at the top of his voice one of the wild, sweet, Anacreontic airs of his country, with a spontaneity of soul which assured us that the man had never known an anxious hour or a troubled thought. We approached the disinterred city through an avenue of tombs rising above the road on either side. On approaching the gate, the first object to be noticed is an inn, such as country people still, in all the world, know well how to use, in order to lessen the expense of a visit to the city.—At each side of the gate are sentry boxes; passing within, we found ourselves in one of the principal streets of the city. The houses are generally but one story high. The roofs have quite disappeared, crushed beneath the weight of the volcanic ashes; but the walls stand perfectly firm. The streets are very narrow, and the pavement, composed of pieces of lava, is deeply indented by the wheels of Pompeian carriages. Many of the houses are built of lava—the fiery stream of some ancient eruption, long before the brief records of man began to note the awful voice and action of Vesuvius. Pompeii was destroyed, not by lava, but by ashes; which accounts for the admirable preservation of the objects found there. The calamity was not so sudden but that most of the inhabitants were able to save themselves by flight; hence very few human skeletons have been found. From the absence, in many of the houses, of things which must have been in them at the moment of the disaster, it is supposed that the people seized on what was most precious and carried it with them; or perhaps returned after the work of ruin was done, and recovered what they could by excavation. The ashy tempest which buried this fair city, raged for more than a week, swept quite across the Mediterranean, and left traces of itself on the distant shores of Egypt. Naples is just the same distance from the volcanic crater as Pompeii, and by a slight variation of circumstances might have been the buried city. Pompeii was once, perhaps at the time of the fatal eruption, on the sea, and its wharves were laved by the river Sarnus. The sea has long since retired to the distance of three-fourths of a mile, and the river has shrunk to a mere rivulet. After lying beneath ashes and cinders for 1676 years, indications of its site were accidently discovered. The excavations were begun in 1755. As yet, but one third of the city has been disinterred; but this has revealed to us objects of the deepest interest—including eighty houses, an immense number of small shops, the public baths, two theatres, two halls of justice called basilicas, eight temples, the prison, the amphitheatre, and other public edifices, besides a great number of fountains and tombs.

As you pass these silent and desolate streets, you are curious to learn all that is known of each house. You have your book and your map in your hand, and your guide at your side, prepared to supply every deficiency by a ready memory, or by a readier invention. We are now in the street which leads from the gate at which we entered, to the forum. On our left is a shop where drinks were sold; it has a marble counter, from which the passers by could take their refreshments without going within. I fear they were in the habit of drinking hot punch in those days; for the circular prints of the hot glasses or other vessels are still distinctly visible on the smooth marble. On the right stands the house of a musician. On the left again, a house which belonged to the vestals. Then comes the custom house, the house of a surgeon, in which were found the instruments already described. In what I might call grocers' shops, the large earthern jars which contained the wine, oil, and other articles, are still arranged around the wall. They were not moveable, their contents being dipped up by the ladles of which the museum at Naples contains a great many specimens. A baker's shop arrested my attention. The front portion upon the street contained the articles made ready for use. Behind this was the mill for grinding the grain, in the form of a coffee mill—consisting of a solid cone of very hard lava, fitted to a hollow cone of the same material; still further in the rear are the ovens; so that the whole establishment is quite comprehensive.

The general plan of the houses is that of a quadrangle, built round an open court. Nearly all the rooms open into this court, at the centre of which is a marble fountain, or cistern of water, and their only light is derived from the doors. From the small size of the apartments, it is supposed that hospitality could not have been one of the virtues of the Pompeians. They, probably, as the inhabitants of those countries still do to a great extent, spent much of their time in the forum, in the public baths, at the theatres, or at the amphitheatre. Here they saw every body, conversed with every body, and had therefore little motive for social entertainments at their own houses.

The baths of Pompeii are both spacious and splendid. They are divided into three separate apartments; the first for servants and for fires, the second for the use of the women, and the third for the men. All these apartments are beautifully adorned with frescoes, and with figures wrought in stucco, both in the ceilings and on the walls. The basin for cold water is twelve feet and ten inches in diameter, and is lined throughout with white marble. A bronze window frame was found in one of these baths, containing four beautiful panes of glass, which prove that this elegant comfort was not unknown to the Pompeians. Nor is this the only evidence of their skill in this kind of manufacture; for a large number of vases, bottles, and glasses, of very elegant patterns and beautiful material, have been brought to light. Some idea of the extent and magnificence of these baths may be formed, from the fact that 1000 lamps were found here. Imagine these magnificent apartments, with their bronzes, their marble statues, their relievos, all radiant with the light of a thousand lamps, and thronged with a gay and graceful people, in easy, flowing costume, breathing the balmiest air that was ever breathed without the gates of paradise, and you have a picture of one scene in Pompeian life.

The fact that most of the inhabitants of this unfortunate city were allowed to make their escape from impending ruin, induces us to sympathize all the more tenderly with those ill-fated victims who perished. I have already alluded to the skeleton of Diomede, found in his splendid villa without the gate; a still more touching memorial, found in the the same villa, is believed to be the remains of the mistress of the house and an infant child. The wet ashes had enveloped the mother with the child locked in her arms. There was found every feature and limb of both, exquisitely rounded. Even the linen which had enveloped her young and beautiful form was found adhering to the mould.—But nothing of that fair form remained, except the skeleton mother clasping her skeleton child—a gold chain about her neck, and gold rings on her bony fingers.

In the prison were found two skeletons with their bones still held by the shackles either of justice or tyranny. In a niche near the forum were found the remains of a soldier—his skeleton hand still grasping a lance.

I could not content myself with a single visit, but returned to spend a second day amongst these unique and deeply interesting ruins. The excavations were then going forward, and I had the pleasure of seeing the walls of a house laid bare, which had been hid from the light of day for 1800 years. The frescoes on these walls were as bright as if the pencil had traced them but yesterday.—The excavations are conducted by the government, and the premises are guarded night and day against depredations. Visitors are always attended by guides authorized by the government.

To explore Herculaneum* is a more difficult enterprise. It was buried beneath solid lava, or if beneath loose ashes and mud, these materials have consolidated into a gray rock, which makes excavation a slow and costly work. Nevertheless, a magnificent theatre, two temples, a portico, and several private houses, were excavated, but all except the theatre have been filled up, and the work is not now in progress. We descended into the theatre and wandered through its dark, spacious caverns, formed by excavation, for it was as completely filled with solid rock as a mould with molten lead. Many interesting and beautiful works of art were found here. The depth of our descent was between 70 and 80 feet below the surface of the rock. The modern town of Portici is built over the buried city, and whilst exploring the theatre, we could hear carriages rumbling along the street over our heads. [Calendar.

REV. ANDREW FULLER.

There is at this day no need of any commendation of Andrew Fuller, any more than of Scott, or Newton, or John Foster, or Robert Hall. Both in English theology and literature, the Baptists have great and venerable names. In theology Fuller stands pre-eminent. He was a man who united great depth of piety with largeness of view. He was a man eminent for a wise judgment; he was one of the most sensible of English theologians. There is a great unction in his writing, great richness of piety, as there was in his life and conversation.

We remember a description given to us of his conversation, by Rev. Christopher Anderson, of Edinburgh, who has recently published a large and valuable work, entitled The History of the English Bible. He was, we believe, an intimate friend of Andrew Fuller. 'Ah,' said Fuller to him one day, in the midst of his labors, 'dear brother, we must leave our work half done. There never was but one Being in this world, and never will be, who could say, "it is finished!"'

'I will tell you,' said Fuller on another occasion, 'how to get along in the world as a Christian. We must all have much to do with the world and in the world, and we cannot help it; but I will tell you how to get along; I will give you a good rule. Do what you have to do in the world like a man standing in the rain. A man will not stay long in the rain, if he can help it, and if you feel in the midst of worldly business and society, as if it were raining, you will get out of it as quick as possible.'

The works of Fuller are of the same precious spirit of deep, practical piety. They are food for the soul, not mere speculation. They are mellow fruits of the tree of life, which grew in the very centre of his mind and heart. Pluck them anywhere, and you will be refreshed by them.

Fuller was one of those English theologians, whose views of divine truth were formed not a little under the influence of the great theologian of New England, President Edwards. Mr. Sutcliff tells us, in a sermon preached at his funeral, that it was impossible to say when it was that he first became acquainted with the writings of President Edwards and other New England divines; but having read them, he drank deeply into them; particularly into the harmony between the law and the gospel, between the obligations of men to love God with all their hearts, and their actual enmity against him; and between the duty of ministers to call on sinners to repent and believe in Christ for salvation and the necessity of omnipotent grace to render the call effectual. The attainment of a knowledge of this harmony, and the practical power over men's hearts and consciences, which result from it, was a great and precious thing in Fuller's ministry.

In his dying hours, the record of which is so deeply interesting and instructive, he often intimated that his views of divine things were far more vivid and impressive than they had ever been before. He had a greater sense of the depravity of the human heart, and of the exceeding sinfulness of sin, as consisting in disaffection to the character and government of God, than at any former period of his life. He had, he said, an inexpressibly greater sense of the importance of ministers having correct views of the import of the gospel message, and of their stating and urging the same on their hearers, than he had ever done before. He was ready to think, if he could communicate his present views and feelings, they must produce a greater effect than his preaching had ordinarily done. 'If I were able to preach again,' said he, 'I should say things I never said before; but God has no need of me; he can raise up men to say them better than I could say them.' He would sometimes say, 'Ministers will never do much good, till they begin to pull sinners out of the fire.'

The last words he was heard to utter were these memorable ones; 'That God is the strength of his people, is a truth that I now see as I never saw it in my life.' So he passed into glory.

MATERNAL INFLUENCE.

Timothy Dwight and Aaron Burr were first cousins—their mothers being daughters of the elder Jonathan Edwards. The mother of Dwight lived to educate and train her son and to enjoy the rich fruits of her watchful care; the mother of the latter, together with his father, an excellent and exemplary man, died while he was young. Thus early bereft of paternal guidance, Burr with high intellectual capacities entered upon a course which has made his name a terror, both in the social and political world. Few men, perhaps, ever attained to his enormity of crime; fewer still have experienced, more fully, the miseries which are the inevitable result of a career of sensuality and lust.

"Reft of his sire, too young his loss to know—
Lord of himself, that heritage of wo."

His evil propensities early acquired the mastery over his moral powers, and he fell, even in the meridian of his days, a wreck, a moral ruin, over which we shed a nation's tears, and over whose memory, withered though it be by pestilence of mighty vices, Christianity will long mourn,

"As o'er the grave of one whom God endowed
With powers noble, and for noble ends;
But who, in sin, conceived a mighty crime,
And fell—no more to rise."

As a contrast to the fate of Burr we may present that of Dwight. In the language of a terse and beautiful writer,—"He became eminently successful in extending the beauties of learning and religion, which he loved, and left him a noble monument of piety and genius in his written works. Who can say but that if Mrs. Burr had lived to watch and pray with her son, the highly gifted youths might have pursued the same narrow path, and they might have been equally useful in the earth, and equally happy in the heavens!

Mothers! though your children may not possess mental endowments of so high an order, with which to bless or curse mankind, to honor or offend God, elevate or degrade themselves, yet they do possess souls as precious, for whose salvation the same blood has been shed, and while your lives have been spared, they are much dependent on you for their guidance aright, and you are as deeply responsible to God as were those mothers, for the manner in which you discharge the sacred trust. O, are you individually prepared with reference to your children, to obey the summons, "Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward?"

DR. BAIRD'S LECTURE ON EUROPE.

DAYS WITHOUT NIGHTS, AND NIGHTS WITHOUT DAYS.

There is nothing that strikes the stranger more forcibly, if he visits Sweeden at this season of the year when the days are longest, than the absence of night. Dr. B. had no conception of it before his arrival. He arrived at Stockholm from Gottemburg, 400 miles distant, in the morning, and in the afternoon went to see some friends—had not taken notice of time, and returned about midnight—it was as light as it is here half an hour after sundown. You could see distinctly. But all was quiet in the streets—it seemed as if the inhabitants had gone away or were dead. No signs of life, stores closed. The sun in June goes down at Stockholm a little before 10 o'clock. There is a great illumination all night, as the sun passes round the earth towards the north pole, and the refraction of its rays is such, that you can see to read at midnight. Dr. B. read a letter in the forest at midnight, without artificial light. There is a mountain at the head of the Gulf of Bothnia, where on the 21st of June the sun does not go down at all. Travelers go up there to see it. A steamboat goes up from Stockholm for the purpose of carrying those who are curious to witness the phenomena. It only occurs one night. The sun goes down to the horizon, you can see the whole face of it, and in five minutes it begins to rise. At the north Cape, lat. 72 deg., it does not go down for several weeks. Now (June 23d) it would be at midnight about 25 deg. above the horizon. The way the people there know it is midnight, they see the sun begin to rise. The changes in those high latitudes, from summer to winter, are so great that we can have no conception of them at all. In the winter time the sun disappears and is not seen for six weeks. Then it comes up and shows its face. Afterwards it remains for 10, 15 or 20 minutes, then descends. And finally it does not set at all, but almost makes a circle round the heavens. He had been asked how they managed in regard to hired persons, and what they consider a day? He could not say, but supposed they worked by the hour, and 12 hours would be considered a day's work. Birds and animals take their accustomed rest at their usual hours. The Doctor did not know how they learned the time, but they do, and go to rest whether the sun goes down or not. The hens take to the trees about 7 P. M. and stay there until the sun is well up in the morning—and the people get into this habit of late rising too. The first morning Dr. B. awoke in Stockholm, he was surprised to see the sun shining into his room. He looked at his watch, and found it only 3 o'clock. The next time he awoke it was five o'clock, but nobody in the streets. The people are not in the habit of rising so soon. The Swedes in the city are not very industrious, owing probably to the climate. The sun is up so long that it becomes very hot, though not so hot as our summer weather. The shopkeepers in Stockholm in the middle of the day, used to shut up their shops, and take their siesta; but the government allowed the Jews to come in, and they obliged the Swedes to change; the Jews kept their shops open in the middle of the day, and the Swedes had to follow their example. But they are not very thankful to the Jews for it.

The Diet of Norway does not allow a Jew to step his foot in that country. The law was made in the 19th century, and it is a disgrace to the age and its protestantism; they exclude both Jews and Jesuits. A few years ago the government advertised for money; a Jew went to Copenhagen to negotiate the loan. He made a bargain, and afterwards wanted to go ashore, but this privilege was refused him. They were glad of his money, but would not allow him to step his foot on the soil.

The country of the Swedes and the Norwegians may be called the New England of Europe. It is a land of rocks, and contains an innumerable number of lakes and islands—no part of it is perfectly level, and where the surface is comparatively level, it is undulating. There are many iron mines and some of gold and silver. The iron mine of Danemora, which is in a plain country and 500 feet deep, is particularly celebrated, as also the iron and copper mines of Falmouth. The mining districts are poor and populous, but you find there the best people in Sweden.

THE DYING GERMAN GIRL AND THE CHILD'S TRACT.

A woman to whom I gave the Tract "'Tis all for the best," after looking at the title asked me if it was for the best that her child had died. I endeavored to present the truth to her, and to comfort her, as two more of her children were seriously sick. As I left I gave her a few children's Tracts. A week after, as I was passing I heard some one calling me. I went to the house, and the woman met me in tears, telling me that another child had died. During her sickness she often spoke of me, and would not suffer the Tract to be taken from the bed. A short time before she died her countenance was lighted up with joy. She took the Tract, Life and Death of John Hands, (German,) and turned over the leaves until she came to the plate in connection with the passage "Suffer little children to come unto me," when she pressed it to her bosom, and requested her mother to read the passage. After she had read it, the child said, "The dear Saviour also calls me, and I shall soon be with my little brother. Oh mother, pray, pray." She then stretched out her little arms towards the Tract, kissed it, and exclaimed, "O dear Saviour come, come and take me to thyself," and so expired. A powerful impression was made on the mother's mind.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOME.

Mourning Christian, dry every tear, thou art almost home. Every setting sun thou beholdest wafts thee nearer to thy heavenly home. Does he send pain and suffering upon thy poor, frail, clay tenement? thou shalt soon put on the robe of immortal bloom, and these afflictions, which are but for a moment, shall work out for thee a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Art thou bereaved? thou shalt soon meet the dear ones God has called a little before thee, to dwell with them, to dwell with the Jesus whom you dearly love, and to join in their song of redeeming praise to God and the Lamb. There no farewell adieus are ever heard; there no sorrowing tear is shed; there no pain, no suffering, and, above all, no sin shall ever come, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. Cheer up then, Christian; thy toil will soon cease, thy troubles will be over, and thou shalt receive that crown of glory prepared for thee from the foundation of the world. [N. Y. Evangelist.

ROWING AND SWIMMING FOR TRACTS.—The Rev. Mr. Goddard, Baptist missionary in Siam, states that passing through a canal, the Siamese manifested an unusual desire for Tracts. Two men in a small boat rowed hard to overtake them, but dropping their oars to take the Tracts, their boat was carried back several rods by the tide. They rowed hard and again came up and took each a Tract; but just as they turned away, he says, "their boat upset, and forthwith all I could see of them was one hand of each holding up his Tract out of water. Soon, however, their heads appeared, and with great care they made their way to the shore, towing their boat after them, without scarcely wetting their Tracts. Passing on a little farther, a grey-headed old man on shore called out for a Tract, and plunged into the water to swim after us; but as he could not overtake us we rowed up to the shore and waited for him. There is reason to hope that Tracts will not be altogether useless to those who are willing to take so much pains to get them."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 16, 1845.

SABBATH PETITIONS AND SABBATH LAWS.

We have received repeated inquiries respecting the Petition which was forwarded to the Legislature of the State of New York in 1839, and also respecting the provisions of the Law which was passed in answer to that Petition. This has induced us to look them up, and present them in a connected form for the information of those who may be interested in the subject.

The Petition.

To the Honorable the Legislature of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly:

We, your petitioners, members of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in the town of ————, would respectfully represent, that there are more than three thousand individuals in this State, who are members of churches of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, who regularly observe the seventh day as the Sabbath. We further represent, that we are liable to be called as jurors and witnesses, and to answer in civil suits, on the day we observe as the Sabbath. We do not wish to have any privileges granted to us which are not granted to others. We simply ask, that our religious views may be regarded by the laws of this State, and that we may be protected in the observance of the seventh day, the same as others are in the observance of the first day. We therefore entreat your honorable body to pass a law which shall exempt all persons who religiously observe the seventh day as the Sabbath, from serving in the militia, and from being liable to as jorors or witnesses, and from being liable to answer in civil suits, on the Sabbath. And, as in duty bound, we will ever pray.

The Law.

An Act in relation to the Seventh-day Baptists.

Passed May 7, 1839.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:—

§ 1. No writ, process, warrant, order, judgement, decree, or other proceeding of any court or office of Justice of the Peace, which shall be served or executed upon the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, by or upon any person whose religious faith and practice is to keep the seventh day as a day set apart by divine commandment, as the Sabbath of rest from labor, and dedicated to the worship of God, shall be valid, except in cases of breaches of the peace, or apprehension of persons charged with crimes and misdemeanors. The service of any such proceeding, in all other cases, shall be utterly void.

§ 2. No person shall be subject to do or perform military duty on the seventh day of the week, whose religious faith and practice is the same as stated in the first section of this Act, except in cases of invasion, insurrection, or in time of war.

§ 3. This Act shall take effect immediately.

Such was our petition, and such the law passed in answer to it. No person who reads the petition candidly, will deny that its requests are just and righteous; and no person who reads the law in connection with the petition, can doubt that the Legislature designed in good faith to grant our request. But according to the late decision in the case of Maxson vs. Annas, it appears that the Legislature failed of its object. The petition asks that Sabbath-keepers may be exempted from liability "to answer in civil suits on the Sabbath;" but it has been decided, that the law only excuses them from having processes served upon them, and not from answering to those processes. Again, the petition asks that Sabbath-keepers "may be protected in the observance of the seventh day, the same as others are in the observance of the first day;" but it has been decided, that the rule which makes the first day no judicial day to those who observe it, does not apply so as to make the seventh day no judicial day to those who observe it. Hence the Legislature, according to this decision, totally failed of its object, which was to grant the prayer of the petitioners. Perhaps the decision was right, considering that it was made in accordance with the letter rather than the spirit of the law. But there is a court which has power to decide according to equity, even at the expense of technicality. If an appeal be made to that Court, we do not see how it can fail to decide in our favor.

Another Petition.

While we are upon this subject, we may as well publish a Petition which has been prepared for circulation in the State of Pennsylvania—called forth, as the reader will see, by the recent unjustifiable molestation of our German Seventh-day Baptist brethren in that State. The Petition reads as follows:—

To the Honorable the Legislature of Pennsylvania:

We, your petitioners, members of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in the town of ————, ———— County, would respectfully represent, that there are numerous individuals scattered throughout more than a dozen counties in this State, who are members of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, making it a matter of conscience towards God to observe the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, as the Sabbath. In submitting this memorial, we do not ask that any privileges shall be granted to us which are not granted to others. We simply ask, that our religious views may be regarded by the laws of the State, and that we may be protected in the observance of the seventh day, to the same extent that others are in the observance of the first day. We are moved to make this request in consideration of the fact, that some of our number have recently been molested in the enjoyment of their privileges, by being prosecuted at law for a breach of the first day of the week, and decision given against them. We have heretofore supposed ourselves sufficiently protected by that broad principle of the Constitution, which guarantees to every sect the rights of conscience. But recent developments having shown that this is not a sufficient security, we therefore entreat your honorable body to pass a law which shall exempt all persons who religiously observe the seventh day as the Sabbath, from serving in the militia, and from being called on as jurors, or witnesses, and from being liable to answer in civil suits, on the Sabbath. And, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

MUSICAL CONVENTION.

A great Musical Convention was held in this city last week, which continued in session for three days. The meeting was one of considerable interest to musical professors and amateurs. Among the subjects discussed was that of using instrumental music in the sanctuary. The Convention recommended the use of the organ, and, with becoming discretion and reverence, some other instruments. Several interesting addresses were delivered. One was by Rev. Dr. Hooker, on the Musical Profession. He urged, that the main dependence of music for advancement in this country is upon the men who devote themselves to it as students, practitioners, and instructors. He mentioned some of the encouraging indications of the present period, among which were the improvements in vocal training, the growing attention to the subject on the part of the public, and the increase of musical assemblies for the cultivation of taste. Another address was by Rev. Mr. Seeley, on the influence of sacred music upon the piety and prosperity of the Church. He claimed that praise was as distinctly enjoined in Revelation as prayer, and that its neglect was as hurtful as the neglect of prayer. It is important likewise to the temporal prosperity of the Church, since it makes the house of God attractive, and brings into it many who would not otherwise come under the influence of religious instruction. He urged with much earnestness the importance of the whole congregation qualifying themselves to join in the high praises of God, and concluded with saying, "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord."

CURIOSITIES OF NEWPORT, R. I.

The antiquity of this place endears it to many hearts, it having been either their birth-place, or the birth-place of their ancestors. After landing from the steamboat on the long wharf at break of day, and walking up the main street, the first thing that attracted my attention was the dwellings built in the ancient style of architecture, with their hipped roofs, which had, doubtless, passed through many improvements and alterations since their erection, but still retained their original shape.

The next thing that strikes the eye of the visitor is the numerous wind-mills that stand upon the height of land east and north of the city, with their long arms flying in the air with swiftness according to the strength of the wind by which they are propelled. These may be seen to the number of six or eight. They have been erected to supply the absence of water power, and the people being much attached to the customs of their fathers, still keep them in operation, notwithstanding the superior advantages of steam power.

From these, the eye turns to the large and extensive boarding-houses, erected to accommodate visitors who resort here in the warm season in great numbers from the Southern cities. Back of the city only a short distance is a beautiful beach, where they have every convenience for bathing. Several hundred can be accommodated at the same time. One of the largest boarding-houses was consumed by fire in August last, but it will soon be rebuilt in superior style.

One of the greatest wonders of the place is what is termed the Old Mill. It has been standing as it now is from time immemorial. It is built of small stones, and a cement that appears to have been made of shell lime and sand. It is round, about fifteen feet in diameter, and probably about twenty feet in height. It stands upon pillars made of the same material, four feet high. The wall is from one to two feet in thickness, the inside as the outside, so that no one can determine for what purpose it was made. The gentleman who owns it, keeps it for its antiquity. It occupies one of the most elevated spots in the city. Some imagine that it has been a windmill; some an Indian observatory; and others a fort; but all is conjecture.

Another object of interest is the Jewish synagogue and burying-ground in Truro street. At an early day this Society was established by some Jews from Germany. Afterwards it came into the possession of the Portuguese, who continued to occupy the house until about forty years ago, when the few that were living moved to Boston. Since that time it has not been occupied. Mr. Truro, a wealthy Jew, bequeathed the sum of thirty thousand dollars, to be kept in trust by the City Council, to keep the street, house, and burying-ground in repair; and each has been enclosed with an elegant iron fence, with large granite pillars, which makes this spot an ornament to the city. By the kindness of the man who keeps the key, I was permitted with some friends to visit the interior of the house. It is truly beautiful, and considering the age in which it was built, its style of architecture is probably not surpassed; and as it is not occupied, cleanliness can be observed with but little trouble. The golden candlesticks, the charity-boxes, and indeed every thing, has the appearance of having been there but a short time, although they have occupied the place they now do more than a century.

The Redwood Library is a valuable institution, being a large collection of interesting books, both ancient and modern. The site is delightful, and the building appropriate. On entering, the first objects that strike one, are the portraits of Christopher Columbus, Rev. John Callender, Governor William Coddington, Abraham Redwood, Governor Wanton, the Chief of the Otto Indians, and his wife. They are well executed, and occupy a conspicuous place in the room. The ground upon which this building stands was given by Mr. Collins, a Seventh-day Baptist.

The patrons of the various institutions that once flourished here, where are they? They are sleeping in the large burying-ground at the north end of the town. There lie thousands, rich and poor, old and young, whose bodies are waiting the resurrection morn. Some have been forgotten; others are remembered with deep affection by both church and state. You read the inscriptions on the tomb-stone, and there is Captain, Esquire, Judge, Governor, Doctor, Elder, Rev., Rector, Deacon, Commodore, Colonel, Major, Lieutenant, &c. All occupy their quiet spot. The tomb of Commodore Perry is an ornament to the place. It was erected by the State of Rhode Island, at an expense of five thousand dollars. They are making great improvements in this ground by its enlargement, and the erection of vaults for the accommodation of families.

South of the town stands Fort Adams, upon a point of land projecting into the bay. This fort has been recently erected by the government of the United States at a great expense. It is probably the largest fortification in the United States. I visited and passed through it, and could but regret the waste of money, time, and morals, connected with its erection and preservation. A garrison is kept here, and since the expectation of a war with Mexico, cannon have been mounted upon its walls, whose very appearance is frightful to the traveler. There are other objects of note that time would not permit me to visit.

A VISITOR.

PAINTING OF OUR LORD'S BAPTISM.—A late number of the London Baptist Magazine contains a notice offering one thousand pounds sterling for the best oil painting representing the immersion of Christ. The competition is open to artists of all nations, and two years are allowed to prepare and forward paintings for the prize, all of which are to be publicly exhibited in London for a space of not more than two months. The size of the work is to be not less than twelve feet by ten, nor more than fifteen feet by twelve. Such a prize will undoubtedly attract the attention of a large number of artists, and their paintings can hardly fail of being exceedingly instructive and influential.

FAIR OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE.

The Great Fair of the American Institute has been open for more than a week past at Niblo's Garden. The articles exhibited have seldom if ever been equaled for richness and variety. One enters the Grand Saloon, walks about through the spacious aisles, and wonders where they could find so many cases of the richest wares and fabrics, any one of which would make a show of itself. From the Saloon he may pass to the department appropriated to Machinery, and his surprise will not be diminished. Then comes the collection of Agricultural Implements, such as Plows, Fanning Mills Straw Cutters, &c. From this he may pass to the temporary saloon fitted up for the exhibition of Agricultural Products, where rare Plants, and Fruits, and Flowers abound. Near by is an extensive collection of Stoves, Ranges, Boats, and superb Carriages. The north wing of the Saloon, second floor, is appropriated to Manufactures, and presents a great variety of cloths, silks, etc. etc. But it is impossible to give a complete description. Only those who see can have a clear idea of the extent and variety of the collection. Such will be richly repaid for their trouble.

DEATH OF DR. CHAPIN.

The Rev. Stephen Chapin, D. D., closed his earthly career on the 1st of October. In early life he was a Congregational minister in New Hampshire; but in 1818 he embraced the sentiments of the Baptists, and was baptized at Boston by Dr. Baldwin. Since then he has served as pastor of a Baptist Church in Maine, as Professor in the College at Waterville, and as President of Columbian College in the District of Columbia. A few weeks before his death he dictated a letter to a friend, from which the following is a touching extract:—

"As for myself, I have continued to decline since I wrote you last. I am too weak to give particulars, and shall not probably live but a short time. For the most of the time I have enjoyed my mind well, and I have had seasons of far brighter, more enlarged views of God in Christ, and have had seasons of far sweeter comfort in religion, and of fuller evidence that Christ died for me personally, and that he now intercedes in my behalf, than I have ever enjoyed before. Yes, dear brother, I do believe that I am not only pardoned, but that, by faith in the imputed righteousness of Christ, I stand completely justified before God, that he has received me as an innocent person, and that I am entitled to all the benefits of justification—peace with God, and joy and communion in the Holy Ghost. I have frequently examined myself with great minuteness and care, and can come to no other conclusion than that my hope is sure. Last night I went over the ground again, I think with greater care and formality than ever, and could not but feel as sure that I shall go to heaven when I die, as I am that God exists. I bless his holy name, and trust that it will be my everlasting employment to glorify and enjoy him. O what a delightful service! I shall then have far richer means of enjoying him, and a far wider field to promote his glory in than here, and I shall serve him without sin, without intermission, and with ever growing powers thus to do."

REVIVALS.—"The Baptist" publishes a letter from Philadelphia, Tenn., giving an account of a great revival in that neighborhood, during which about one hundred persons professed faith in Christ. Among the converts were several doctors, one ex-representative in Congress with his wife, several Covenanters, old and new school Presbyterians, mission and anti-mission Baptists, Methodists, and one Swedenborgian.

The same paper gives an account of another revival in Tennessee, at which fourteen persons were baptized, including four Pedo-baptists, who had become dissatisfied with infant sprinkling, and were baptized by immersion.

Another letter says that a number of protracted meetings have lately been held in West Tennessee, at which many persons have been converted—in all more than one hundred.

JEWISH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—We have received the 22d Annual Report of the Board of Directors of the American Society for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews. In addition to the Annual Report, the pamphlet contains the proceedings of the Society at its last anniversary, and the proceedings of several other Societies in Great Britain and on the Continent of Europe. The American Society has now in its employ a number of missionaries and agents, maintains a mission-house and chapel in New York, and publishes a monthly periodical devoted to the communication of intelligence respecting the Jews. Its office is No. 23 Nassau st., New York.

SOUTHERN MISSIONARY.—The Foreign Missionary Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, have appointed Samuel C. Clopton a missionary to China. Mr. C. is a graduate of Columbian College, and was a member of Newton Theological Seminary until the action of the Boston Board induced him to leave there.

A CHALLENGE.—A correspondent of the Boston Investigator, after referring to the effort now making to promote the better observance of the Christian Sabbath, says:—"I again call on and invite, or challenge, if they like it better, Dr. Woods, or any other advocate for observing the first day—Sunday—as a or the Sabbath, to the proof that it is of Divine authority."

"THE BOSTON FREE DISCUSSION SOCIETY" held a meeting on Sunday last, at which the question for discussion was, "Ought the Sunday Law to be enforced, requiring all places of business to be shut on that day." Persons of every religious persuasion were invited to attend.

Rev. ELON GALUSHA has been excluded from the fellowship of the Baptist Church in Perry, N. Y., for heresy. We believe the principal charge against him relates to his adoption of the Millerite creed, and his connection with that sect.

THE TRUE AMERICAN.—Cassius M. Clay has revived his "True American," and sent forth a number from Lexington, Ky., dated October 7. It contains a full statement of the circumstances connected with the destruction of his press, together with a stirring appeal to the public against the calumnies of his persecutors.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.—This honored statesman and venerable old man is suffering from ill health. He was expected to address the N. Y. Bible Society about this time, but has declined on account of infirmities which disable him from attendance at any public meetings, and from which he sees no prospect of relief for the ensuing month of November. His letter communicating this intelligence, contains the following passage, which shows with what feelings he now regards the efforts to circulate the Bible:—

"My testimony of reverence for the Holy Scpiptures has been already, on more than one occasion, publicly made, and will be repeated on every occasion upon which it can with propriety be manifested. Of all the societies devoted to piety and charity which I have known, there is none higher in my estimation or more adapted to eminent usefulness than the Bible Society; and I fervently pray that the Divine blessing may rest upon it and go forth with it to the ends of the earth."

RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT IN GERMANY.—A correspondent of the German Schnellpost, in concluding a review of the present political and social condition of the different European Countries, remarks as follows:—

"The various Governments of Germany, terrified by the events in Leipzig, Tosen, Halberstadt, and at different other places, are busy in stopping the religious movement. Ronge, Czerski and others are forbidden to preach. Whether this will avail I doubt very much. The stone that has once been started rolls down the hill, and he who attempts to stop it will be run over."

REVIVAL AMONG THE NESTORIANS.—The Missionary Herald gives a brief account of a cheering work of grace in Geog Tapa, one of the Nestorian Villages. The Missionary says:—

"Two of our helpers, priests Abraham and John, natives of that village, have repeatedly cheered us with intelligence of unusual interest on the subject of religion there, during most of the time since the commencement of our troubles the past year. Of late that interest has become quite extensive under the labors of those pious native helpers; so much so that they have scores of persons in their house uncalled, almost every evening after the toils of the day to hear the preaching of the gospel. And after the regular exercises of the evening, many individuals linger till a late hour to make inquiries and receive instruction. The members of our mission frequently visit that village and preach, both in the church on the Sunday and at the evening meetings."

ARREST OF JOHANNES RONGE.

The following account of the arrest of this leader of the religious movement in Germany, was translated from the Schnellpost, a German paper published in this city:—

"On the 8th of September, about 7 o'clock in the morning, Ronge was about leaving Breslau (the capital of Silesia) for Brieg, where he was to hold a service for the first time—which occasion was looked up to with great anxiety by a great many people—when he was suddenly and unexpectedly arrested, and brought before the President of the Police. From the particulars of the event as given in some German papers, it appears that Ronge was stopped according to an order from the highest authorities. The officer of the police first stated to Ronge that he was at liberty to hold service only in his community, but that he had to obtain special permission for so doing elsewhere. Then the question was asked him, whether he had chosen of his own accord a public place for service in Halberstadt while a church had been offered him for the purpose?—and whether he had concluded his sermon with the words, 'Rome must fall?' Ronge replied, with regard to the former question, that he chose the public place with the consent of the authorities, as the church was found too small for the number of attendants; and in reference to the latter question, he returned that he had used the words, which, however, could be understood properly only in connection with his sermon; that he had previously spoken of the superstition prevailing in Rome, and which was based upon ignorance; that superstition could no more exist; that in this sense of the expression, Rome, the protectress of superstition, could not avoid falling."

SLAVERY IN TEXAS.

So much has been said about enlarging the area of freedom by the annexation of Texas, that our readers may be curious to know something about the laws on the subject of slavery. For the benefit of such, we publish below the first section of the eighth article of the Constitution of Texas. From this it appears, that instead of loosing the bands of the slave in that country, the Legislature is to be deprived of all power to relieve the oppressed, or do away with the 'peculiar institution.' Here is the article:—

"The Legislature shall have no power to pass laws for the emancipation of slaves, without the consent of their owners, nor without paying their owners, previous to emancipation, a full equivalent in money for the slaves so emancipated. They shall have no power to prevent emigrants to this State from bringing with them such persons as are deemed slaves by the laws of any of the United States, so long as any of the same age or description shall be continued in slavery by the laws of this State: provided, that such slaves be the bona fide property of such emigrants: provided, also, that laws shall be passed to inhibit the introduction into this State, slaves who have committed high crimes in other States or Territories. They shall have the right to pass laws to permit the owners of slaves to emancipate them, saving the rights of creditors, and preventing them from becoming a public charge. They shall have full power to pass laws which will oblige the owners of slaves to treat them with humanity; to provide for them necessary food and clothing; to abstain from all injuries to them extending to life and limb; and, in case of their neglect or refusal to comply with the directions of such laws, to have such slave or slaves taken from such owner, and sold for the benefit of such owner or owners. They may pass laws to prevent slaves from being brought into this State as merchandize only."

ROMANISM.

The Romanists of Mobile are building a Cathedral 162 ft. by 90. 'They have been greatly assisted by the munificent donations of their Protestant brethren, many of whom have become annual donors.'

At South Bend, on St. Joseph's river, Ia., 'the University of our Lady of the Lake' has been chartered by the Legislature, also a Manual Labor School, both papal institutions. In August 1843, the site of the University was a wilderness. Now they have 96 acres of wheat, and 50 in addition cleared—a spacious college building, 4 stories high, most of it finished in the best style—a noviciate, and 8 workshops for mechanical trades.

In Iowa, the Brothers of Saint Joseph have opened an academy for boys at Dubuque; and the Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin, another for young ladies at Davenport, on the Mississippi.

In Wisconsin, the Romanist population is estimated at 25,000; of these 2000 are Indians, and 5000 are French natives. They have erected 2 stone churches, 19 frame and 4 log ones, and are erecting 7 others—in all 32. One of these, now in process at Southport, on Lake Mich., is of brick, of the gothic order, and is designed to be the handsomest building in the Territory.

Meanwhile, what are Protestants doing to found and sustain institutions, in the boundless and rapidly populating West, at all adequate to the emergency of the time or the wants of the people? It is a mortifying fact, that the children of Babylon should be wiser than the children of light. We are putting an oppressive task on future generations, by suffering the best season for sowing the good seed to pass unimproved, or but partially improved.

LECTURES ON THE HEBREW COMMONWEALTH.—The Board of Directors of the Mercantile Library Association have made arrangements with Prof. E. C. Wines to deliver before the Association his Course of Nine Lectures on the above subject, in the Lecture-Room at Clinton Hall. These lectures have been given to large and delighted audiences in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and various other Southern cities. Intelligent judges have expressed the opinion they abound in original and striking views, and present the most elaborate, interesting and instructive analysis of the policy and instructions of the great Jewish Lawgiver, ever given to the American public.

CHOCTAWS.—There are now, (says the Missionary Herald,) four female boarding schools among the Choctaws, sustained mainly from public funds of that nation; but under the immediate care and instruction of the missionaries. In these and other schools connected with the mission, there are about two hundred and fifty pupils, of whom about one hundred are boarded in the mission families. There are also many schools taught on Saturday and Sunday, principally by Indian teachers, embracing 6 or 700 adults and children.

FOREIGN NEWS—THE GREAT BRITAIN.

Wednesday Morning, Oct. 15.

Not a little excitement was created in New York yesterday by the news that the steamer Great Britain, which has been expected for several days, was seen on Sunday inside the Nantucket Shoals, with a signal of distress flying, firing signal guns, and her foremast gone. But the news from Boston, received this morning, quieted all fears. It seems that she left Liverpool on the 27th ult., experienced heavy gales of wind for the last ten days, run short of coal, got out of her course, and finally put in at Holmes' Hole, Mass. She obtained coal there, and is now hourly expected in New York. She has on board 105 passengers. Her news was brought by express to Boston and thence to New York.

The absorbing topic relates to the great failure of the crops in England and Continental Europe. The wet weather, after an interval of nearly three weeks, had returned, before the crops were all secured. Besides, the yield is not good. Consequently prices are rising, and suffering is feared. The failure of the potatoe crop, likewise, is almost general. In such circumstances, all eyes are turned across the Atlantic, and whatever this country affords will find a ready market either in England or on the Continent.

The iron trade is brisk, owing to the multiplication of railways, the rage for speculation in which continues unabated.

A bottle has been picked up and brought to Liverpool, supposed to have been thrown from the missing packet ship England. It contains a paper dated Dec. 11, 1844, and stating that the ship had lost her quarter boats, and had ten feet of water in her hold. The writing is believed to be genuine.

Agricultural Fairs, almost without exception, if we may believe the testimony of the local presses, have this year been uncommonly successful. We regard this as one of the most cheering signs of the times, indicating as it does that the people of this country are beginning to appreciate the relative importance of Agricultural pursuits. The badge of the Farmer will ere long become the sign of intellectual superiority, as it is now to some good extent of integrity and moral worth. There is no employment which furnishes more constant and healthful stimulus to the intellectual powers, or which is beset with fewer temptations. Why then should a Farmer be a mere drudge, moving among the most beautiful creations of nature, with scarcely more consciousness of the ennobling tendency of his occupation than the brute he drives? This sort of Farmers is annually becoming scarcer, and we trust the whole race will ere long disappear. [Tribune.

A New Idea—How to become owner of a House.—A society has been incorporated in Montreal, called the Montreal Building Society, by becoming a member of which a person is enabled to build a house by means of a loan granted him for that purpose, repayable by instalments for what the rent of such a house would cost him in ten years. The working of the plan is as follows:—"Having a piece of land, an individual becomes a subscriber to the Society for one or more shares at $500 each, paying a monthly subscription of two dollars and a half for each share, for a period of nine or ten years, at the end of which time he finds himself owner of his house, having paid off the principal." This sort of Savings Bank has, it is said, been found to work well in England.

A New Morticing Machine.—We called a few days since to look at a machine for boring and morticing wheel hubs. It was not in operation when we were in, but we saw plenty of the work done by it, which was finished in a style of greater accuracy than is usually accomplished by hand. A wheel hub with this implement can be bored and morticed ready to receive the spokes in two minutes and a half, and it will turn them off on an average of five minutes of the day. The cost of the machine is about $100. It is worked by horse power. It is the invention of Mr. B. Cummings, a workman in the shop of Messrs. Scoville and Gates of this city, (Chicago,) and will, without question, prove to be an instrument of the highest value in this branch of business.

Drawing out a Needle by a Magnet.—A colored woman at Frankfort, Ky., run a needle into the fleshy part of her palm, some three months ago. Last week, Mr. John Goodman, to whom the woman belonged, knowing the needle would not remain stationary, that it would produce suppuration, and gradually move from its imbedment, it struck him that it might be attracted to the surface of the skin, and he procured a magnet and applied it to the hand. Soon a sensation of pain was produced, and three days after, the needle made its appearance just under the skin, when it was easily extracted.

The Corn Crop.—To give the distant reader some idea of the abundance of the corn crop in this vicinity, we may state that we were told, a few days ago, by a gentleman fully competent to form a correct opinion upon the subject, that the quantity of standing corn which may be seen from Mound Farm, in Jersey County, under twenty miles from this place, cannot amount to less than five hundred thousand bushels. Nor is this all, or the best. From Mr. B. A. Davidson's residence on the bluff, on the road from Alton to Edwardsville, and about seven miles from this city, there may be seen, without moving from the same spot, by looking only in two directions, fields of standing corn, the probable yield of which is estimated at one million five hundred thousand bushels.

[Alton Telegraph.

Chills and Fever and Fever and Ague.—We are told by some of the oldest inhabitants, that the number of those attacked the present year with these disorders exceeds the number attacked in any one year since the first settlement of the country. It seems to be almost universal, affecting as well those upon the high as those upon the low or bottom lands. In some neighborhoods, we are informed, almost every family has at least one case, and in some of the families not a well one is left to attend the sick. The diseases, though very annoying, are not very fatal, unless they assume some other form. [Xenia (O.) Torchlight.

French Slave Trade in Algeria. "A caravan of black slaves, all females save one, and to the number of sixty-eight, have been just brought here by the Beni Mzabs. They encamped at two musket-shots' distance from the town and opened their market. There were plenty of purchasers, nor did the young damsels who were to be sold appear to be sorry. After making a purchase the buyer examined the slave previous to payment, felt the limbs, to see if they were sound, agitated something before the eyes, to see if the sight was perfect, and looked into the mouth for the age. It was exactly as if a cow or a horse was purchased. The price, which was but 120 or 130 francs up the country, here reached 500 or 600 francs."

The above is translated from a French paper. Medea being a French garrison town, every one knows the purpose for which these slaves were bought—the indulgence of military licentiousness.

Fruits of Gaming.—The News says, within a few weeks past it has been discovered by the house of Holford, Banker & Co., private bankers in Wall-street, that the large amount of thirty-three thousand eight hundred and odd dollars of the funds in their hands had been embezzled by their book-keeper and confidential clerk, by means of a regular system of fraudulent and false entries and alterations of the books, carried on for several years. The young man, whose name we suppress on account of his afflicted family and fond and doting young wife and several small children, has not been the gainer by this nefarious transaction, for he does not possess now one single penny of the whole sum. The fatal passion for gaming first induced him to betray the trust of his employers. He lost, and his after larcenies were committed with the hope of being able, by a fortunate stroke at play, to retrieve his losses and refund the money. As is too often the case, instead of getting out of the mire, he continued to go deeper and deeper into it, until at last his crime was discovered.

SUMMARY.

From information communicated on Monday morning to the editors of the National Police Gazette, Henry Isaacs, late book-keeper and confidential clerk of Holford, Banker & Co., of Wall street, was arrested while attempting to escape justice, by sailing for Jamaica in the clipper Sally Ann. Isaacs stands charged with embezzling or robbing his employers of about $40,000, nearly all of which he has lost in gambling.

The Methodist, and Presbyterian churches in Delaware County, N. Y., have denounced Anti-Rentism as a crime against which they will proceed, if any of their members are found connected with the association.

Hon. Henry Hawkins of Alexander, Genesee Co. and formerly State Senator from the eighth district, died at his residence on the 8th. He was President of the Exchange Bank of Genesee, and died of small pox, which is said to be just now very prevalent there.

The wheat crop of Vermont, this season, is said to be sufficient to supply the inhabitant; thus saving to the State half a million of dollars, that being about the usual amount paid to the other States for flour.

It is said the beech will make a strong, durable, long lived, admirable hedge. The first of November is the time to gather the nuts, and they should also be planted about this time.

A street fight with pistols, knives, and sticks, took place at St. Augustine, Fa., on the 1st inst., in which three persons were very severely wounded.

The large carpet lately finished at the royal manufactory of the Gobelins, has lately been put down on the floor of the ambassador's hall at the palace of Versailles. It is the most splendid carpet in the word; it was commenced sixty-two years ago, or in 1783, and has just been completed. The whole border is worked with rich garlands of flowers, and the four corners each with a large bunch of roses copied from celebrated paintings, and embracing all the roses known in France.

In the pine district of North Carolina, the people are carrying barrels of turpentine to the stores to exchange for necessaries, it is said. There is no money in circulation there, and barter, the primitive system of commerce, is the only resource.

The General Convention of the Baptist denomination in the United States, will hold a special meeting at the Baptist Tabernacle in Mulberry street on the third Wednesday of November. The special object of the meeting will be to make such alterations in the Constitution of the Convention as have been rendered necessary by the withdrawal of the Southern Churches from their connection with it on account of the slave question. Rev. Dr. Sears, Professor of Newton Theological Seminary, will preach on the occasion.

The Wetumpka Whig says that during the late religious revivals at Montgomery and Wetumpka, Hon James E. Belser, ex-member of Congress, Wm. L. Yancey, Representative of the 3d Congressional District, and Sampson W. Harris, State Senator for Coosa and Autauga, were among the number who made a profession of religion.

Judge Edmonds has received an anonymous letter, in which the writer states that himself and 12 others have sworn, "by the hearths of their sires," to "put the Patroon out of the way," and to have the blood of the Judge, &c. The letter appears to be based on some words spoken by Judge E. at the trial of Boughton, over which he presided. The letter is post-marked 'Boston.' It is evidently written by an illiterate hand.

A letter states that all resistance has ceased in Delaware County. The Sheriff on Friday and Saturday, with a small armed posse, made a tour through the worst part of the infected district, and served warrants upon a large number of the most disaffected. Not the slightest opposition was offered, except some rather free talking on the part of the gentler sex. The posse returned to Delhi, without encountering a single hair-breadth escape, or adventure of any kind.

A young female named Catharine Langdon was arrested upon the complaint of Charles Langdon, for bigamy, in marrying him on the 10th day of September, whilst at the time she was the lawful wedded wife of another, to whom she was married on the 30th of April, 1843, by Rev. Mr. Benedict, of Rivington street. Her maiden name was Catharine Noble. She is but about 19 years of age.

A Medical College is about to be established at Richmond, Va., under the control of the Thompsonians. They are about to petition the Legislature to be placed upon the same footing as other medical practitioners.

The Debate at Cincinnati on the question whether Slavery is in itself a sin, between Rev. Mr. Blanchard and Rev. Mr. Rice, opened on the 1st inst., and excited a deep interest, crowds being in attendance.

The author of the "Vestiges of Creation," it is now stated, on the authority of the publishers, is Rev. Mr. Newman, brother of the Oxford Professor.

On Tuesday of last week, at Greensburg, Pa., a lad named Stouffer attempted to stop a threshing machine, by catching hold of the strap, which had broken, and was so drawn into the machine, that his arm was entangled in it, drawn round the pulley, and completely severed. The arm was subsequently amputated just below the joint.

The temperature of the month of July last, was the coldest in France, according to observations made at Paris, of the corresponding month of any year since 1816. In the United States it was the hottest month "within the memory of the oldest inhabitants."

A suit for damages for breach of marriage promise has just closed in the Wayne County Common Pleas, which should prove a caution to all faithless Buckeye swains. The character and standing of the parties, and the aggravated circumstances attending the refusal to fulfil the most solemn of contracts, created much interest in the case in Wayne County. The suit was brought by Miss Mary Fleming against Thomson Eckhart, and resulted in a verdict of $2,250 for the plaintiff. When the verdict was announced, we understand the crowded court room was somewhat noisy in its approval.

A young Irishman named Armstrong, who had not long been in this country, and for 5 or 6 months past has been a porter in the dry goods store at the corner of Barclay and Greenwich streets, a couple of days since received intelligence from his native land of the demise of his father, and his own consequent accession to a fortune of £30,000, if not over.

The splendid residence of the late Joseph Bonaparte, at Bordentown, will be sold on the 27th inst. Here is a chance for capitalists seldom to be met with.

Gov. Wright has offered a reward for the apprehension of George Potter, the notorious pickpocket, who was recently pardoned from the State prison on condition of leaving the United States, which condition has not been complied with.

Fruit Trees are generally planted in the fall, and those in rich and constantly cultivated ground grow twice as fast as those in grass ground, and come into bearing sooner. Those obtained from suckers are not as good as those from the seed.

A scrap-gatherer in the Evening Gazette truly says: "Our climate is one of the most delightful in America. Frost was seen in Herkimer Co., this State, on the 1st of September; at Bangor, Me., and Troy, N. Y., on the 8th; at Geneva, N. Y., on the 15th; at Richmond, Va., Baltimore, Md., Philadelphia, and St. Louis, on the 22d; in the vicinity of Charleston, S. C., on the 23d, and in Warren Co., N. Jersey, on the 24th; and yet the thermometer in this city has not yet been lower than 50 degrees or 18 above Frost."

Four children of N. P. Rogers, the famous New Hampshire 'Come-outer'—'a nest of sisters with a brother in it'—gave a free Concert at Concord a few days since which appears to have delighted the people of that miniature city. They are lineal descendants of John Rogers of Smithfield, and, it is said, intend to give entertainments in other places if encouraged by the public to do so. They are intimate friends of the Hutchinsons, to whose music their own is scarcely inferior.

The Express publishes an important decision of the Court of Chancery, declared by Vice Chancellor Sanford. Until very recently it has been supposed that our mechanics and manufacturers had a right to adopt the names and marks of manufacturers of foreign countries. It will be seen that not only have they no right to use the names or marks, or imitate them, but that they will be liable for so doing for the profits of sale, and also for all damages which may accrue for the manufacture of an inferior article.

Dr. Dodinier, late of Paris, invited us some days since to witness the operation of extirpating a cancer from the breast. The patient was Mrs. Didier, of Nineteenth-street, and she underwent the process with considerable fortitude. The Doctor is a bold and rapid operator, and his bright knife glanced among the sources of life, clearly and unhesitatingly performing its daring and delicate functions, as if under the subtle guidance of an instinct that could not err. The operation was entirely successful, and the lady in eight days called on the Doctor at his office, quite recovered.

Mrs. Mary Dwight, relict of the late President Dwight, died at New Haven on Monday, aged 92 years.

Ice Houses of China stand in the open sun, and are built almost entirely above ground. They preserve ice nearly or quite the whole year.

The Marion Review of the 17th ult. states that Gen. Sam. Houston, in his late address to the citizens of that county, on the subject of "Texas and our relations with Mexico," asserted that "every town in Texas, whose population amounts to 500 souls, contains at least 200 loafers," and endorses the charge that "Texas is a nation of thieves and robbers."

Mr. Drivers, in Madeira, in Febuary last, used four bags of Guano on four acres of vines, the result of which is, that he has four-fold the quantity of grapes produced in former years, which of course will yield four times the quantity of wine. Mr. D. also tried it with orange trees, which have given nearly double the usual number, and much larger in size.

The Montreal Times of the 6th inst. contains full particulars of the late fire in that city. The destruction of property was very great, and the value of it has not yet been ascertained. The site of the conflagration extends along Wellington street, from Queen to Nazareth streets, running back to Gabriel street, (not College.) The extent is upwards of 7 English acres.

Charles Lyell, Esq. F. R. S. of London, will commence a course of Lectures before the Lowell Institute, Boston, on the 21st inst.

The fare to Albany and Troy now ranges from 50 cents to one shilling.

RECKLESSNESS OF HUMAN LIFE.

La Prairie, L. C., August, 1845.

There are some painful facts connected with traveling on these Northern routes, which I think the public ought generally to know. Few need to be informed that there is a very vigorous and well sustained opposition to the monopoly that has long controlled the navigation of the St. Lawrence, between Montreal and Quebec. But among all the numerous letter writers, who have travelled this route during the summer, there is not one, to my knowledge, who has given a detailed statement of the danger to which the tourist is here exposed.

Previous to the present season, the rates of fare on this route were extravagantly high, seldom less, I think, than one pound ten shillings, or six dollars, while the distance is but thirty miles greater than between New York and Albany.—But with the opening of navigation this season, commenced a new era. Two boats, the Rowland Hill and the Quebec, were placed on the route in opposition to the monopoly.—The latter of these boats is said to be equal in speed to almost any steamer on the continent. She is a pleasant, commodious boat, and is well commanded. The cabin passage, including berths and meals, is two dollars. So far well. The public appreciated the enterprise, and sustained it nobly. But the old monopoly, jealous of their rivals, placed another boat, the Montreal, an old line, to run in conjunction with and in opposition to the Quebec. This boat, too, is well managed. Very marked attention is shown to the comfort of the passengers; and I must bear my testimony to the gentlemanly deportment of the commander especially. The fare on board the Montreal is five shillings, or one dollar, including excellent berths and meals. The distance is one hundred and eighty miles. So far well—but no farther.

The traveling public ought to know that every day in the week, Sundays not excepted, the Montreal and Quebec are racing. A few days since I came up the river in the Montreal: and the commander of this boat candidly acknowledged to me on the passage, that it was no small part of his business to beat the Quebec. At this time the Montreal left the wharf first. The Quebec was astern for some thirty miles, when she overtook us, and came up abreast of us.—Our captain was at this time standing near me, and I heard him express his determination not to allow the Quebec to pass, if it was possible for him to prevent it. Large quantities of rosin, to my certain knowledge, were thrown under the boilers, and the flame rose three or four feet above the top of the chimnies. There was a great deal of agitation among the passengers who were acquainted with the facts, but the captain could not be prevailed upon to desist from this foolish and dangerous strife. The Quebec passed us, coming directly across our bow. Had any accident happened to the Quebec at the time she was crossing, so as at all to disable her machinery, we should inevitably have run into her, and in that case she must have sunk immediately. But the strife after this did not cease. Both boats were racing the whole distance.

The responsibility of this childish trial of speed, however the case may have stood at first, must now rest in a great measure upon the heads of the managers of the old line.—The Quebec, in two or three instances, has changed her day of leaving the different places, purposely to avoid the conflict with the Montreal. But the Montreal, in every case, lay over to run with the Quebec. I know very well that the apologists for the old monopoly have a story that the Montreal needed some trifling repairs, and that this was the reason of her detention. But I know equally well, that the captain of the Montreal told me frankly that the sole object of her lying over was to run with her adversary.

So much for the navigation on the St. Lawrence. Turn we now to the Ottowa. This is a beautiful stream, though little known, comparatively, as far south as New York.—Were this the place, I could fill a page with the particular recital of the beauty of the scenery on the Ottowa river. But I forbear at present. I have another end in view in this letter. This river, which is received by the St. Lawrence near Montreal, is navigated by steamboats some two hundred miles, though there are several very formidable rapids which the traveller avoids either by a canal or line of stages. A few days since I was coming down the Ottawa from the upper province, in the steamer Porcupine, commanded by one Lighthall, or some such name. When we arrived at Lorignal we had our choice in avoiding the rapids a few miles below, either to take the stages at this place, and ride seventeen miles over a good road, or proceed five miles furtner in the boat and take the stages on the other side of the river. In this latter case, we have twelve miles of land traveling, over a very bad road. Of these two evils I judged the former to be the less, and chose it. But the captain, who, I am told, is interested in the other line, and is hostile to the one I selected, found measures to punish those of his passengers who happened to differ from him in this matter. Those who take the stage at the first point, are obliged to cross the river in a small ferry boat. This boat, it is understood, has no connection with the steamer. The wind was very high when the ferry boat came alongside, and there were more passengers than usual to go on board. A large number, with considerable heavy baggage, were already in the boat, and the captain of the steamer was urging the rest of those who chose that route to go, when the man who managed the little ferry boat declared that he had already too heavy a load, and any more weight would endanger the safety of the passengers.—A lady then left the ferry boat, but was persuaded to return in no very civil manner by the captain of the Porcupine.—Several of the passengers then entreated him to wait until the ferry boat could go over and return; but he peremptorily and somewhat boisterously refused. More than this, he actually compelled all the passengers, including several ladies, to enter the crazy scow at once, though contrary to the urgent remonstrance of the man that managed it, who said repeatedly that the water was too rough for such a load, and he could not attempt to cross without imminent peril.—Having accomplished this somewhat anomalous feat, Capt. L. immediately pushed off, and left us to the mercy of the waves. No, not the waves, for there is a power that commands the winds and the waves, and they obey him. We were in great danger. There was but one opinion in regard to this matter. The boat was propelled by oars, and it occupied a long time in crossing. Wave after wave came in upon us, and when at last our frail bark reached the shore, we all felt that we had narrowly escaped. Among our number were several ladies, and two of whom had infants in their arms. Such recklessness as this captain exhibited ought not to go unnoticed and unrebuked. The public, at least, should know what they are to expect if they ever chance to fall under the regimen of the present commander of the Porcupine. I have the names and address of several gentlemen, passengers at the time, who will cheerfully testify that there was in this case, a most shameful trifling with human life.

Theophilus.

MARRIED,

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 12th inst., by Eld. H. Clarke, Mr. Thomas M. Wilcox, of West Greenwich, to Miss Aurelia E. Stillman, of Westerly.

DIED,

In Alfred, N. Y., on the 1st of October, Miss Susan E. Warren, aged 22 years. She embraced religion some years since, and united with the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Alfred, of which she remained a worthy member until her death. Her health has been feeble for some months past, yet her last illness was short, and her death triumphant. She has left a weeping widowed mother, and an affectionate brother to mourn her early dissolution. H. P. B.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
Ira Sayles, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics
Gurdon Evans, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. Hartshorn, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. Stillman, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. Maxson, Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. Kenyon, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences. The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

The Teachers' Classes, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

The Academic Year for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

Expenses.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense. SAMUEL RUSSELL,

President of the Board of Trustees

THE CHANGING WORLD.

"The fashion of this world passeth away."

'Tis written on the rolling SEA,
That holds no settled form,
Its shadowy clouds, its azure dye,
Its rainbow and its storm.

'Tis written on the restless YEAR;
On spring arrayed in flowers,
On summer bright, on autumn sear,
On winter's stormy hours.

'Tis winter on the changing EARTH;
Its vallies clothed with pride,
Its towering hills of ancient birth,
Its fields and forests wide.

'Tis written on the surging SEA,
Whose waters will not sleep;
And on the countless streams that flee.
All restless to its deep.

'Tis written on TIME'S moving show
That never is the same;
The living dreams that come and go,
Remembered but in name.

'Tis written in THY dying form,
Sweet mistress of this page;
The heart that plays within thee warm,
Steals as it gives thine age.

Scene in aa Ecclesiastical Court.

We have sometimes heard the complaint made against Baptists, that their form of government is "too congregational," since it permits churches to call their own ministers to account, and allows laymen to vote as well as preachers. As an offset to this complaint, we have thought it might be useful to publish the following scene in an ecclesiastical court which has canons enough for its government, and is not generally supposed to be "too congregational." The scene was witnessed at the recent Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York, in connection with a report and resolutions concerning the suspended Bishop. We copy from the New York Evangelist:

On Saturday occurred an extraordinary scene of confusion and uproar. The debate was upon an amendment proposed by Judge Oakley, and proceeded for some time with comparative calmness, though great eagerness was manifested by the members to obtain the floor. After the state of things had become already quite tumultuous, Judge Burnet made a speech so full of personal allusions, and alledged misrepresentations, as to subject him to almost constant interruptions. When he had ceased, Judge Oakley made a proposal to withdraw the amendment which proved so troublesome. It was met with deafening cries of "no, no," "order," &c., which neither the voice nor the hammer of the President could quell.—A scene of indescribable confusion prevailed for some time, during which there were sometimes twenty upon the floor at once, some crying at the top of their voices, and nearly all with some different proposition, designed to restore harmony. While the uproar was at the highest, Hon. James Monroe rose, and by mere power of voice, and violence of action, obtained a hearing. What then took place, is thus described by the accomplished reporter of the Commercial Advertiser:

The President. (Rapping very hard) Will the gentleman allow me to put the question?

Mr. Monroe. No, sir, I won't. I want to propose a resolution and———

The President. Then I hope the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. Monroe. I will not be over fifteen minutes (a laugh)—well, then, not over five minutes--in what I have to say. I know but little about canons, but I know what I am at. I want a direct vote, and no dodging, upon the conduct of Bishop Onderdonk. I want to know what is the morality of this convention—I want to train up my children for heaven, and therefore I want to teach them morality. (Laughter)—Yes, sir, I want to teach them morality, sir, and I should like to know, sir, how I am to do it, sir, if immorality is to be sanctioned by this convention, sir. I must go elsewhere, sir, if it is. Mr. President, I propose, sir, the following resolution:—

Resolved, That in the opinion—yes, sir, opinion is all I want, sir—I want the opinion of this convention, sir—(laughter)—in the opinion of this convention, the Rev. B. T. Onderdonk can never again preside over this diocese.

There! I want a vote on that! I want to test the moral sentiment of this convention.

Mr. Monroe, raising his voice to a pitch that would have done admirably for a political meeting on Boston Common, Order, yes sir; order, I say. Why, I should be called to order by gentlemen in that corner (pointing to the president's left, where the Bishop's friends were congregated) if I were reading the prayer book. Cries of "oh—oh"—laughter, shouts of question, &c., and Mr. M. was asked to give up the floor.

Mr. Monroe. No, I will not give up the floor. What are canons good for but to sustain morality, virtue and religion? Let me not be told that a canon or the canons prevent my having a direct vote. I want to immortalize the man who can vote Bishop Onderdonk an innocent man. (Laughter.) Yes sir, I want to immortalize him and the convention. (Cries of "order," "question," &c.)

The Chair. Better take the question. A gentleman rises to speak five minutes and speaks ten.

Great disorder, and the chair raps, RAPS, RAPS with his mallet.

A gentleman (Mr. Lloyd) made some remarks upon points of order.

The Chair. Will the gentleman speak to the question?

Mr. Lloyd. What is the question? (Loud laughter.)

James Fenimore Cooper. I move an adjournment.

The chair did not hear.

A Voice. If the chair would not listen quite so much to the whisperings and instructions of those about him, the minority would be much better pleased.

Mr. Cooper again. I move an adjournment.

The chair is putting the question.

The Chair. As many of you as are in favor of adjourning will say "aye!" (Loud cries of aye.) As many of you as are against adjourning will say "no;" (about as loud a cry of "no.")

The Chair. The noes appear to have it by the voices. Cries of "no," "no," the noes don't have it. "Divide," "count."

The Chair. The noes have it.

Mr. Cooper. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The Chair. I have decided that the noes have it.

Mr. Cooper. No doubt the chair decided according to its best judgment, but there are those around me who think, and so it seemed to me too, the "ayes" have it.

The Chair. The question then is on the third resolution. (Secretary reads.)

Mr. Cooper. No: the question is on the adjournment—the chair has not yet divided the house.

The Chair. I have decided there was no adjournment.

Mr. Cooper. I beg pardon—the chair must divide the house.

The Chair. Then the gentleman appeals from the decision of the chair.

Mr. Cooper. No—I call for a division.

The Chair. The question then is an appeal from the decision of the chair. As many of you as are in favor of sustaining the chair will say "aye."

The Chair. The decision of the chair is sustained. The question now is on the 3d resolution.

Cries of "divide the house."

The Chair. As many of you as sustain the decision of the chair will rise. [About two thirds of the convention rose.] As many as are opposed to the decision of the chair will rise—[few or none rose.] The decision of the chair is sustained.

After a scene of the utmost confusion the house passed the resolution directing the standing committee to continue their functions, and when needed, to supply the diocese with episcopal services.

This bedlam scene continued in full fury for nearly a half an hour longer, when one definite motion was made and carried, that is to adjourn.

The vexed Bishop question came up again on Monday with greater violence than ever. The fourth resolution of the majority report, proposing an amendment of the Canon, to give greater power to the Standing Committee, was negatived. The resolution proposing the appointment of an Assistant Bishop next came up, and with it the question whether the Bishop could ever be restored. The whole debate was made to turn on this, by an amendment proposed by Judge Oakley, adding that in no contingency can the Bishop ever be restored to his jurisdiction over the Diocese. The public will feel some interest in knowing the sentiments of prominent characters in the church on this question. Hon. J. C. Spencer could not say that no contingency could arise in which it would be proper to restore the Bishop. Rev. Mr. Balch, of this city, held that such restoration could never be, how penitent soever he may be—it would taint the character of the clergy, and render them suspected, in their privatc relations with the community. Bishop Onderdonk cannot be restored for the injury it would inflict on Episcopacy—nor could he be restored, in consideration of the injury it would do to the piety of the church. He would put this to the members of the convention—not here, under excitement—but in the silence of their secluded lives, when they look their wives in the face, and their innocent daughters in the face, and ask themselves what they had done for the elevation of the clerical character in this Diocese.

Rev. Dr. Tyng made a long and most eloquent speech, in which he expressed himself quite unambiguously as to the restoration of the Bishop.

Can this person, said he, be restored to the episcopal jurisdiction in this diocese? Ought he to be restored thereto? Dr. Tyng said that character did not depend upon penitence. It might induce a cordial restoration to private affection and regard. We may, as individuals, welcome him back, though a wanderer from duty. And the time may come, (and I pray God it may come early,) when we may receive him to our hearts with restored and full affection; when we may meet him, like the returning son to his father, and say of him, "He was dead, but is alive again: he was lost, and is found." But repentance can never restore public confidence. As well might you attempt to gather up the fragments of the crystal vase which you have dashed at your feet, and present it perfect to the scrutinizing eye of the beholder in its original beauty, as to seek to repair, in the character of a minister of Christ's religion, such a terrible breach as this. You may load your table with resolutions, sir, but all with no effect. They will not turn the frown on a single brow to a smile, when he enters the house of God: nor bring a single knee to bow before him to receive his paternal benediction. No canons, no declarations, no plans of man's device can ever restore him thus. Could I reach his private ear—could I approach him with the affection and respect I have always had for him—could I put around him the arms of Christian love, to shield him from the flood of contumely that is surging over his head, I could do no more for him, no greater kindness, than to entreat and advise him to retire; and then to appeal to that sensitiveness to reproach and public rebuke which was ever so striking a characteristic of his, to induce him to follow my advice. But I am not of his councils. I can say nothing, do nothing, but pray that some blessed influence from above may superinduce him to make the personal sacrifice necessary for the resuscitation from death of a body, of which, for years, he has been the shining light, and the dimming of which we all with tears deplore. As to restoration of public confidence, the idea is futile. There is not a congregation, sitting in a church in the diocese, as the case now stands, which would meet him as a minister; and if there were, to the church as a body, his restoration would be most injurious. With no benefit can he ever minister therein again. Can he ever command its confidence? Can its children be ever conscientiously taught by their parents to look up to him with respect? As has been said before, would not his first visitation, after his restoration, be his last?

Further on, drawing a contrast between Bishops Hobart and Onderdonk, and referring to a remark which had been made of Hobart's confidence in Onderdonk, he said:

"When I heard that allusion to his name, I seemed to be standing before that beautiful marble, raised to his memory, in yonder splendid pile; and as I gazed, methought the calm expression of that eye kindled with the fire of indignation, while the lips seemed to open, to express a solemn rebuke at such a profanation of his name. [Here Mr. Tyng made a most warm and excited allusion to the placards, in which Bishop Onderdonk's name was used, by the venders and publishers of low obscene books, soon after the trial—and made some particular reference to one of them, representing the Evil One with his hand on the suspended diocesan's shoulder, saying "this is the Bishop for me!"] No, sir! bring not the name of Hobart to be the Ægis of believed, if not convicted crime!"

Rev. Mr. Parks, Chaplain at West Point, an out-and-out Bishopman, made a long and curious speech, in which he attempted to compare the troubles of Bishop Onderdonk with the persecutions of Jesus Christ!

What (said he) are the influences that are about to induce us to pass such an amendment? I cannot disguise from myself that we are about to be operated unduly upon by public opinion. What is that? "Not this man, but Barabbas!" I pass no imputation on men, who, siding with public opinion, do not follow, or allow themselves to be guided by it; but that insensate public opinion, which is usually so called, I hate it—and feel bound to hate it, as a Christian. I care not whether it curse or approve. I prefer that it do the former; I feel then that I am nearer right. [A marked sensation.] Let gentlemen make merry over this sentiment. They are welcome to do so. Away, then, with this "public opinion," with which we have literally been overwhelmed, here!

Alluding to the Bishop, he said—

Did gentlemen ever hear of David, of Solomon, of Mary Magdalen, and the woman who sinned? The best men in the world are least scandalized by the fall of a brother. Look at your pattern. "Neither do I condemn thee!" And I believe that if he who spoke those words were to speak them to the sinner whom we are now mourning over, public opinion would again cry out, "Away with this man!" "Let us have Barabbas!" He said that it is because we are not ourselves pure, that we are so ready to condemn others for impurity.—I cannot foresee what possible changes may take place in the character of that man; or what public sentiment may demand—perhaps his restoration. I do not think it, from present appearances, probable. It is possible. I have nothing to do with futurity. I did not place him where he is. I will not touch that sentence; nor say yea or nay to it.

Mr. Parks was followed by a very sensible speech from J. Fenimore Cooper, Esq., who rebuked his contempt of public opinion with great severity.

Mr. Cooper remarked, that whether Bishop Onderdonk be guilty or not, he would not undertake to decide; but he would ask every Christian member of this Convention to say, if, with charges of this character against him, Bishop Onderdonk could ever be restored to, so as to be useful in, this Diocese?

The vote was finally taken on Judge Oakley's amendment, viz: that in no contingency can the Bishop be restored, and was lost. Forty clergymen voted for it, and seventy-six were willing to declare to the world their opinion that Dr. Onderdonk may be restored to his office.

The same proposal was brought up in a milder form the next day, first by Rev. Mr. Haight, and afterwards by Dr. Wainwright, who moved a resolution, that it was the belief of the Convention that the effect of the trial and sentence of the Bishop has been and is now such as to render injurious to the church any measure which might tend to his resumption of this office, and that the whole question of the Bishop's relations be referred to the General Convention. After a spirited debate, this too, was lost, by a vote of the clergy, of 55 against and 46 for it—the vote of the laity being 69 ayes and 48 noes.

The Convention met at evening, and agreed to drop all the disputed questions, so as to seem to part in peace. The Bishop question was left just where it was before the Convention met; the Standing Committee had a little additional authority conferred upon them, and were instructed to act as if the diocese were vacant: the Bishop's salary is unprovided for, and nothing done. The Puseyites have thus carried their point, and the aim of the secret circular is accomplished. After all the contests and quarrels, the like of which, we venture to say, were never before witnessed in an ecclesiastical assembly, the Convention passed a resolution, thanking God for the peace and harmony of their results!

The President, on opening one of the sessions, felt obliged to rebuke the disorderly spirit of the Convention, in language like this: "Gentlemen of the Convention, clerical and lay members—For thirty years have I been a member of this body, and been present, with I believe one exception, at all its sittings. I have been present at or heard of the proceedings of other like bodies, and yet saw I never, nor have I ever heard of, nay, I had no conception of, such a scene as has been exhibited on this floor. A Convention of clergymen, ministers of the gospel, ambassadors of Christ; of laymen the most conspicuous in the church for piety, wisdom, prudence, station—members of Christ, inheritors of the kingdom of heaven, communicants of the church, partakers of the body and blood of our Saviour—the friends of law, of justice, of good order and of truth, presenting a scene of confusion, disorder and tumult, such as could have been expected from a lawless assembly only."

A correspondent of the Courier and Enquirer, an Episcopalian in an Episcopal paper, in a letter to the President, speaks of it thus:

"I speak (says he) the united voice of every good man in your body, and of the hundreds of deeply interested and anxious spectators who attended your sitting on Saturday, when I commit to paper the shameful fact, that the proceedings of your body on that day, were disgraceful to the clergy and laity of our diocese, an outrage upon public opinion, and insulting to the religious feelings of the age in which we live, and the community in which you are assembled. I have attended many of the most riotous political meetings which have from time to time been held in this State, and truth compels me to say, that seldom have I witnessed, or been cognizant of any one, more disorderly than was that over which you presided on Saturday; while I have no hesitation in declaring that no deliberative body in our country, has ever presented so humiliating a spectacle as that which occurred in the house of God at your last session!"

TRUE HAPPINESS.

Where does it dwell? Can a specimen be found on earth? Yes, reader, I will show thee an abode of happiness. It is in a retired part of a new country. All about it is wild and grand. The dwelling is constructed of logs, in the form which nature gave them. Let us enter the rudely-constructed habitation. There sits a mother, and near her is gathered a group of children. The internal arrangements of the building are neat, but correspond in cheapness with the exterior. An air of cheerfulness pervades the countenance of the Mother, and her children all seem obedient and happy: the husband and father is at work in the field.

Madam, how is it that you appear to be so happy, in this retired and humble abode?

God is everywhere, and we feel that he is with us. In his providence he directed us to this place, and we are happy in being where he stations us.

Then you have not always been accustomed to this mode of life?

O no; my husband and myself were brought up in circumstances quite different from these.

But was it not difficult to you to submit to this condition?

No; we enjoy the favor of our Father in Heaven, and that satisfies us. With it, the retired cottage is as pleasant as the populous place. Our home is sweet, very sweet to us.

You must possess but few, if any of the luxuries of life?

True; but we enjoy many of the luxuries of heaven.

You are far from neighbors?

Yes; but God and his angels are near. "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people, from henceforth and forever."

Do you not apprehend want?

The Lord is our shepherd, we shall not want.

Have you ever been called to mourn?

Yea; but we found it good to be afflicted. We have buried dear children, but we have given them to the Lord. While they were with us we considered them as his. They were dear to us, but it was right that they should be early removed from earth. Our concern is with the survivors.

Do you not fear, every day, that death may seize these?

Death is the servant of our Redeemer, who never errs. We pray for the continued life of our children, yet endeavor to say—"Thy will be done." Infinite wisdom cannot do wrong. Submision is our duty and pleasure.

Are you not a great way from the sanctuary of God?

Yes; but we regard it a privilege to make efforts, that we may enter his gates with praise.

Are you in search of happiness? Seek it not in wealth, or honors, or learning. The world does not yield it. It can be found at the feet of Jesus, and not elsewhere. In him you may trust, and enjoy his smiles forever. [Christian Witness.

SPIRITUAL LIFE IN THE SOUL.

Religion is experience, and not speculation; and, therefore, the true knowledge of Christ Jesus is the personal and self-appropriating conviction that he is made unto us 'wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption.' . . . . . If we are strangers to that life which the soul derives from God, what can all our notions of the work and righteousness of Christ amount to, but to a senseless value placed on means without an end, a new and living way, which leads we know or ask not whither? If we breathe not after holiness and God, what has redemption brought us? What has the great salvation saved us from, but from a material hell, which has no existence but in the carnal mind? What has it purchased for us, but a heaven, which is a mere barren notion of the empty name? For my own part, I have no hope for time or for eternity which is not grounded upon the alone merits of that Saviour who offered himself once for all, to save, without money and without price, the guilty and the lost. But, if I can say, as I trust I can, with my whole heart, 'God forbid that I should glory, save only in the cross of Christ,' my rejoicing is only in this, that on the cross my Saviour unbarred the gates of everlasting life, and died, 'the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God;'—not that he might take us by the hand of flesh, and lead us in the presence of some visible majesty, but that he might effect a true and vital reconciliation of mind and nature between the Creator and the creatures; that the dark cloud of offended justice might no more veil the heavens, but that the warm beams of eternal sun, the gladdening emanations which issue from God, might again flow down upon the soul of man, and touch the springs of happiness, and quicken the seeds of immortality within it. Such, my brethren, is pure and undefiled religion, a present salvation, the dawning of an everlasting day.

MEDITATIONS.

'Is not the Lord gone out before thee?'—Judges iv: 14.

The Lord hath ever means at hand for his servants' comfort and deliverance. If they know how to pray, he knoweth how to comfort. . . . . For comfort lean thyself upon God, cast thy care upon him; he will bring it to pass. God hath means beyond our sight: if man cannot do it, angels can, and shall: and if no man can pay the widow's debt, God will: if nobody will feed Elijah, the ravens shall. Why do we talk of means? All means are shut up in God. . . . . Shall anything be impossible with God? If God's people can break through all hindrances of unbelief, and every discouragement to prayer, God will break through these, and a thousand more to their comfort. [Harris.

'They labor in vain that kick against the pricks, that strive against the gospel. For it is a prince of might, that doth defend it; and "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The sun shall run his course; the passage of the gospel cannot be stopped. "The gospel is not bound." While it is persecuted, it is enlarged. "The blood that is spilt for it, is the very seed of it." Now as he is our king, so our priest and prophet too, at whose mouth we should require the law of God; that prophet like unto Moses, the searcher of truth: that very Son of God, of whom the Father hath said, "Hear Him." He is the Priest, who once for all hath sufficiently sacrificed for our sins; by himself, and by none other; once, and not often; upon the cross, and not upon the altar, sufficiently for all such as shall be saved. He is the Priest, the high Bishop, that maketh intercession for us; the only Mediator between God and man; to teach man the will of God, to reconcile God to man, to make intercession between God and man.' [Aqd. Sandys.

THE "ALTOGETHER LOVELY."—"Augustine's prayer was, 'Lord, give me thyself!' And in this spirit the believer is ready to exult, 'Whom have I in the heavens but Thee, and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee. The Lord himself is the portion of mine inheritance and of my cup; Thou maintainest my lot. The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places, yea, I have a goodly heritage; I will bless the Lord, who hath given me counsel.' Surely the whole world cannot weigh against the comfort of being able to let all go, and look up—'Thou art my portion, O Lord.' For unless His perfections should moulder away, and leave Him a destitute and indigent God, it is impossible that his people can be impoverished. This portion, however, can never be enjoyed, even by a child of God, unless He who is the essence of it be supreme in the soul—not only above all, but in the place of all. Other objects may be subordinately loved but of none but Himself must we say, 'He is altogether lovely.'"

Missions to the Slaves.—At a Methodist Convention lately held in Charleston, S. C. a report was made, stating that there are between eighty and ninety missionaries to the slaves, who have under their charge over eighteen thousand church members, and a hundred thousand attendants on their services. Over a thousand negroes are in connection with the Methodist Church in Texas. The South Carolina Conference has sixteen missions to the negroes, the Georgia Conference twelve, Tennessee five, Alabama seven, Memphis nine, Arkansas one, Mississippi, seven, North Carolina two, Virginia two. The catechising of the children and youth is a prominent part of their labor. Dr. Capers' Catechism, prepared expressly for the purpose, is extensively used; 4380 children are catechised in the missions of the S. C. Conference, and the expense of those missions is over eleven thousand dollars annually. [N. Y. Evangelist.

THE CATERPILLAR.—A skilful naturalist has been able to perceive that in the body of the lowest caterpillar, which in the common opinion is one of the most degraded existences on earth, there are upwards of two thousands muscles, all of which can be brought into action with as much facility, at the will of the insect, and perform their several offices with as much accuracy, promptitude and precision, as the most perfect animal. It would be no easy matter to make some men believe that the most minute insect, whose life may only be calculated for the duration of a few hours, is, in all parts, for the functions it has to perform, as complete as the majestic elephant which treads the forests of India for a century. Little do they suppose that, even in its appearance under the greatest magnifying powers, it is as elegant in every respect, and as beautifully finished, as any of the larger animals. Unlike the paltry productions of man, all minute parts of these works of God appear in greater perfection, and afford to us a greater degree of admiration, the more minutely and accurately they are examined. M. de Lisle saw, with a microscope, a very small insect, that in one second of time, advanced three inches, taking five hundred and forty steps, and many of the discoveries of Leuwenheck were even still more wonderful than this."

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PUBLISHED AT NO. 9 SPRUCE ST.

VOL. II—NO. 18. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, OCTOBER 23, 1845. WHOLE NO. 70.

The Sabbath Recorder.

KEITHIAN AND SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

The following account of the Keithian Baptists, and of the early history of the Pennsylvania Seventh-day Baptists, is taken from the manuscript history of the celebrated Morgan Edwards. It was first published in the Baptist Memorial, and is now published in the Recorder both for its intrinsic worth and for the sake of placing the facts on record in a convenient form for reference. It brings the history of the two denominations in Pennsylvania down to the year 1770.

The Baptists in Pennsylvania may be distinguished into British and German; the British again into First-day Baptists, and Seventh-day Baptists; and the Germans into Tunckers and Mennonists; with which must be mentioned the Keithian Baptists, though now extinct, because the Sabbatarians originated from them.

Keithian Baptists.

Soon after the settlement of Pennsylvania, a difference arose among the Quakers touching the sufficiency of what every man naturally has within himself, for the purpose of his own salvation. Some denied that sufficiency, and consequently magnified the external word, Christ, &c., above Barclay's measure. These were headed by the famous Geo. Keith, and therefore called Keithians. The difference rose to a division in 1691, when separate meetings were set up in divers parts of the country, and a general one at Burlington, in opposition to that of Philadelphia. This year they published a confession of faith, containing twelve articles, much in Barclay's strain, and signed by George Keith, Thomas Budd, John Hart, Richard Hilliard, Thomas Hooten, and Henry Furnis, in behalf of the rest. They also published the reasons of separation, &c. signed by the same persons and others, to the number of forty-eight.—About the same time and afterwards, were published several other pieces, (the pieces which came under my notice, are copies of the judgment against George Keith, &c.; Expostulation with Samuel Jennings, Thomas Loyd, &c.; Plea of the innocent, &c.; Second Expostulation, &c.; Appeal to the Spirit of Truth, &c.; Truth and Innocence against calumny and defamation, &c.; Testimony against opinions, &c.; Fundamental truths, &c.; False judgment reprehended, &c.; Answer to papers from Maryland, &c.; Just rebuke, &c.; Discovery of hypocrisy, &c.; Heresy and hatred, &c; New England spirit of persecution in Pennsylvania, &c.; Serious appeal, and spirit of the hat, &c.) The design of those publications was, 1st, to inform the world of the principles of the separate Quakers; 2d, to fix the blame of the separation on the opposite party; and 3d, to complain of the unfair treatment, slanders, fines, imprisonments, and other species of persecution which they endured from their brethren. Whether these complaints be just or not, is neither my business or inclination to determine. If just, the Quakers have also shown "that every sect would persecute had they power." I know but one exception to this satirical remark, and that is the Baptists; they have had civil power in their hands in Rhode Island, a government for 136 years, and yet have never abused it in this manner, their enemies themselves being their judges. And it is remarkable that John Holmes, Esq., (the only Baptist magistrate in Philadelphia at the time referred to,) refused to act with the Quaker magistrate against the Keithians, alleging "that it was a religious dispute, and therefore not fit for a civil court." Nay, he openly blamed the court (held at Philadelphia, Dec. 6th—12th, 1692,) for refusing to admit exceptions which the prisoners made to their jury. However, the Keithian Quakers soon declined; their head soon deserted them and went over to the Episcopalians. Some followed him thither; some returned to the Penn Quakers; and some went to other societies. Nevertheless, many persisted in the separation, particularly at Upper Providence, at Philadelphia, at Southampton, and at Lower Dublin. These, by resigning themselves to the guidance of scripture, began to find water in the commission, Matt. xxviii. 19; bread and wine in the command, Matt. xxvi. 26, 30; community of goods, love feast, kiss of charity, right hand of fellowship, anointing the sick for recovery, and washing the disciples' feet in other texts, Acts ii. 41, 47; Jude 12; Rom. xvi. 16; Galatians ii. 9; John xiii.; James v. 14, 16, and therefore were determined to practice accordingly. The society of Keithians most forward in these matters, was that kept at the house of Thomas Powell in Upper Providence; which forwardness, it was said, was owing to one Abel Noble, baptized a public Friend, (whose name was Thomas Martin,) in Redley Creek. Afterwards Mr. Martin baptized other Quakers, viz. Thomas Powell, Evan Harry, Hugh Harry, John Palmer, Judith Calvert, Alice Vestal, Thomas Budd, Richard Dungworth, John Powell, David Thomas, John Hannum, Margery, Hannum, Margery Martin, Mary Palmer, Elizabeth Powell, John Beckingham. To them joined one William Beckingham, who broke off from the church at Cohansey. These nineteen persons did, Oct. 12, 1697, incorporate, and proceeded to choose a minister by lot. Three were put in nomination, William Beckingham, Thomas Budd, Thomas Martin; the lot fell on the last, who on the same day administered the Lord's Supper to them for the first time. From that day forth, other Keithian Quakers were baptized, Ann Compton, Samuel Miles, Hannah Brunsden, William Thomas, Richard Buffington, Elizabeth Thomas, Jane Philips, Edward Lane, Edward Edwards, James Plumley, David Philips, Elizabeth Paviour, Mary Clark, Elizabeth Hall, Rees Price, &c., some of which lived in other parts of the country. But in 1700, a difference arose among them touching the Sabbath, which broke up the society. Such as adhered to the observation of the seventh day, kept together at Newtown, where some of their posterity are to this day. The rest lay scattered in the neighborhood, till Mr. Abel Morgan gathered together fifteen of them, and formed them into a society, now called the Church of Brandywine. Another society of Keithian Quakers who kept together, was that of Philadelphia, where they built a meeting-house in 1692. Of these, two public persons were baptized in 1697 by Rev. Thomas Killingworth of Cohansey.—Their names were William Davis, and Thomas Rutter. The first joined Pennepek, the other kept preaching in Philadelphia, where he baptized one Henry Bernard Coster, Thomas Peart, and seven others whose names are not on record. These nine persons united in communion June 12, 1698, having Thomas Rutter to their minister. They increased and continued together nine years. But some removing to the country, and the unbaptized Keithians falling off, the society in a manner broke up in 1707; for then the few that remained invited the regular Baptists to join them, and were incorporated with them. A third society of Keithian Quakers was at Southampton in Bucks County, kept at the house of one John Swift. Their preacher was John Hart. In 1697, said John Hart, John Swift, Evan Morgan, and others, were baptized by the forementioned Mr. Thomas Rutter. Evan Morgan joined Pennepek the same year; the rest kept together to 1702, and then followed the steps of Evan Morgan. The other society of Keithian Quakers was that in Lower Dublin township, kept at the house of Abraham Pratt. One of these, John Wells, became a Baptist, Sept. 27, 1697. The next year Mr. William Davis joined them, being put out of the church of Pennepek for heresy. In 1699 and afterwards others were baptized, as David Price and wife, Abraham Pratt and wife, Richard Mansell, Margaret Davis, Martha Deal, Peter Deal, Richard Wells, Richard Sparks, Nich. Ashmead, Alex. Babcock, &c. These united in communion after the manner of their brethren at Upper Providence, having William Davis to their minister. But they had not been long a society, before the same question divided them as in Chester county. Those who preferred the seventh day were William Davis, their preacher, the Wells, the Wansells, the Pratts, the Ashmeads, &c. These met by themselves, and in 1701 built a place of worship in Oxford township. But their preacher, William Davis, leaving them in 1711, and their meeting-house being taken from them, they became as sheep without a shepherd Those who adhered to the observance of the first day Sabbath joined Pennepek. Thus have we seen that the Keithian Quakers ended in a kind of transformation into Keithian Baptists, they were also called Quaker Baptists, because they still retained the language, dress and manners of the Quakers. We have seen also that the Keithian or Quaker Baptists ended in another kind of transformation into Seventh-day Baptists; though some went among the Friday Baptists and other societies. However, these were the beginning of the Sabbatarians in this province. A confession of faith was published by the Keithian Baptists in 1697; it consists chiefly of the articles in the Apostle's creed. The additions are articles which relate to baptism by immersion; the Lord's Supper; distinguishing days and months by numerical names; plainness of language and dress; not swearing, not fighting, &c.

To the Year 1770.

These, it is well known, receive their distinction from the day of the week they observe for holy rest. The characters of general and particular divide them in this province, few as they are. They originated from the Keithian Baptists in 1700, as has been observed before, who were general in their sentiments touching the redemption of Christ. Before that time, I can find but one Seventh-day Baptist in Pennsylvania, viz. Mr. Abel Noble. He arrived, it is said, in 1684. His name is among the forty-eight who signed the reasons of the Keithian separation, in 1691. By him was the first Keithian baptized in 1697, and by him were the rest gained over to the observance of the seventh day. I suppose therefore he may be called the father of them in this part of America. The congregation of German Baptists at Tunkerstown who observe the seventh day, owe their popularity in that point to this man; but more of these hereafter; at present we have only to do with the British Seventh-day Baptists. Of these there are four societies in the province. The first society we shall mention is that of Newtown, in Upper Providence, Chester Co., about twenty-four miles from Philadelphia. The meeting is kept at the house of David Thomas. Three families belong to this place; whereof the following persons are baptized: David Thomas, John German, Hazael Thomas, Ruth Thomas, Priscilla Wane, Elizabeth Wane, Mary Gilkey. This was their state in 1770. They originated in 1700, in the manner described in page 58; but their ministers, Messieurs Martin, Buckingham, and Budd, dying, and none rising in their stead, they are reduced to a small handful. The next society of them is at Pennepek, in Lower Dublin, county of Philadelphia, about nine miles from the city. The meeting is held at the house of Benjamin Tomlinson, every second Sabbath, by Mr. Enoch David. The families belonging to this society are eleven; whereof the following persons are baptized: Samuel Wells, Richard Tomlinson and wife, Job Noble and wife, Elizabeth West, Mary Keen, Rebecca Dungan, Enoch David. This was their state in 1770. They originated in the manner described in the preceding pages, about the year 1701. But their ministers, Wm. Davis, and Thomas Rutter, quitting them, and none others rising in their stead, are reduced at present to nine souls. In the year 1702 they built a meeting-house on a lot given them by Thomas Graves; but then, neglected to take a conveyance in due time, the Episcopalians have got both the lot and the house. On the lot they have built Oxford church, and turned the Baptist meeting-house into a stable, while it stood, but now it is no more. The third society of them is at Nottingham, in Chester county, about fifty miles from Philadelphia. The meeting is kept sometimes at the house of Abigail Price, in said Nottingham, but chiefly at the house of Samuel Bond, in Cecil county, in the province of Maryland. The families to which Nottingham is central are six; whereof eight persons are baptized: Daniel Osborn, Joseph Osborn, Samuel Bond, Richard Bond, Richard Claston, Abigail Price, Ann Bond, Mary Bond. Here a yearly meeting is kept on the last Sabbath in August. This was their state in 1770. They originated from the Keithians at Upper Providence, as described in page 198. But having no minister among them, and lying wide one of another, they have not increased. The other society of them is at French Creek in East Nautinel township, county of Chester, about thirty-two miles from Philadelphia. Here is a meeting-house, 30 feet by 22, built in 1762, on a lot of one acre, the gift of David Rogers. The families belonging to the place are six; whereof ten persons are baptized: Philip Thomas, Owen Griffiths, David Rogers, Abel Griffiths, James Roberts, William Griffiths, Daniel Griffiths, Owen Hughes, Edward and Ann Hughes. They have no stated worship in this house, though it is the only one belonging to the Sabbatarians. This was their state in 1770. They originated in the year 1726, when the following persons broke off from the Great Valley Church, on account of their change of sentiments concerning the Sabbath: Philip Davis, Lewis Williams, Richard Edwards, Griffy Griffiths; and the next year William James. These five with their families removed to French Creek in the aforesaid year. Philip Davis and Lewis Williams did preach among them, and after them John Brayman; but for some time past they have been as sheep without a shepherd.—Thus have we seen 1, that there are in Pennsylvania of the Seventh-day Baptists, 26 families, containing 130 souls, allowing 5 to a family; whereof 31 are baptized. 2. That they originated from the Keithian Baptists, about the year 1700, by means of Abel Noble. 3. That they have two yearly meetings; and one meeting-house. To which we may add, that they have one minister. He is Rev. Enoch David. He was born Feb. 22, 1718, at Duck Creek, in the county of Kent. Went among the Indians in 1740; called to the ministry, at Welshart, in 1751; embraced the sentiments of the Sabbatarians in 1752; ordained in Oct. 16, 1769. He has had four wives by whom he has children, Marian, Ebenezer, Susanna, Elizabeth, Zedekiah, Elizabeth, Daniel, and Owen. Ebenezer is now at Rhode Island College.

LECTURES ON THE HEBREW COMMONWEALTH.

We mentioned last week, that Prof. WINES had been engaged by a Society in this city, to deliver his course of lectures on the "Hebrew Commonwealth." He has fulfilled his engagement to the admiration of his hearers. The following report of two of his lectures will bring out points new to many of our readers. We take them from the New York Tribune.

THE GREAT MAXIMS OF MOSES' CIVIL POLITY.

The first fundamental principle of the government was the entire political equality of the citizens. The lecturer would lay down this proposition without qualification. The natural foundation of power, he said, is property in the soil. Wherever the lands of a country were, there was the governing power. If the lands belonged to a sovereign, he would be a despot, the people slaves. If but a few owned the soil, the power would be in the hands of the aristocracy. But if the lands were divided among the whole body of citizens, all would be upon the same political and social level, and the government of course a democracy. Such was the case among the Hebrews.

The second maxim on which Moses laid the foundations of the State, was the discouragement of a spirit of war and conquest. At this annunciation the thoughts of the audience would perhaps recur to the extermination of the Canaanites. But it should be borne in mind, that this was by special warrant from Heaven, for a specific purpose—the punishment of idolatry and unnatural lust. Almost all the internal regulations of the government looked to a state of peace.

The doctrine that agriculture constituted the best basis of the prosperity and happiness of a nation, was the third great principle of the Mosaic Constitution. Not a single regulation favoring foreign commerce was found in the entire code. This was remarkable, and would strike many persons, particularly in a commercial emporium, with astonishment. Doubtless one cause of this was, that Moses wished to separate the Israelites as much as possible from other nations, for the prevention of idolatry. But indeed was foreign commerce, he asked, the greatest blessing a State could enjoy? Was it the greatest enricher of nations? Did the Israelites find it so under Solomon? The treasure by it obtained was a golden weight, that crushed their free institutions. And had not we ourselves felt the evil effects of an over-estimate of foreign commerce, and a consequent neglect of agriculture? Was it not one of the causes of that terrible financial convulsion, which a few years ago shook this country like an earthquake? Moses endeavored to make his countrymen content under their own vines and fig-trees, and to convince them that in the unambitious but honorable labors of husbandry they would find their truest happiness and prosperity.

A fourth fundamental principle of the government was universal education. Here the constitution shone with peculiar lustre. Moses took the greatest pains to ensure the instruction of all the children in the State, particularly in the knowledge of the laws, religion, and their own history. He did not, like Lycurgus, tear them at a tender age, from the parental roof, but he enjoined upon parents to be constantly busy in developing and storing the minds of their offspring, and in giving the moral and social principles of their nature a right direction. Teaching was one of the chief functions of the Levites.

A fifth principle was the encouragement of union—the union of hearts, opinions and sympathies, throughout the nation. And this was far more effectually secured by the annual and other festivals than it was among the Greeks by that stroke of mere worldly policy—the institution of the public games.

A just balance of power between all the departments of Government was the final maxim of political wisdom, on which the polity of Moses was founded. Never was this great and wise principle more thoroughly inwrought into a political organization than in the Commonwealth of Israel.

WAR-LAWS—SLAVERY—MOSES AS A LEADER.

The war-laws of antiquity were first reviewed. A vivid and graphic picture was drawn of the horrors exercised by ancient conquerors toward their vanquished enemies. One could not fail to be filled with astonishment at the barbarity and cruelty that reigned every where. Asiatics, Egyptians, Greeks and Romans were in this respect all alike. Death or slavery was the common portion of the vanquished. And the horrid practice of poisoning the arrows used in battle was well nigh universal. The general war-system of Moses was much milder than that of any other ancient nation. The severities exercised toward the Canaanites were for a specific purpose, and did not belong to the regulations affecting other nations.

The institution of slavery was discussed at length. We know not when it commenced; its origin was lost amid the vague uncertainties of tradition. But we know the almost incredible extent to which it was carried, and the horrid cruelties to which it gave rise. Even the virtuous Cato declared that an old plow and a worn-out slave should be treated in the same manner. Every slave in Sparta, though faithful as the sun, received each year a certain number of stripes, just to remind him of his bondage! Vedius Apollo, the intimate and friend of Augustus, fed his pet fishes with the flesh of his slaves! An entire island in the Tiber was devoted to the reception of aged, sick and infirm slaves. They went there, not to be nursed by gentle hands, but to enjoy the miserable boon—the kindest, however, their masters ever bestowed upon them—to expire! How different a thing was slavery, so far as it existed, under the Mosaic laws. The Hebrew slave was to enjoy all the religious rights and privileges of his master. He was to be instructed in the knowledge of Jehovah and pass under the rites of God's covenant. His person was to be guarded from all severity, and he was to be treated with brotherly affection and kindness.

From the subject of Slavery, the Professor passon to an examination of the qualifications of Moses as captain of the hosts of Israel. Here the lecturer became exceedingly animated and eloquent. His enlogy on the life and character of the great Jewish legislator, for comprehension, discrimination, truth, force, and finished beauty, was equal to anything we ever heard from a public speaker. He spoke of Moses as a law-giver, poet, orator, historian, and chief magistrate, in all which characters he remained unequaled to the present day. His laws had become those of civilization generally; his poetry was the highest out-pourings of sublimity; his history was a perfect model for the study of the philosophical historian; all his appeals to his countrymen were full of pathos, truth, fervor, and manifest benevolence, and would forever command the admiration of Bible readers; as a ruler, he was cool, sagacious, energetic, prompt, patriotic, just, magnanimous, free from all selfish ambition, a hearty lover of truth, and of incorruptible integrity. The influence of his genius and writings still survived, as benign and vigorous now as at the moment of his death. The whole civilized world had felt, and feels, and to the end of time would continue to feel, the quickening power of his more than human compositions.

The lecturer concluded with an earnest appeal to his audience to eschew the narrow bigotry, which, in the meridian light of that "salvation which is of the Jews," could yet despise and oppress the people through whom it was derived. European governments still raised an adamantine wall of civil disabilities around the Jew. He was treated by most of them as if he had neither human rights nor human feelings. Thanks to the God of Israel, it was otherwise with us. Here the Jew and Christian stood upon the same level. This city had seen an Israelite a Judge over Christians; and in Baltimore there was a Jew, the venerable Solomon Etting, whose decease would be mourned by the whole population of that city. The lecturer said he was proud of the Catholicism of his countrymen. He was happy that in this country persecution had never vexed the Israelites in the peaceful retirement of domestic, life, nor had exclusion from political privilege for opinion's sake been ever practiced. When God shall judge the nations, may he in mercy remember the land that, "with all its faults," has yet afforded a home and a refuge to the children of Abraham!

GRATUITOUS SWEARING.—Men will swear and transgress the third commandment for nothing—but they do not like to invoke the curse of Almighty for a reward. Mr. Romain hearing a man call on God to curse him, offered him a half a crown if he would repeat the oath. The man started; what, said he, do you think I would curse my soul for a half a crown? Mr. Romain answered, "as you did it just now for nothing, I could not suppose that you would refuse it for a reward." The poor fellow was struck by the reproof, and said, "may God bless you and reward you, sir, whoever you are. I believe you have saved my soul. I hope I shall never swear again."

If what you have received from God, you share to the poor, you thereby gain a blessing; but if what you have taken from the poor, you give to God, you purchase thereby a curse; for he that puts the pious usury, robs the spital to build a hospital; and the cry of the one will outplead the other.

THE HEART.

The human heart—that restless thing!
The tempter and the tried;
The joyous, yet the suffering—
The source of pain and pride;
The gorgeous thronged, the desolate—
The seat of love, the lair of hate—
Self-strong and self-defied!
Yet do we bless thee as thou art,
Thou restless thing, the human heart.

"BLESSED ARE THE DEAD."

The world says, blessed are the living—especially those who are living in affluence, honor, and pleasure;—but God says, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

"The world, (says McCheyne,) looks upon some of their families, coming out like a fresh blooming flower in the morning—their cheeks covered with the bloom of health—their steps bounding with the elasticity of youth—riches and luxuries at their command—long, bright summer days before them; the world says, there is a happy soul. God takes us into the darkened room, where some child of God lately dwelt. He points to the pale face, where death sits enthroned—the cheek wasted by long disease—the eye glazed in death—the stiff hands clasped over the bosom—the friends standing weeping around, and he whispers in our ears, 'Blessed are the dead.' Ah, dear friends, think a moment, whether does God or you know best? . . . . It is a happy thing to live in the favor of God; to have peace with God—to frequent the throne of grace—to burn the perpetual incense of praise—to meditate on his word—to hear the preached gospel—to serve God—even to wrestle, run, and fight in his service, is sweet. Still God says, 'Blessed are the dead.' If it be happy to have his smile here, how much happier to have it without a cloud yonder. If it be sweet to be the growing corn of the Lord here, how much better to be gathered into his barn! If it be sweet to have an anchor within the veil, how much better ourselves to be there, where no gloom can come! 'In thy presence is fullness of joy—at thy right hand are pleasures for ever more.' Even Jesus felt this: God attests it. 'Blessed are the dead.'"

INDEPENDENCE OF THE PRESS.

Says the Brooklyn Daily Advertiser, "We do not want a man to subscribe to our journal who has a soul so small as to ring out the change of 'Stop my paper,' should we happen to admit an article that does not exactly accord with his views. We wish this understood. More than that—if we can find out any individual disposed to cavil at our course, he can not have our paper at any price. We claim the right to exercise the liberty of the press, so long as it is done for good and justifiable motives."

There is sound sense as well as manly independence in these sentiments, and we honor the man who acts in accordance with them. It is not to be expected that an editor can express everybody's taste. But suppose he could do it, and made that his highest rule of action, what confidence could the public repose in his honesty? It is the duty of editors, as it is of all others, to please all men, when it can be done "for their good to edification," but not otherwise. What sort of an opinion does that man form of the principles and conscience and self-respect of an editor, who undertakes to operate upon him by the threat, 'Stop my paper?' Does such a man judge the editor by himself? Is he so ready to be flattered, or bribed, or bullied out of his opinions, that he naturally tries the effect of it on others? Suppose this doctrine to prevail, so that every editor who dared to have a soul of his own, was driven from the field to give place to a craven spirited, drivelling crew, whose highest aim should be to please everybody, would that be a public benefit? That is the tendency of the 'stop my paper' argument—an argument which appeals to no honorable or manly feeling, but only to cupidity, to meanness, and to cowardice; and which could excite no emotion but of contempt or pity towards him who uses it. An editor may be just about as liable to err as other men of equal information and wisdom, but having so many more opportunities, and exposures, he has some claim to leniency. And it must be remembered too, that if he is fit for his station, he will be likely to have a degree of self-respect, or at least respect for his position, and for his readers, which, although he might receive a kind, frank, fraternal appeal, or even a paternal expostulation or admonition, would incline him to treat with very little ceremony, men who could approach him with no argument but a threat, and that too of the meanest character. He must have very little confidence in the power of truth and honesty, who would be frightened out of his course by threats of this sort. [Christian Watchman.

PREPARATION FOR DEATH.—When you lie down at night compose your spirits as if you were not to awake till the heavens be no more. And when you awake in the morning, consider that new day as your last, and live accordingly. Surely that night cometh, of which you will never see the morning, or that morning of which you will never see the night; but which of your mornings or nights will be such you know not. Let the mantle of worldly enjoyments hang loose about you, that it may be easily dropt when death comes to carry you into another world. When the corn is forsaking the ground, it is ready for the sickle; when the fruit is ripe, it falls off the tree easily. So when the Christian's heart is truly weaned from the world, he is prepared for death, and it will be the more easy for him. A heart disengaged form the world, is a heavenly one, and then we are ready for heaven when our hearts are there before us. [Barton.

THE JEWS.—Forty-five Jewish Missionaries (says the Boston Recorder) are now preaching among their countrymen the gospel of that Saviour, whom, as a nation, they have for eighteen hundred years rejected.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 23, 1845.

UNITY AND SECTARIANISM OF THE CHURCH.

We hear a great deal in these days about the unity of the church of Christ and the "leprosy of sectarianism." If one could really believe half which is written on the subject, he would tremble at the thought of schism, and flee with all possible haste to the bosom of the mother church. But we happen to be among the number generally accounted schismatics or heretics, and we find it difficult to believe some of the hard things which are said about those who stand in a similar position. We doubt much whether sectarianism abounds at the present time more than in former times; and we are quite confident, that some of those who are loudest in their denunciation of sects as the great obstacle to the progress of the Gospel, are the most obstinate and palpable sectarists in the whole country Take for instance the members of the Romish Church, who have most to say about the unity of the church and the evils of division—what are they but sectarists, when they treat all who differ from them, even in the most unimportant respects, as heretics? Or, take her English daughter, who turns over nearly all the Protestant denominations upon the uncovenanted mercies of God—does she not contain and exhibit the very essence and soul of sectarianism? And yet these two sects have made the greatest outcry against divisions and in behalf of union—these two sects, we say, whose love for union and catholicism is shown by shutting out from the church all denominations except their own.

There is at the present time, undoubtedly, too great a variety of denominations. Unimportant differences are too often allowed to originate separations; and when separations have once taken place, they are too often continued by uncharitable judgments and harsh denunciations. Yet there may be a great variety of denominations without the exhibition of a great deal of what really deserves the name of sectarianism. Difference of denomination does not necessarily imply sectarianism. Difference of administration may be found under the same spirit; so there may be different denominations, while there is but one Lord, one faith, one baptism. The trouble does not arise from drawing the line of distinction where a difference really exists, but from drawing lines where there is no difference, and then contending stoutly that there is a difference. Of course the difference between those who obey God and those who obey him not, is a palpable and important difference, separating the two parties from each other, wherever they exist, as far as the east is from the west. This difference is so marked that it ought to be indicated by outward arrangements as well as inward feelings; where it is thus indicated, instead of leading one party to denounce the other, it will prompt to efforts for their enlightenment and restoration to the path of obedience. But the difference about whether presbyteries or congregations shall govern the movements of preachers and churches—whether Watts' version of the Psalms shall be sung, or the version of somebody else—these are differences which do not involve disobedience to a plain divine commandment. To perpetuate them is not particularly praiseworthy or blameworthy. But for those who do perpetuate them to raise a hue and cry against the sectarianism of those who are contending for a plainly-written yet generally-neglected divine commandment, is as foolish as it is inconsistent.

It is quite questionable, to say the least of it, whether that union about which the enemies of the Protestant church have had so much to say is upon the whole desirable. The Romish Church before the Reformation enjoyed something of this union. Yet it was all the while a frozen, formal, apostate church. When God saw fit to breath upon it the breath of life, that breath was a whirlwind to break up a heartless and ruinous union, which probably appeared very desirable to superficial observers, but which was after all only the union of formality and despotism. So it has always been. Whenever God has seen fit to revive pure and undefiled religion in any community, that revival has been connected with overturns and disturbances which were exceedingly unwelcome to formalists. He has thus broken up the fallow ground, and prepared it to receive the good seed. Our Saviour taught us to expect that such would be the process, when he assured his disciples that he came not to bring peace but a sword. The experience of the church from that day to this has shown, that it is by overturn succeeding overturn that the way is prepared for Him to reign whose right it is.

After all that has been said in the way of complaint and lamentation, there are signs that God is breaking down the walls of partition, and drawing the different members of the Christian family closer to each other. The open hostility of the Romish Church to many of our religious institutions, and the vigorous efforts which that church is making to establish its own institutions, has contributed to help on the work. Add to this the influence of the larger societies for encouraging missions and sending the word of life to the different nations, and who can tell how soon the members of the Protestant Church in this country may be brought to see eye to eye? The multiplied intrigues and worldly maxims of Romanism have shown to Protestants the necessity of holding fast the maxims and spirit of the Word of God. The variety of doctrines among Protestants themselves has shown the importance of one infallible standard to which all differences may be brought for reconciliation. The obstacles thrown in the way of promoting the Christian cause by nominal differences where there was no real distinction, has taught the importance of kindness and concession. In such circumstances, we cannot sympathize with the fears of those who scold so much about sectarianism; nor can we rejoice in the hope of exterminating sects by forcing them all into one great mother church.

THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES.

The Jewish Feast of Tabernacles commenced this year on the 16th day of October, and continued the usual period of seven days. It always follows close upon the great Day of Atonement, with which it contrasts stangely, being a season of high joy and festivity, instead of deep sorrow and abstinence.

The authority to which the Jews refer for the observance of this festival, is found in Leviticus 23: 33, 34, where the Lord told Moses to "speak unto the children of Israel, saying, the fifteenth day of the seventh month shall be the feast of tabernacles for seven days unto the Lord." The manner of its observance is described in the same chapter by these words, "Ye shall take you on the first day the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook, and ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days; ye shall dwell in booths seven days; all that are Israelites born shall dwell in booths." The reason for its observance is also given, "that your generations may know, that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths when I brought them out of the land of Egypt." The time of its observance is fixed at the seventh month, "when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land;" which circumstance makes it a sort of national "harvest-home."

Although the Jews have long since ceased to be an agricultural people, and have been driven far away from the land in which this commandment was given them, they still maintain the ancient festival with great interest and strictness. At the appointed time they erect their booths in the vicinity of the synagogues, where they take their meals during the continuance of the festival, and where in some countries it is customary to sleep when the weather permits. These booths are generally built of boards, and have roofs so arranged by means of hinges at the eaves with cords and pullies, that at the peak they can be opened or closed at pleasure. They must be erected under the open sky, and must be either thatched or left so much open as to allow of seeing the stars. Here the four kinds of boughs spoken of in the Scriptures are arranged according to prescribed modes. One kind, the citron, they say, is the emblem of the Great First Cause, the Holy One; another kind, the palm, denotes spiritual beings; a third, the myrtle, is symbolical of the astral world, which is material; and a fourth kind, the willows of the brook, represents this lower world, which is subject to dissolution. The last three of these are placed together, to indicate that all created things form but one whole, and are created for one grand purpose and governed by one lawgiver. They are held together by the citron, to denote that all things depend upon and are supported by the one Great Cause. This account of the reasons for using the four kinds of boughs certainly has the merit of ingenuity, but it of course rests only upon tradition, since the Scriptures are totally silent upon the subject.

To us there is something exceedingly touching in these festival celebrations of the Jews. They carry us back to the time when the judges and kings and prophets of Israel appeared in the sanctuary with their green branches and songs of praise. They bring before us the promises which God has made to his chosen people, so long without a home or country, so widely scattered, and so cruelly peeled and persecuted. They carry us forward to the time, which shall come, when "the ploughman shall overtake the reaper, and the trader of grapes him that soweth seed, and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and all the hills shall melt;"—when the Lord shall bring again the captivity of his people Israel, "and they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them, and they shall plant vines and drink the wine thereof, and they shall also make gardens and eat the fruit of them;"—when the Lord shall "plant them upon their own land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land;"—when "all nations shall come up to Jerusalem to worship the King the Lord of Hosts, and to keep the Feast of Tabernacles."

A GOOD LETTER.

The following letter from a subscriber in Michigan, we publish for the double purpose of commending the example, and showing what privations some of our brethren endure:—

DEAR BROTHER:—I am at length enabled to send you a little money, [five dollars.] Unavoidable losses have rendered it impracticable for me to do so sooner. The reflection that you were in want of the money due from us, has been quite a drawback upon the pleasure we derive from the perusal of your invaluable paper. It is indeed invaluable in our circumstances. We are a solitary family of Sabbath-keepers, and have not seen an individual who observes the Sabbath during the five years we have resided here, except our own family. The force of circumstances, not choice, caused us to separate ourselves from our Eastern brethren, and seek a residence here. Notwithstanding the trials and privations to which our situation subjects us, we feel to put our trust in God, and strive to walk in the path of obedience earnestly desiring that God would bring us again to his holy mountain and make us joyful in his house of prayer.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

DIED,

At her residence in Petersburgh, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., on the morning of the 11th inst., Mrs. ESTEE, consort of Rev. Azor Estee.

The circumstances connected with the death of this excellent lady are indescribably painful. She had been suffering much for a considerable time from a diseased state of the liver, stomach, and head, which produced dejection of spirits and melancholy, and a settled impression that her mind would become completely deranged. Her sufferings of body and mind had weakend and wasted her to a great extent. A few days previous to her death, she conversed freely with her husband upon the subject of her declining health, her fears, and her temptations. He used his most persuasive efforts to compose and comfort her, and guard her mind against any act of hostility to herself. Although he was impressed that she was suffering from a partial mental alienation, (a disease which had attended several of her family connections,) yet he was confident that he had succeeded in his effort, and was therefore not prepared to look for the calamity which was about to fall upon him. On Sabbath morning, after a short absence from her family, sister Estee was found not far from her dwelling, quite dead, with a wound in her throat which had separated a principal artery. Her funeral was numerously attended on the 13th. The sermon was preached by Eld. Wm. B. Maxson from Psalms 77: 7.

Thus a sister has fallen—one who was much beloved by all who knew her, as a devoted and consistent Christian—one who was remarkable for her conscientious promptitude in the duties of her Christian profession. In the church, in the conference, and in the prayer-meeting, she was prompt in her attendance, and much engaged in her duty. But most of all were her Christian graces developed in her family. Here her conjugal and maternal relations were so sustained, and her domestic duties so performed, as to manifest to all who knew her there, that she was properly fitted for the various offices she was destined to sustain. But she has gone, and in such a manner as to overwhelm us with affliction and astonishment. Surely it must be that God has a controversy with his people. And it is hoped that he has permitted this awful occurrence for a chastisement and a warning, rather than a sign of his fierce anger towards his delinquent church, as was the death of the prophet's wife to backsliding Israel, (See Ezek. ch. 17, from verse 15th.) May our deeply afflicted brother have not only the kind sympathies of his brethren, but the support of their fervent prayers.

FORM OF PETITION.

The following Petition to the Legislature of the State of New York in regard to the law for the protection of Sabbath-keepers, came to us in a printed form through the post office. We presume copies have been forwarded to the different churces throughout the State, and we sincerely hope that no pains will be spared to give them a wide circulation. Let the next Legislature see that the people are in favor of granting us the free exercise of our religious opinions.

To the Legislature of the State of New York:

The Petition of the undersigned, inhabitants of the County of ——, respectfully sheweth: That an Act was passed by the Legislature of this State on the 7th of May, 1839, for the protection of the members of the denomination of professing Christians called Seventh-day Baptists, against the service of civil process on the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday; but that said Act, according to a late decision of the Supreme Court, does not exempt the members of said denomination from liability to serve as parties, witnesses or jurors, on the seventh day of the week, which they regard and observe as the Christian Sabbath, and to be set apart as holy time, and dedicated to the service of Almighty God.

Your Petitioners, therefore, humbly pray, that your honorable body will pass an Act, or so alter and amend the aforesaid Act, as to exempt the members of said denomination from any liability to be served with, or to answer to, any civil process on the senventh day of the week, or to attend upon any Court of Justice as witnesses or jurors, or any military training or court martial, and secure to them the privilege of enjoying said day as a day of rest from all secular concerns, and of dedicating it exclusively to the service of their Creator, according to their religious belief and the dictates of their consciences, and to protect them in the enjoyment of their religious privileges on that day in the same manner that those who observe the first day of the week as a day of rest, are protected on that day. And as in duty bound will ever pray.

Dated, Oct. 10, 1845.

NEW YORK PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—A meeting of the Ward School Teacher's Association was held at the Tabernacle a few evenings since. Mr. Rich, the President, in his opening remarks, said, there is nothing so much misunderstood as public education in New York. It has unfortunately been mixed up with party politics. Years past this matter was left to the School Commissioners. In 1841 there were over 14,000 children between 4 and 16 years of age; they managed well, but yet did not obtain the confidence of all classes, though they deserved well; the Legislature passed a law to have two Commissioners, two Inspectors, and five Trustees, &c.; those under the Ward Officers were called Ward Schools, and those under control of the Public School Society were called Public Schools. The trustees and inspectors were to have control of all new schools. In these Ward Schools over 9,000 children attended, and over 2,000 is the increase in the Public Schools in four years; making a total of 24,000 children attending those schools here supported by a public tax, being an increase of over 70 per cent. Such are the beneficial effects of this law. Our schools challenge comparison with all others in our country or the world.

MORTALITY AMONG RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPERS.—In a late number of one of our Presbyterian exchanges, we find a long article about the difficulty of sustaining religious newspapers. Among other striking things, the editor states, that he has been connected with the press for eighteen years past, during which time more than four-fifths of the religious newspapers established in the Presbyterian and corresponding churches have failed for want of due patronage. Such facts show the exceeding difficulty of carrying on religious papers, and the imperative necessity of persevering efforts on the part of their agents and friends.

PERSECUTION IN TURKEY.—The Malta Times publishes a narrative of the seizure and imprisonment at Constantinople of a young man of high respectability, and one of the rulers of his nation in Trebizond. The only reason given for the proceeding was, that the young man was a Christian and a Protestant. It is said that there are numerous other instances in various parts of Turkey, where persons have been seized and imprisoned for no other reason than because they held religious opinions which were unpopular. If an Armenian becomes a Papist, he is in little danger of molestation, because ambassadors from Roman Catholic countries stand ready to throw the shield of their protection over him. But if he becames a Protestant, he has no such protection, and is exposed at once to all the fury of fanaticism.

A CLANDESTINE LEAGUE.—According to the Schnellpost, recent developments render it probable that there exists in Switzerland a clandestine league, the design of which is to overthrow the present religious and social arrangements of that country. One of the papers characterizes it as a great society of Atheists, aiming to effect by Atheism the overthrow of all moral principles and to arrive at a violent reform of the entire religious, social, and political organization of Germany, by means of regicide even.' The existence of the league was discovered as early as June last, and several persons were arrested, although the proof against them was insufficient for their conviction. Since then more proof has come to hand, and ten of the leaders have been arrested, among whom are several schoolmasters and one editor. The society is a secret and essentially political propoganda having its central office in Switzerland, and receiving only such persons as are found to be true atheists and revolutionists. It has twenty-eight political clubs in all the principal towns of Switzerland.

FIRE NEAR HOME.—On Monday evening last, about half past six o'clock, a fire broke out in the basement of the building No. 11 Spruce St. being next door to our office. It originated in a bottling-cellar under the auction store of Thomas Bell. A porter went down into the cellar with a light in his hand for the purpose of drawing off some alcohol; the alcohol took fire, and the porter retreated after having been severely burned in the attempt to extinguish it. The flames caught rapidly upon the combustible matter in the vicinity, burst out with great fury through the gratings, rushed up the stairway, spread through the floors of the upper rooms, and wrapped the whole building in one sheet of flame in a few minutes. It was with the greatest difficulty that the men at work in the upper stories of the building escaped with their lives. One man made his escape by passing through the flames on the stairs; some others went up through the roof and down through the adjoining buildings; and several who were at work in the second story crawled out of the windows and down by the signs and spout. By the praiseworthy exertions of the firemen, the flames were prevented from spreading beyond the building in which they originated, so that our office, though flooded with water, received but little injury. We learn that all the stereotype plates, and all the valuable engravings, of Hewett's Illustrated edition of Shakspeare, were in the burnt building, and were destroyed. Also the stereotype plates of the Book of Common Prayer, and of a French Prayer Book just completed.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—If it does our readers half as much good as it does us to see things done right, they will not begrudge the room occupied by the following letter, which we received yesterday. We publish it both to acknowledge the receipt of the money, and to present an example worthy of imitation.

☞ We are glad to see the name of JOHN MAXSON among the nominees for Assembly from Madison County, N. Y. It is a long step, one would think, from the county jail to the halls of legislation. Mr. Maxson has just been honored by the former place, and we are sure he would honor the latter. We sincerely hope, therefore, he may be elected.

☞ In another column will be found a notice of the opening of the winter term of the Plainfield Family School. From our acquaintance with the Principal, and with the location of the School, we have no hesitation in recommending it to the patronage of the public.

TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.—A Convention of the friends of Temperance in the State of New York, was to be held at Rochester on Wednesday, the 22d. We are glad to see that a portion of the people are awake on this subject. No truth is better established than that all alcoholic drinks are poisonous and injurious to the human system; that they generate habits of idleness and debauchery, and naturally lead on to poverty and crime. Let the whole people be roused to banish artificial and hurtful stimulants, and the country would soon be freed from the giant curses of gambling and improvidence.

AN INTERESTING SCENE.

A Scotch traveler gives the following description of a service on Sunday in Beyrout. It was conducted by the American missionaries, and furnishes a striking illustration of the power of the Gospel to elevate and unite the feelings of different races and classes of men:—

"At 3 P. M.," says the traveler, "we went to the mission-house above the town, and round the door found several of the Syrian boys, members of the mission-school, waiting for the commencement of the Arabic service. Sitting down under the shade of the mulberry trees, we conversed with them. Two of them spoke English remarkably well, and went over the Old Testament history accurately, as far as the wanderings of Israel, accompanying every answer with most expressive looks and gestures. One of them especially was full of liveliness, and on asking him the story of Moses, wishing to see Lebanon, related it fully, pointing to the lofty mountain towering before us. Three others, sitting by, occasionally added a remark, while old Bishop Karabet, and many others looked on from the steps above. Soon after the Arabic service commenced in a large airy room, divided by a partition, except the place where the missionary stood. The women sat on one side of the partition, the men on the other, according to the custom of the Christian churches of this country, (Scotland,) the preacher standing within sight of both parts of the congregation. Mr. Thowpson preached in deeply-toned Arabic, to an attentive audience of about one hundred and thirty, gathered out of many different countries. There were two Armenian Bishops, Karabet, and Jacob Aga, with clean venerable beards; there were Greeks and Greek Catholics; an Abyssinian Christian, and a Druse, converted Jews, American Presbyterians, and Congregationalists, and ministers of the Church of Scotland—all different in name, and yet, we trust, one in Christ.

"The service closed, and we removed to a more convenient upper chamber, to partake of the Lord's Supper. The Armenian manner of administering this sacrament differs little from ours, except that they give thanks a second time before giving the cup, in close imitation of our Lord. One of us sat between two believing Jews, the other between two Armenian bishops. Many of the others also participated, so that it was an emblem of the meeting of the great multitude, gathered from all nations and kindred, at our Father's table above."

THE BAPTISTS.

The following statistics of the Baptist denomination are taken from the Baptist Almanac and Register for 1845:—

"The Baptists in Maine number 22,628; in New Hampshire 10,148; in Vermont 10,170; in Massachusetts 30,945; in Rhode Island 7,309; in Connecticut 15,922. In each of the New England States there has been a loss, except Connecticut, which has a gain of 581. In the State of New York their whole number is 93,855, and the loss 4,702; New Jersey numbers 11,571, with a gain of 119; Pennsylvania numbers 28,800, with a gain of 805; Virginia numbers 79,134, gain 3,020; North Carolina 31,066, gain 742; South Carolina 39,687, gain 1,010; Georgia 45,363, gain 1,799; Florida 972, gain 302; Alabama 26,207, gain 556; Louisiana 3,018, gain 281; Texas 758; Arkansas 1,771; Mississippi 17,155, gain 850; Tennessee 29,219, gain 3,788; Kentucky 60,160, gain 1,145; Missouri 15,331, gain 963; Illinois 12,328, gain 1,058; Indiana 18,988, gain 3,193; Ohio 26,573, gain 13; Michigan 8,447, gain 507; Wisconsin 1,284; Iowa 4,113, gain 228.

"The general summary makes the whole number of Baptists in the United States 651,332; Anti-mission Baptists 68,641; grand total 719,973. Total loss 8118; total gain 21,927. If to the aforesaid grand total are added the six principle Baptists, Seventh-day, Freewill, Reformers, and others, the total in the United States is 1,047,535.

"The summary of other Christian denominations in the United States shows the aggregate of 2,315,492; add Baptists to this and the aggregate of sects is 3,559,991. The population of the United States is put at 22,000,000, and the Papists at about 1,000,000.

FROM THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The Female Seminary at Wailuku, has been blessed with indications of the Lord's presence, and six of the hopeful converts have been propounded for admission into the church, and many others are indulging a hope.

A Thanksgiving Festival has been recently celebrated, in which the natives were exceedingly interested. Very few who have taken the temperance pledge, have violated it. The church in Wailuku has contributed for domestic and foreign objects, $544 72. At one station they have subscribed more than enough to support their missionary.

MADURA MISSION.—An individual that pays the government $7,000 annually, who had become acquainted with the gospel, sought an opportunity to converse with the missionary. "Do not I know," said he, "that these idols are nothing but stone?" And again he said, "come to us and teach us, and I will do just as you say; I will be like a little dog that you have trained for yourself?" I asked him through an interpreter, "Are you willing that all your people should learn and embrace Christianity?" He replied, "When ants have tasted sugar, need you hire them to come and eat?" Under the control of this man are four large heathen temples, and many smaller ones, together with some fifty thousand souls dependent on him as tenants.

CIRCULATION OF THE BIBLE.—The issues of the American Bible Society are increasing. The number reported at the recent meeting of the Board of Managers, as issued during the last month, is more than 56,000 copies; averaging nearly 2000 a day. The receipts in the mean time, were not sufficient to meet the expenses. Bills amounting to $10,000, most of them for paper, remained unpaid.

General Intelligence.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

We mentioned last week the arrival of the steamship Great Britain, and noticed also the most important news brought by her. The following additional items will interest our readers.

Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, after an absence from Windsor of upwards of three months, returned to the Castle on the 25th Sept.

The experiment in cultivating crops by means of electricity is a total failure in all parts of Europe.

A dustman named Riley, being the first kin to General Riley, has succeeded to a fortune of £50,000 the enjoyment of which he commenced by giving a dinner to all the dustmen in London, and illuminating the front of his house.

At the Norfolk Agricultural Dinner, Lord Hastings said he had witnessed at Durham a sale of eighty bulls, at en enormous price, to the agents of foreign countries, and there was an equal anxiety exhibited to get our horses.

The Hutchinson family from Boston have been giving a series of successful concerts at Liverpool.

Rev. James West, a clergyman of the Church of England, who had been remanded under the name of James Fletcher, was brought up on a charge of illegally pawning the goods from his ready-furnished apartments.

It is the popular belief in some parts of Hampshire, that the black fever, mercifully sparing human beings, has seized upon the potatoes.

It is asserted that Mr. Fredrick Rickets, Vice Chairman of the Bristol and Exeter Railway, has cleared £160,000 in the last four months by railway speculations.

The Irish Collegiate Bill is again being revived in all the intensity and virulence of discussion, by a protest, on the part of the Irish Catholic Bishops and Archbishops, against the measure. It appears that seventeen of these ecclesiastics are against and nine in favor of the bill.

The Marseilles journals state that Don Carlos and his Consort have at length been released from the captivity in which they have been kept by their kinsman Louis Phillippe. Don Carlos is about to proceed to Rome, calling on his way at Genoa, in order to see two of his sons, who have entered the service of the King of Sardinia.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times states that the French Government has become heartily ashamed of the ridiculous position which it occupies at Tahiti, and that it has determined to abandon the island. The report is confirmed by the fact of a vessel which was about to sail from Brest to the Pacific with reinforcements, having been countermanded.

The Paris Moniteure announces that the Government will soon publish precise accounts of the character and progress of the disease of the potatoes, with the best means of preventing its development, and of using this year's crop without danger to the health of men and animals.

Two men tickled a girl to death in the environs of Paris lately. First she laughed heartily, then convulsive heaves of the chest succeeded. She rose, but immediately fell and expired.

Railway conveyance, both for passengers and goods, is about to be introduced into India, under auspices which is most promising of advantage, both to the public and the proprietors. The prospectus of the East India Railway Company has just been published at Calcutta.

The continental news is without much interest. The King of Saxony had opened the diet, in a speech which reflects his anxiety respecting the recent occurrences connected with the religious movement. The Prussian Government views the Abbe Ronge with the same suspicion as before; and he was prevented from sleeping in Manheim, when he passed through it. The Queen and the Queen-mother have arrived at Madrid; and, although the capital was quiet, fears of an outbreak existed. Switzerland is like a smothered volcano; an explosion may be looked for.

Forty-six men were recently drowned at Brest by a sudden squall which overtook the war steamer Doria, by which she filled and sunk.

The Jesuits of St. Acheul being dispersed by order of their superiors, have sold the Maison de Blament, which they possessed at the gates of Amiens. This important establishment, which formerly contained 200 students, has been purchased by the Dames du Bon Pasteur as a refuge for repentant young women.

Accounts from the central provinces of Russia state that the potatoe crop there was free from disease, but that corn was still quite green, and that it was suffering from the ravages of a small insect resembling the common flea.

A dreadful event occurred on the 2d ult. between Belluno and Feltre. Two hundred Italian soldiers were maneuvering under the command of an Austrian officer, who ordered them to cross a ruinous bridge, the passage of which had been forbidden by the local authorities on account of the danger. The bridge gave way, with the two hundred men upon it, and they fell into the river and were drowned. The officer, being in advance, had reached the other side before the bridge fell.

The steamer "British Queen," was sold at Antwerp, by public auction, on the 16th ult. to Mr. Louis Reinwit, of Antwerp, for 238,000 francs, without the furniture. The destination of this steamer is not known.

In the months of June and July, the heat was so excessive in the south of Russia, that the troops could not march except by night. The drouth has caused great damage, and bad crops are expected this year in that part of Russia.

The Turkish authorities have been busy in the trade of human flesh, and of embarking slaves.

Later Foreign News.—The steamship Hibernia reached Boston on Sunday morning last, bringing seven days later news. She confirms the news brought by the Great Britain in regard to the deficiency of the crops. The potato crop in Belgium is better than was expected. The Russians have been partially defeated in the Caucasian war.

The Newspaper Press.—Rev. Dr. Skinner, of the Mercer street Presbyterian church, N. Y., in a recent interesting lecture, noticed as among the special occasions of thanksgiving and encouragement, the growing disposition of the general Newspaper Press, to present religious intelligence, and topics of moral bearing. He thought it amongst the peculiarly cheering signs of the times, that almost the entire secular press of the city seemed enlisted on the side of religion, virtue, and order. The daily and weekly issues were thus diffusing an amount of conservative principle, such as had never been enjoyed at any previous period; and should the conductors of the American press generally, throughout the land, (as very many are already beginning to do,) record the benevolent movements of the age, and become on all proper occasions the decided advocates of Christianity, education, and good morals, it would, he thought, be the surest guaranty for the perpetuity of our free institutions, and would eminently contribute to make our Republic a distinguished light among the nations.

Encouragement of Agriculture in Turkey.—Although public journals are constantly representing the Mussulman Empire as either in a stationary or in a declining condition, it appears to us that the Turks are thinking much better than the journals say. For The Echo of the Learned World, of the 20th of April, 1845, reports a government regulation published in Constantinople, in favor of agriculture, more encouraging and more paternal than all that the French government has done for us. The following is from The Echo:

"The porte has published a regulation replete with wisdom in reference to agriculture. We remark in it the formation of a council charged with sending an inspector into every province. This functionary is to have a delegate in every district. These delegates are to be elected by the people, and may be either Christians or Mussulmen; they are to search out all the means proper to give to agriculture all possible developments—to inform themselves of the evils suffered by farmers, in order to afford, to those who require it, assistance by loans of money, donations of seeds, agricultural implements—and to facilitate the payment of taxes—and never to allow any cultivator to be imprisoned for debt while the work on the farm is in progress."

Church Quarrel.—In Maysville, Ky., the Methodists are about divided into two nearly equal parties, one of which goes with the Church South, while the other adheres to the old Church. The former having obtained possession of the house of worship, the latter have filed an injunction, setting up their exclusive claim, and praying the Chancellor to interpose in their behalf, and grant them the present use of the house for at least one half the time, till the matter is finally adjusted. Judge Reid granted an injunction to the extent of the use of one half the house, without, however, indicating his opinion as to the ultimate merits of the case.

Extraordinary Mosaics.—As an example of the delicate minuteness of European mosaic-work, it is related in that scientific periodical, "The Builder," published in London, that there is on the continent one exqusite specimen, being a portrait of Pope Paul V., in which the face alone consists of more than a million and a half of fragments, each no larger than a millet seed, and from this size up to two inches square, pieces are employed in various ways. Another celebrated specimen is that which Napoleon ordered to be made when his power was paramount in Italy. It was to be a mosaic copy of the celebrated "Last Supper" by Lenardo de Vinci; and to be of the same size as the original, viz. 24 feet by 12. The artist to whom the task was entrusted was Glacono Raffaelle, and the men under his direction, eight or ten in number, were engaged for eight years on it. The mosaic cost more than seven thousand pounds, and afterwards came into the possession of the Emperor of Austria.

Value of the Pine.—Many of our readers may not be aware of the extent and value of this tree so extensively and almost exclusively the growth of a great part of the light, and almost barren soil of the south. During the past year at Wilmington, N. C., the business has been quite extensive. The quantity of turpentine distilled at that place in the period named, is estimated at 200,000 barrels, worth $400,000; the raw material shipped at 75,000 barrels, valued at $168,000; making the total value of the products of the pine tree for the year $613,100. Corrupt Literature.—"Our greatest hinderance," says Rev. Mr. Baldwin, in a letter from the Sandwich Islands, "is the untold amount of trash in the shape of novels which is spread over the world by shiploads; the refuse of a glutted market at home, floated off here for auction, the captain and crew often seeming as eager to devour their contents as thousands of their number are to swallow bottles of liquid ruin; the one a deadly poison to the soul, as the other to both soul and body." He wishes three good Tracts were written; on novel reading, on licentiousness, and on Sunday-whaling, chiefly addressed to owners at home.

A Convention of American Inventors was called to meet in this city on the 22d inst.; with the view of urging upon Congress such modifications of the Patent laws as will give real security to patent property; to form an association of authors of useful discoveries and improvements, and to adopt such measures as may be deemed expedient to secure their just rights. A Circular has been issued, signed by some of our most distinguished citizens, Dr. Nott, Prof. Renwick, Ald. Cooper, Mr. Ewbank, and others.

The Tribune says, we saw a fugitive Slave a few days ago who alleged that he was assisted to escape by Delia Webster and Mr. Fairbanks. This would seem almost sufficient to settle the question of their participancy in the offence with which they were charged.

SUMMARY.

An instrument has been invented in England, called "Carson's Meat Preserver." It consists of a syringe, having a sharp-pointed nipple, the sides of which are pierced with a number of small holes. The syringe is to be filled with brine, which it forces out of the small holes through the whole body of a piece of meat into which the point has been pressed; and the operation of pickling is thus thoroughly performed in a few minutes.

The proprietors and proprietors' agents of the Magnetic Telegraph, it is said, have it in contemplation to employ a number of competent persons as Congressional correspondents and reporters for the New York press.

An ancient British boat, hollowed from a single tree, and 25 feet long, has been found embedded in the soil of Branston Fen.

The amount of business transacted at the New York Post Office is very large. In the month of July, the enormous number of six hundred and ninety-five thousand two hundred and thirty letters and over two millions of newspapers, were received and forwarded; and yet it is said that even more passed through in the months of August and September.

There is nothing that annoys a tidy housekeeper so much as to have her carpet spotted with lamp oil or grease, and we therefore make known for their benefit, the following recipe for extracting oil or grease spots from carpets or clothes. Cover the grease spot with whiting, and let it remain until it becomes saturated with the grease; then scrape it off, and cover it with another coat of whiting, and if this does not entirely remove the grease, repeat the application. Three coats of whiting will, in most cases, remove the spot, when it should be brushed off with a clothes brush.

The Jackson (West Tennessee) Whig proposes that a new State be erected, composed of West Tennessee, the northern portion of Mississippi, and that portion of Kentucky lying west of the Tennessee river. The district between the Tennessee and Mississippi rivers, would make a State larger than six of the States, and numbers now twenty-four respectable counties, without the addition of any portion of North Mississippi. It comprises thirteen rivers, not including the Tennessee, Ohio and Mississippi rivers, which that paper says, Nature seems to have formed for the boundary line of the State.

The colored people lately held a convention at Geneva, at which a resolution was passed disconnecting themselves with the "third party" abolitionists. They intend to cast their votes for liberal-minded men, irrespective of party.

A motion in favor of the total abolition of capital punishment, has been carried in the Edinburgh Town Council, by a majority of twelve to five.

The emigration westward the past season, by way of the lakes, is said to have exceeded that of any previous year. A correspondent of the Albany Evening Journal states that he lately went up the lakes in a steamboat with 619 passengers, and that he was assured that it was a low estimate to put the passengers at 500 a day, say for 200 days of the season, making 100,000, of whom one-half at least were emigrants.

The Municipal Court at Lexington has sustained the outrage of the Mob which removed Mr. C. M. Clay's True American! The Lexington Observer of the 18th contains a full statement of the proceedings had before the City Court of Lexington, on the arraignment of a part of the Committee of Sixty, by whom Mr. Clay's press was removed, on a charge of riot.

Wm. Carpenter's barn, with a large stock of hay and grain, at Mannington, Salem Co., N. J., was burnt on Tuesday morning, by some incendary. The loss is very heavy. A barn belonging to the Methodist Church in Pennington, Mercer Co., N. J., was burnt Wednesday morning with the wood-work for the new church, carpenter's tools, &c. The loss is about $800, and falls on the trustees and carpenter. This is also attributed to an incendary.

A gentleman of Mobile, Dr. F———, has in his possession the identical watch worn by Benjamin Franklin. Sufficient of flower, says the Mobile Register, originally wrought upon the casing in blue enamel, yet remains, to give an idea of its antique style and beautiful workmanship.

The demand for stores in the burnt district is so good, that rents have risen very much. In one case where a store was rented for $1,300, the lease being broken by the fire, the store has now been rented to the same person for $2,700 per annunm.

The steamship Cambria sailed from Boston on Thursday with 77 passengers for Liverpool and 5 for Halifax. Among the former we notice Mrs. Fanny Kemble Butler of Philadelphia, Miss Reynolds, the actess, and Rev. Dr. McLeod of Scotland. Steamships bring incongruous materials together.

A writer in the Boston Transcript proposes a Magnetic Telegraph from that city to Oregon, by which England and other countries would receive the news from China and the Pacific.

The soldiers in the Prussian dominions are allowed to receive money instead of their intoxicating rations.

The Long Island Railroad has reduced the running time between Boston and New York to about seven hours and a half.

Mortimer F. Delano, Surrogate of Monroe Co., died at his residence, Rochester, on Tuesday, after an illness of twelve days. His disease was billious congestive fever. Mr. D. was an able lawyer and has held a number of responsible offices. He received on the day previous to his death, a commission from President Polk, as Minister to Russia. This mission had been before tendered to Lieut. Governor Gardner, and declined.

If a dozen pieces of cork be placed in a vessel of water, near the centre but a little distance apart, they will be seen to approach each other with constantly increased motion, until they meet, after which the whole will move towards the nearest side of the vessel.

The Springfield Republican says: The following is an epitaph on a grave stone in the burial ground at Brattleboro, Vt;

"Here lies cut down like unripe fruit,
Jemima, wife of Thomas Foot."

Here is another, which we find in an old scrapbook:

"Here buried lies, Mr. John Auricular;
In all God's ways he walked perpendicular."

'The Elliot Family,' Mr. Burdett's truthful expose of the wrongs and oppressions of female laborers, meets with a steady and increasing sale. We are glad to hear this as well on account of the author as for the sake of the poor women whose cause he so sincerely advocates. Thonsands of shillings, idly or foolishly spent, might profitably be devoted to the purchase of this interesting little work.

Respect for the Aged.—It is painful to witnesss the little respect that is often paid to the frosty heads and tottering forms. In olden times, when an aged person passed along, the young were taught to take off their hats as a mark of respect. This is not necessary now days; but every young man should be careful how he addresses age and experience. Never show an old man the least disrespect in your language and manners. If he asks you a question, that might be impertinent in a youth, do not hesitate to give him a civil reply. Whenever you meet with age, assist him and show him all the marks of respect in your power. It is thus you will cheer his declining days and make his heart happy as he travels toward the tomb.

The Wrongs of Law.—On Tuesday of last week a young and respectable girl, 19 years of age, left her home in the East part of the City, at 5 A. M. taking her clothes and leaving a note stating that she was married and had gone off with her husband. Her friends, justly alarmed, have made every search for her, but without success. They know of no person who had paid her particular attentions except a certain *Dr. C, (justice requires the publication of his name, but the New York Law of Libel forbids it,) who has for some time been very attentive to her, protesting to her and her relatives that he was unmarried. when it is known that he has a deserted wife of excellent character now living in the City, and that he has seduced at least half a dozen girls, (one of them only 14) under false promises or pretences of marriage within the last year. This villain, it is thought, was seen in Castle Garden on Saturday evening, and will yet be ferreted out unless he abscond—but to what end? The laws and law makers of our State are his instigators to and accomplices in his wholesale debauchery, perfidy and swindling, and will see him clear through it. We are sick at heart in view of the baseness, the brutality of our Legislation, in this particular. Is there never to be a change for the better? If not it will be impossible to prevent outraged fathers and brothers from avenging themselves. [Tribune.

Sudden Death from Tight Lacing.—On Thursday evening a woman named Maria Mason, was taking a walk with one of the recruiting party stationed at Hinckley. They had not proceeded far before she exclaimed—"Oh! how ill I am!" They immediately began to return, but finding her still growing worse, the soldier set her down, and hastened back for assistance, and having obtained it, they brought her a little farther in the direction of home, but she became a corpse in their arms when about one-hundred yards from her father's house. A post mortem examination showed that from too tight lacing her lungs adhered to her side, to which the doctor mainly attributed the cause of her untimely end. She was a steady, good looking girl, in the bloom of youth, and a daughter of Mark Mason. The melancholy circumstance naturally excited many suspicions, but nothing deleterious was found in her system. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of "Died by the visitation of God."

The way to be Happy.—Happiness is always to be found if we only condescend to pick it up seed by seed. As none of its ingredients should be thought too minute to be gathered and added to our store, so none should be deemed too insignificant for distribution to others. Occasions for conferring great benefits do not often occur, and when they do it may not be in our power to bestow them; but the little services and gratifications which every current day places within the reach of the humblest member of society will constitute, if we all throw our share into the common stock, no inconsiderable aggregate of human enjoyments and mutual good will.

Tasso's Wish.—Tasso being told that he had an opportunity of taking advantage of a very bitter enemy—"I wish not to plunder him," said he, "but there are things which I wish to take from him; not his honor, his wealth, nor his life—but his ill will."

Are the authorities aware that there are scores of little boys wh. frequent the Hotels disposing of the works of Paul de Kock and other equally abominable trash? It is indeed a melancholy sight to see these poor ragged and barefoot boys engaged in this infamous business and already become adepts both in language and manners of the school of morals under whose cruel teachings necessity has placed them. How long ere Education, Civilization, Christianity, will overtake these forsaken, brutalized classes of a city's population. [Tribune.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
Ira Sayles, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics
Gurdon Evans, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. Hartshorn, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. Stillman, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. Maxson, Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. Kenyon, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences. The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

The Teachers' Classes, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

The Academic Year for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

Expenses.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

MY CLOSET.

My closet, my dwelling, my social retreat,
Where I with my Saviour in concert may meet,
How many the objects inviting me there
To pour out my soul in the ardor of prayer.

How sweet in the morning, how bright is the view,
Though fields and the woodlands are dripping with dew,
The fragrance of blossoms perfuming the air,
Invites to my closet where I go to prayer.

When tempests are rising, and stormy winds blow,
And all the dim future is darkness and woe,
I have a pavilion to which I repair,
And rest in my closet, my temple of prayer.

How oft when gray twilight is spread o'er the lawn
—When day is returning, and evening comes on,
The voice of the songsters that flit through the air,
Invites to the closet where I go to prayer.

When shades of thick darkness spread over my heart,
And fears that my God is about to depart,
I come to my closet, and find him still there,
His hand filled with blessings to answer my prayer.

My Saviour is found in all places below,
His blessings abound, and his graces o'erflow;
A temple, a closet, I find every where,
And Jesus there waiting as I come to prayer.

I'll bless the glad day when his grace I first felt,
His mercy then saved me, and cancell'd my guilt—
My closet I'll visit, and never despair,
'Twas there God, my Saviour, first answered my prayer!

Beautiful Tradition of St. John.

The following beautiful story of St. John, the "disciple whom Jesus loved," is found in the Introduction to the Notes upon St. John's Gospel, by Professor Tholuck:

Often, my dear young friends, when I think of you, I call to mind a beautiful story of St. John, the disciple whom Jesus loved. St. Clement, a learned and holy presbyter of the Church of Alexandria, who flourished about one hundred years after the death of St. John, says: "Listen to a true story concerning John the Apostle, which has been faithfully preserved in memory. At his return from Patmos to Ephesus, he visited the neighboring country to ordain elders and to form congregations. Now, when he was engaged in a town not far from Ephesus in admonishing and consoling his brethren, he beheld a beautiful and lively youth, who interested him so greatly that he addressed himself immediately to the pastor of the congregation in these words: 'Before Christ and this congregation, as witnesses of this solemn act, I recommend this youth to you.' The pastor then took charge of the youth, and promised to do all in his power. When parting, John again repeated those words. The elder took the youth in his house, attended and watched him, and admitted him to baptism. But after he had received this seal of the Lord, the pastor relaxed in his care and watchfulness, and the youth, too early freed from the restraints of discipline, fell into bad company. He finally went so far as to rob those who traveled by night. He now despaired of the grace of God; and as he was to share the fate of his companions, he was ambitious of distinguishing himself by something great. He assembled his companions, and forming a band of robbers, he became their leader, and surpassed them all in bloody scenes and deeds of violence. After sometime, St. John was induced by some business to revisit that town. After he had arranged all the other matters, he said to the pastor: 'Return now to me that pledge with which I and the Saviour entrusted thee in the presence of the congregation. I demand the youth of thee again, and the soul of that brother!' The old man sighed deeply, and replied with tears: 'He is dead!' 'Dead?' asked the disciple of the Lord, 'and what disease did he die of?' 'He is dead to God,' replied the old man; 'he has become a robber. Instead of the church, he now occupies a mountain, with his companions.' The apostle, on hearing this, tore his garment with loud lamentations, and striking his head, exclaimed: 'O, to what a guardian have I entrusted the soul of my brother!' He at once took a horse and leader, and hastened to the place where the band of robbers had taken up their residence.—He was seized by the guard; he did not fly, but exclaimed, 'For this very reason I am come; bring me to your leader!' The latter in arms expected his arrival; but as soon as he discovered that he who approached was John, he fled from him, full of shame. John, however, forgetful of his age, hastened after him, and exclaimed: 'Why dost thou flee from me, O my child! me, thy father, an unarmed old man? Take pity on me, my child! Be not afraid of me! There is yet hope of life for thee. I will account for thee to Christ; I am ready to die for thee if it be necessary, as Christ has died for us. I am willing to give up my life for thee. Stand! and believe that Christ has sent me!' The other, when he heard these words, at first stopped with downcast eyes. He then threw away his arms, and began to tremble and to weep bitterly. When the old man approached, he embraced his knees, and with great lamentions asked his forgiveness, conferring on himself, as it were, a second baptism by these tears:—his right hand only he concealed. But the apostle pledged himself that he had obtained for him forgiveness from the Saviour; he entreated him, and throwing himself on his knees, he kissed his hand, which had become clean, as it were, by the purifying of repentance.—Thus he led him back to the congregation, and prayed so earnestly with him, and to such a degree wrestled with him, in fasting, and so admonished him, that he could finally return him to the church as an example of the change of disposition, and genuine regeneration."

The Noble-Hearted Sailor-boy.

The little hero of the following story, if he was an orphan, had the soul of a Prince within him. It is taken from an article in the Christian World.

A little boy twelve years of age, poor and ragged, came into the car between Boston and Fall River. There was a slight shrinking from him manifested by some of the well-dressed passengers. He took his seat quietly near me; and a sea captain who entered at the same time, told me his touching story.

I learned that he was a poor orphan, and three days before had been wrecked near Montauk Point; the schooner upon which he was, being struck by a white squall, and instantly sunk. While the lad was floating upon some wood, a vessel near, which had seen the accident, sent forth its boat to save from a watery grave any who might be rescued. They spied the little boy floating amid the waste of waters, and approached him; but he, with a generosity, alas, too rare, cried out, 'Never mind me; save the captain, he has a wife and six children.'—Poor fellow! he knew that the captain had those who loved him, and would need his support.

The captain, in telling me the story, was much affected, and said, with a generosity characteristic of the mariner, 'The boy has only the clothes you see, sir, or he would not be so ragged. I care not much for myself, though I too lost all, but the poor lad will have a hard time of it.'

Several persons, on hearing this story, gave small sums to the poor orphan, and advised him to make a statement to other passengers, who would doubtless give something.

'I am not a beggar,' was his only answer; 'I don't wish to beg their money.'

At this moment, a fine, benevolent individual arose in a seat near me, and unostentatiously offered to plead for him who would not prefer his own claim. Most successful was the warm hearted appeal which he made to the passengers, and ten dollars was collected.

The plain, practical, common sense way in which this person manifested his sympathy for a fellow being, won my regard, and I entered into conversation with him. 'I've been a sailor myself,' he said; 'the generous fellows ought not to want when misfortune, not vice, has rendered them destitute. I know this brave captain would share his last dollar with any one in distress.'

He sat down in the vacant seat near me, and more was I pleased to find that his religion was no mere theory, no barren speculation, but an active principle. I asked his name. 'Jonathan Walker,' was the reply, and the branded hand well attested the fact.

A Family Sketch.

SCENE.—A handsome dining-room; Mrs. Collins, and four or five children, sitting round a neatly set table, with a large tureen of smoking and savory soup on it. Mr. Collins enters, and all express surprise.

George.—I thought, father, you had gone to Worcester.

Mr. C.—I did intend to, and was just stepping into the cars, when I was unexpectedly called away by other business. But how is this? I do not seem to receive my usual welcome.

Mrs. C.—I am afraid you may be a little disappointed about dinner.

Mr. C.—Why, did not Ned bring home a pair of fine chickens, with the usual accompaniments? I thought you would have had them roasted to-day.

Mrs. C.—I did, (smiling.)

Mary.—Now let papa guess what became of them.

All the Children.—O, papa, guess, do guess.

Mr. C.—Let me see—perhaps they proved not so good as I thought them.

Mrs. C.—Yes, they were excellent.

Mr. C.—Well, then, perhaps you reversed the order of nature, as etiquette might call it, and ate the roast chickens before the soup.

Mrs. C.—No, no, not that.

Mr. C.—Did the cat run off with them?

Mary.—No, no; papa must not have any of our nice dinner, till he guesses or gives up.

Mr. C.—Well, as I am very hungry, I believe I must give up, and help myself to some of the soup; and it is really excellent. But I have some curiosity to know about the chickens.

Several Children.—Let me tell.

Mrs. C.—We must let Jane tell, I think, as she knows the whole story best.

Jane.—Mamma sent me to carry some jelly to little Susan Niles, who has been so sick with a fever. She was a good deal better, and said she was very hungry, and her mother was making some Indian cake, for she said she had nothing else, and Mr. Niles was too sick yet to be able to work, and earn any money. Poor little Susan said she was not hungry for Indian cake, but was hungry for a piece of roast meat, or something nice. And poor Mr. Niles looked as if he wanted some too; but he said, "Hush, Susan, dear; it is not for poor folks, like us, to be thinking what we shall like; we must try to like what we can get." But I told Susan I knew mamma would soon send them something good. So I told mamma, and she said, "I dare say they would all relish the nice dinner we are to have to-day; suppose we send them our dinner, after it is cooked, and have hasty-pudding or a vegetable soup ourselves?" And we all said, "O, yes, mamma, do." So mamma sent Abby to tell Mrs. Niles she was going to send some dinner at one o'clock, for all of them; so all the children will have roast meat, as well as Susan. Was it not a nice plan, papa?

Mr. C.—Indeed it was, my love, as mamma's plans always are. But why might I not be a party in this little romance?

Mrs. C.—It might not be so comfortable for you, after a fatiguing day in your counting-room, to come home and not find a more substantial dinner, especially when you had provided one. It was a sudden thought, and besides, the good to Mr. Niles would, it seemed to me, be a lesson to the children and the kitchen; and Catharine said they should have the very best cookery.

Mr. C.—Ah, my dear, it was one of your many happy thoughts, and a good lesson for all. A simple dinner like this, would be well for all of us as often as once a week, at least and for all others in our situation; and good, very good for an equal number in Mrs, Niles, to receive such a dinner as she has to-day. It would convince the sick and destitute, that those better off are not only willing to help them, but willing to make sacrifices to do so, if any thing so trifling can be called a sacrifice.

Mrs. C.—I shall be delighted too, if there is an unanimous vote for it.

George.—We will all hold up hands.

All hands were held up.

Mary.—I hope that a great many people will do just so, and then how many families will have such a happy day once a week!

Mrs. C.—Yes, this one little plan alone, carried out, as it might easily be done, would add a large amount of virtue and happiness to our community.

George.—I don't know which would be happiest—those who have the dinner to send, or those who receive it.

Jane.—O, we are happiest, to send it.

Mrs. C.—And little Sue might think she was at least as happy to receive it. How much we leave undone for the poor, which would be a blessing to ourselves and them!

Mr. C.—True, for in our Christian community, we are but beginning to understand what it is to love our neighbor as ourself.

The little Hunchback.

I have just returned from the funeral of poor Emma G——, a little girl to whom I had been for years most fondly attached. As there was something very touching in the circumstances connected with her death, I will relate them to you. She was the daughter of a widow, a near neighbor of mine. When I first knew her, she was a sprightly child of about four years of age, perfect in form and feature. The bloom of health was upon her cheek; her eye was the brightest I ever saw; while in her bosom there glowed a generous affection that seemed to embrace all with whom she came in contact. But when she reached her seventh year her health began to decline. The rose suddenly paled upon her cheek, and her eye had acquired prematurely that sad, thoughtful expression, which gives so melancholy a charm to the features of wasting beauty. Her mother looked on with an anxious heart, and at an utter loss to account for so sudden a change in her health. But soon a new source of anxiety appeared. While dressing one day, she observed on Emma's back, just between the shoulders, a small swelling, of about the size of a walnut. As she watched this spot, and observed that it grew larger from day to day, the mother began to have sad misgivings. These, however, she kept to herself for a time. Soon afterwards a slight stoop in her gait became visible. The family physician was now called in, and the worst forebodings of the mother were confirmed. Her idolized child was fast becoming a hunchback!

I will not attempt to describe the feelings of the mother, who was thus doomed to witness from day to day the slow growth of that which was to make one so dear to her a cripple and a dwarf. Suffice it to say, her love as well as care seemed to be redoubled, and Emma became more than ever the child of her affections. Nor did her little companions neglect her when she could no longer join in their out-door sports, and her own sprightly step had given place to a slow, stooping gait, and the sweet ringing voice to a sad or querulous tone, that sometimes made the very heart ache. On the contrary, all vied with each other in administering to her amusements. Among them, none clung to her with more assiduity than her brother William, who was the nearest to her own age. He gave up all his own out-door play, in order to be with her, and seemed never so happy as when he could draw a smile, sad though it was, from her thoughtful features.

But after a while Emma grew wayward under her affliction; and unfortunately, though generally good-natured, William had a quick temper, for check which required more self command than commonly falls to one so young. Sometimes, therefore, when he found plan after plan, which he had projected for her amusement, rejected with peevish contempt, he could hardly conceal from her his own wounded feelings. Yet though at times ungrateful, Emma was perhaps not so in fact; and she loved her brother better than any one else save her mother. It was only in moments when her too sensitive nature had been chafed perhaps by her own reflections—for like the majority of children in her circumstances, she was thoughtful beyond her years—that her conduct seemed unkind. And then, when she marked the cloudy expression of her brother's face, she would ask for forgiveness in so meek a spirit, and kiss his cheek so affectionately that he forgave her almost as soon as offended.

Years thus passed on, when one day, after she had been more than unusually perverse and fretful, William, who had been reading to her, on receiving some slight rebuff, started suddenly from his seat by her side and called her "a little hunchback," and left the room. In a moment, however, his passion subsided, and returning, he found his sister in tears. He attempted to put his arm around her neck, but she repulsed him, and slipping away, retired to her own chamber. Her mother soon after learned what had happened, and going to Emma, found her upon the bed in a paroxysm of grief. She endeavored to sooth her feelings, but in vain; she refused to be comforted. "I want to die, mother," she replied to all her endearments: "I have long felt that I was a burden to you all." She cried herself to sleep that night, and on the morrow was too ill to rise. The doctor was called in, and warned the mother against an approaching fever. For three days she remained in an uncertain state; but on the fourth, the fever came in earnest, and thenceforth she was confined to her pillow.

In the meantime the grief of William had been more poignant even than that of his sister. Twice he had been to her bedside to ask forgiveness, and kiss once more her pallid cheek; but she turned her face resolutely away, and refused to recognize him. After these repulses he would slowly leave the room, and going to his own chamber sit brooding for hours over the melancholy consequence of his rashness. Owing to the previous enfeebled health of Emma, the fever made rapid progress, and it soon became apparent that she must die. William in consequence of the violent aversion of his sister, had lately been denied admittance to the chamber, though he lingered all day about the door, eagerly catching the least word in regard to her state, and apparently unmindful of all other existence.

One morning there was evidently a crisis approaching; for the mother and attendants, hurrying softly in and out of the sufferer's chamber, in quick whispered words gave orders or imparted intelligence to others. William saw it all, and with quick instinct of affection, seemed to know what it fore boded. Taking his little stool, therefore, he sat down beside the chamber door, and waiten in silence. In the meantime, the mother stood over the dying child, watching while a short unquiet slumber held her back a little longer. Several times a sweet smile trembled round the sufferer's lips, and her arms moved as if pressing something to her bosom. Then she awoke, and fixing her eye upon her mother, whispered faintly, "I thought William was here." A stifled sob was heard at the door, which stood partly open. Mrs. G—— stepped softly out, and leading William to the bedside, pointed to his dying sister. He threw himself upon her bosom, and pressing his lips to her pale cheek, prayed for forgiveness. Emma did not heed him, but looking again in her mother's face, and pointing upward, said softly: "I shan't be so there! shall I, mother?"

"No, my child," replied the weeping mother; I hope not. "But don't talk so, Emma. Forgive your poor brother, or you will break his heart."

Emma tried to gasp something; but whatever it was, whether of love or hate, it never reached a mortal's ear. In a few moments she was no more.

The Shepherd's Dog.

A shepherd who inhabited one of those valleys or glens which intersect the Grampian mountains, in one of his excursions to look after his flock, happened to carry along with him one of his children, an infant of three years old. This is not an unusual practice among the Highlanders, who accustom their children from the earliest infancy to endure the rigors of the climate.—After traversing his pastures for some time, attended by his dog, the shepherd found himself under the necessity of ascending a summit at some distance, to have a more extensive view of his range. As the ascent was too fatiguing for the child, he left him on a small plain at the bottom, with strict injunctions not to stir from it till his return. Scarcely, however, had he gained the summit, when the horizon was darkened by one of those impenetrable mists which frequently descend so rapidly amidst these mountains as, in the space of a few minutes, almost to turn day to night.

The anxious father instantly hastened back to find his child; but owing to the unusual darkness, and his own trepidation, unfortunately missed his way in the descent. After a fruitless search of many hours, he discovered that he had reached the bottom of the valley, and was near his own cottage. To renew the search that night was equally fruitless and dangerous; he was therefore compelled to go home, although he had lost both his child and his dog, who had attended him faithfully for many years. Next morning, by break of day, the shepherd, accompanied by a band of his neighbors, set out in search of his child; but, after a day spent in fruitless fatigue, he was at last compelled, by the approach of night, to descend from the mountain. On his returning home to his cottage, he found that the dog, which he had lost the day before, had been home, and on receiving a piece of cake, had instantly gone off again. For several successive days the shepherd renewed his search for the child, and still, on returning home disappointed in the evening, he found that the dog had been home, and on receiving his usual allowance of cake, had instantly disappeared.

Struck with this singular circumstance, he remained at home one day; and when the dog, as usual, departed with his piece of cake, he resolved to follow him, and find out the cause of this strange procedure. The dog led the way to a cataract at some distance from the spot where the shepherd had left his child. The banks of the cataract almost joined at the top, yet, separated by an abyss of immense depth, presented that appearance which so often astonishes and appals the travelers that frequent the Grampian mountains. Down one of those rugged and almost perpendicular descents, the dog began without hesitation to make his way, and at last disappeared by entering into a cave, the mouth of which was almost level with the torrent. The shepherd, with difficulty, followed; but on entering the cave, what were his emotions when he beheld the infant eating with much satisfaction the cake which the dog had just brought him, while the faithful animal stood by, eyeing his young charge with the utmost complaisance!

From the situation in which the child was found, it appeared that he had wandered to the brink of the precipice, and then either fallen or scrambled down till he reached the cave. The dog, by means of his scent, had traced him to the spot, and afterwards prevented him from starving, by giving up to him his own daily allowance.

IMPROVEMENT.—An hour misspent can never be recalled. If a child should lose any choice play thing, it might be found again, or another might be got in its place, but a lost hour can never be found, nor can any other hour be got in its place. Improve your time, children.

THE JEWISH PILGRIM AT JERUSALEM.

Are these the ancient holy hills
Where angels walked of old?
Is this the land our story fills
With glory not yet cold?
For I have passed by many a shrine,
O'er many a land and sea,
But still, O promised Palestine,
My dreams have been of thee.

I see thy mountain cedars green,
Thy valleys fresh and fair,
With summers bright as they have been
When Israel's home was there;
Though o'er thee sword and time have passed;
And Cross and Crescent shone,
And heavily the chain hath press'd,
Yet thou art still our own!

Thine are the wandering race that go
Unblessed through every land,
Whose blood has stained the polar snow,
And quench'd the desert sand;
And thine the homeless hearts that turn
From all earth's shrines to thee,
With their lone faith for ages borne
In sleepless memory.

For thrones are fall'n, and nations gone,
Before the march of time,
And where the ocean rolled along,
Are forests in their prime;
Since Gentile plough-shares marr'd the brow
Of Zion's holy hill—
Where are the Roman eagles now!
Yet Judah wanders still.

And hath she wandered thus in vain
A pilgrim of the past?
No! long deferred her hope hath been,
But it shall come at last;
For in her wastes a voice I hear,
As from some prophet's urn—
It bids the nations build not there,
For Jacob shall return.

O lost and loved Jerusalem!
Thy pilgrim may not stay
To see the glad earth's harvest home,
In thy redeeming day;
But now resigned in faith and trust,
I seek a nameless tomb;
At least beneath thy hallowed dust
O give the wanderer room!

Offering of a Drunkard's Children.

Several years ago there was a family consisting of parents and six children, that resided in the woods, some distance from any neighbors. When we say that the father was a miserable drunkard, it need not be added that the family were poor and wretched. Some benevolent individuals proposed to make efforts to get these six neglected children into the Sunday school. Clothes were provided and two individuals made their way to the lonely and comfortless abode of this family in the woods. As they reached the place and were discovered, the children all fled and hid themselves.—This the poor things did for the same reason that Adam and Eve hid themselves, when God, after they had eaten the forbidden fruit, came into the garden of Eden.

The next Sunday, five of these children, in their clean new dresses, were at the school. At the close, the superintendent said that the Sunday school Concert would be held one week from the next Monday, and all of the scholars must try to get one cent apiece, to put into the contribution box, to aid in sending the gospel to the heathen.

The next Sunday all the six children of the drunkard's family, were at the school. Again, at the close, the superintendent gave notice of the Concert on the next day, and reminded all to bring their little offering.

But how could these poor children bring six cents. Their father would not let them have any. He was a drunkard, and spent all the money he could get for that liquid fire which was impoverishing his family, and consuming his own body, and ruining his immortal soul. And their mother could not let them have it; although she felt very sadly about it she had no money to give. The poor children, too, were very sad. "How can we get any money to put into the contribution box? And we cannot go to the Concert without it," was their anxious inquiry and study. They went to bed Sabbath night without any relief.

The next morning one of the little boys went out into the road, and as he was walking along, all at once he spied a horse-shoe. O with what joy he seized it, and away he ran as fast as he could go, to the village, and sold the shoe for just six cents! He hastened back, distributed his precious pennies among his brothers and sisters, and then, with grateful, happy hearts, they all went to the Concert, and one after another they went up and dropped their cents into the box! How precious were the offerings of these dear children! They had a heart to give, and the Lord provided the means.

Who can doubt that these children, cherishing in early life such a desire to do good, even though their earthly father may forsake them, will find in God a Father and a Helper.

What child, or older person, will ever again make the excuse for not contributing to the cause of benevolence, that he can find no way to obtain any thing to give?—Where there is a mind there will always be a way. [Well-Spring.

☞ Every column of a newspaper contains from ten to twenty thousand distinct and separate pieces of metal, each singly collected and arranged from hundreds of different 'boxes,' and each letter capable of five or six transpositions! With these facts in mind, readers should be led to admire the general correctness, rather than magnify the errors of one to whom authors are so much indebted for improvements that the public know little about.

Five Bibles a minute, for ten hours every day, except Sunday—making three thousand per day—have been sent out the past year by the British and Foreign Bible Society, according to its last annual report.

COPARTNERSHIPS WITH THOSE WHO DO NOT KEEP THE SABBATH.

It is well known, that considerable difficulty often arises in the minds of our people in regard to copartnerships entered into between the members of our churches and others who do not keep the seventh day holy. And it not unfrequently happens, that those who observe the first-day urge, that it is a violation of our explanation of the sabbatic law, for members of our communion to be partners in firms that do business on the seventh day, though they strictly keep the seventh day themselves.

This difficulty of our people, and censure of our opponents, appears to be founded on that part of the sabbatic law which prohibits from allowing labor to be done within our gates on the Sabbath, either by servants or strangers. This view supposes, that partnership premises are naturally and properly covered by the words "within your gates." If to this view of the subject it is replied by our brethren, that they cannot control their partners in business or the firms to which they belong, they are told that it must be wrong then for them in the first place to enter into such business relations as make them accessories to Sabbath-breaking and sharers in profits arising therefrom. There is so much that looks like sound sense in these arguments against Sabbath-keepers being partners with Sunday-keepers, that many have thought they must, to be honest and consistent, admit themselves to be under obligations to submit to all the consequences and conclusions connected therewith. But following this train of reasoning they have soon found that it would carry them to such extremities that it would be next to, or rather quite, impossible practically to carry out their principles. It being determined that it is a breach of the sabbatic law to be a partner in a mercantile or manufacturing establishment where business is done on the Sabbath, by parity of reasoning it is thought we must not own property of any kind jointly with those who work upon the Sabbath, either as bank stock or any other kind of stock, for in such cases we must pay men for working upon the Sabbath, and also receive dividends made out on that day, though we should hold no other connection with the establishment. Pursuant to this reasoning, moreover, it would seem that we ought not to patronize those who break the Sabbath, especially by purchasing and using such things as are produced by labor upon the Sabbath. And of course, when we take a grist to mill, or would have a coat or pair of shoes made, we must not eat our flour or meal if the miller should grind it on the Sabbath, or, if the tailor or shoemaker should work our cloth or our leather on the Sabbath, we must not pay them for their work or wear the coat or shoes.

Some may say that this is going too far—that it is not necessary from the premises. Others will say, it is only carrying out the principle. To the first I will say, show us the error of our inferences. To the second I will say, the absurdities growing out of the principle in question strongly indicate that it is unsound. To be a partner in an establishment where part of the owners do business on the premises upon the seventh day, is thought to be a violation of the law which forbids us to do or have work done by servants or strangers within our gates upon the Sabbath, when in fact these men are neither servants nor strangers, nor are they within our gates. These men, whether partners or hands, are free and independent of us as to whether they shall work on the seventh day. They have or claim the right to have consciences of their own, whether they do have any or not. If some of the owners work and others rest on the seventh day, and each claims the liberty to do so because in this respect he is independent, and from his proprietorship in the concern, it would be natural that any one who invests his labor in the enterprize or is employed on the premises should do the same. Now suppose a manufacturing or mercantile establishment enclosed and having gates, which is owned by a company, and part of the company are Seventh-day Baptists—they attend to their devotions on the seventh day, and the rest of the company go into the yard or upon the company premises and spend the day at work. The question is, within whose gates do these men work? It cannot be exclusively said that they work either within their own gates or the gates of their Seventh-day Baptist partners. But in respect to the right to work on the premises, or to set others to work thereon, at any and all times, the enclosed premises belonging to the company, and of course to each individual of it, so that he may work within them whenever he pleases, and of course has no right to deny the same liberty to others. In all respects, I understand the rights to work, and the responsibilities for working within said gates, to be the same as though each member of this company were conducting a business by himself. And Seventh-day Baptists are in no wise guilty of violating the sabbatic law or their own principles in forming partnership connections (or continuing them) with those who work on the Sabbath, so long as they neither work on that day nor ask or encourage others to do so. And though the men who do their work do it on the Sabbath, they are not accountable, because these men work by virtue of rights which have not been destroyed or lost by the relations into which they have entered. WESTERN NEW YORK—ANTI-SABBATH DISCOURSE.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I live in a neighborhood where the light of the true Sabbath has shone for a number of years, and where many of my neighbors who observe the first day of the week have long been convinced that the Bible requires the observance of the seventh day, and not the first. So long, indeed, have they been convinced of their duty in this respect, that I fear they will become hardened and never obey the truth; and I am confident, that they dare not attempt to become faithful Christians, without yielding to the claims of this Divine Institution.

This being the state of affairs with us, a certain priest, who had never visited us before, saw fit to send an appointment to preach on the Sabbath question, and to-day we have had the privilege of listening to his discourse. His text was John 17: 4—"I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." After reading this scripture, his first business was to assert that Christ did not finish the work referred to in the text, until he rose from the dead; to sustain which he quoted 1 Cor. 15: 14. Then he said, "As God finished his work by resting, so Christ finished his work by resting also."

He then proceeded to affirm that the Sabbath was of "perpetual obligation;" that it was "made for man;" and that it was "necessary for the spiritual good of man." He observed, that he had no specific command for the change of the Sabbath, and as a reason, he said that such a command "would have frustrated the design of the gospel;" that it was "not essential to salvation which day was kept;" therefore, the apostles, seeing the difficulty which such a command would lead to, refrained from giving it. As much as to say, that the men whom Christ chose to be his witnesses on earth, and to seal their testimony with their blood, would not declare the whole truth for fear they would die before their time, or, that they "would not have had that influence over the Jews" which they otherwise would have had. He said, "I am willing to rest on intimations without an express command." But strange to tell, in all his "intimations" he found not a single passage of scripture which said one word about the Sabbath, or had the remotest allusion to that subject, except Rev. 1: 10, and that said nothing about the first day.

After making the usual declaration, that Christ and his disciples met on the first day, &c., he asserted, that though the Sabbatarians insist on an express command for the change, yet they place "great reliance on church history" to sustain their views. And then he virtually contradicted his own assertion by saying, that they had presented him with a number of Sabbath Tracts, but none of them quoted church history, and that he inquired if they had any which treated of that subject, and was afterwards furnished with one which did. He ought to know, that they approach the subject of history only as the strong-hold of the enemies of the Sabbath; and then by carrying the war right into the enemy's camp, show that they may be defeated on their own chosen ground.

After quoting church history to prove that the early Christians observed the first day, he said, "If the true Sabbath was banished from the church, then the gates of hell prevailed against the church." By the same manner of reasoning he might say, that the Catholics went so far as to change the institution of the Lord's Supper by refusing the cup to the laity, therefore the gates of hell prevailed against the church. He asked, "Has not the Lord always had faithful witnesses on the earth? If so, and the change of the Sabbath was an innovation, why did they not complain of it as such?" I reply, The Lord has ever had faithful witnesses, but their words have sometimes been regarded as idle tales, and they have sometimes been hid in dens and caves of the earth. In conclusion, he observed that he "would not have agitated a question of so small importance only to relieve such as were hampered" by those views which were being crowded upon the public, by the observers of the seventh day. Yours,

ROSWELL F. COTTRELL.

MRS. FRY.—I was reading, not long ago, of the Quakeress, Mrs. Fry. You know, perhaps, that this woman has traveled over England, and over the north of Europe, visiting the prisons, going into the mad-houses, and everywhere causing the cheerful light of religion to fall upon human woe. A weak woman, alone in a mad-house, among the wild and raving maniacs! Yet, there she has been among men, where their strong keepers never dared to go alone. Her custom, as I have seen it described, is, without saying a word, to seat herself quietly at one side of the mad-room, and taking out her Bible, to begin to read from it. In a little while the Babel of noises around is hushed; the soft tones of her voice have caught their attention, and have fixed upon their hearts. They gather around, and seat themselves, and listen in silence, nor has she ever failed to subdue, in this manner, the wildest and most frantic among them. And I have seen affecting accounts of their attachment to her, and of the manner in which they part with her, and watch for her return.

On a certain occasion, as she was about leaving a mad-house, she noticed a young man leaning in the door-way. She stopped to give him the parting salutation, when he put his hand up, "Hush!" he said, "hush, the angels have lent you their voices." [Rev. G. Jones.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.

Yes, young man, be on your guard. There are a thousand temptations in your path and a thousand voices calling you away from duty. Poor Kendall! a few days ago he was full of life and activity—the pride of his father and the hope of his mother. Now, he is beneath the clods of the valley—struck down in the freshness of his youth—without a moment's warning. With his companion at the ten-pin alley he quarreled. Away then from temptation. Go not near the place where spirit is drank and gambling is countenanced. If you are not called so suddenly away as this young man, you will sow the bitter seeds of vice, to spring up to your injury at some future day. It may now be delightful to associate with the vicious, but remember their end.

"The path
That leads to infamy and death, with flowers
Of rare perfume will oft be stored, to draw
Thy purity away. The syren voice
Of soft, bewitching melody, will swell
Upon the evening air—and peacefulness
Will mark the step of those who plot thy fall.
Thou must not go. That principle within
Will keep thee right, if thou wilt ask Guidance continually of Heaven. Live near
To God. The daily prayer from broken hearts
Will penetrate the skies."

We repeat—be on your guard. Let nothing corrupt your virtue—no art seduce your integrity—no associations blind your eyes—no pleasure lure you to ruin. It is a fearful step to take, when your first break away from judicious advice and wholesome restraint—when you feel that you are too large or too old to listen to a mother's counsel or a father's advice—when to show independence, you launch your frail bark on turbulent water and venture near the whirlpool, which has been the destruction of many a noble soul. Be careful, we pray you. You may be an honor to society or a curse to the community, it is for you to decide. May Heaven direct you. [Portland Tribune.

ARRIVAL OF DR. JUDSON.

We enjoyed the pleasure of taking the hand of this beloved missionary, on his arrival in this city, on Wednesday morning, Oct. 15, and of looking for the first time upon the face of a man whom we have long admired and loved. To give utterance to the emotions which struggled in every bosom on this occasion, would be impossible.

Dr. Judson sailed from Salem, Feb. 6, 1812, for Calcutta, under the direction of the American Board of Foreign Missions. On his passage he renounced his Pedobaptist views, became a Baptist, and with his wife was baptized on the first Sunday in the following September, in Calcutta. From that time to the present he has been engaged in the work of making known the gospel to the Burmans and Karens, with a degree of diligence, zeal, and success, rarely surpassed. After laboring in this field for one third of a century, he has revisited his native land, bearing the marks of a toil-worn veteran in the apostolic work, yet vigorous, and energetic, and undaunted. May his presence in this country be the means of awakening fresh zeal among us for the salvation of the world.

It will be seen by the subjoined letter to the Secretary, that the hand of affliction has been laid heavily upon him. May God be his support and stay. His three younger children have accompanied him, who appear in vigorous health.

Barque Sophia Walker,

MY DEAR BROTHER:—I wrote you the 13th of April, and the Treasurer on the 1st of May, just before sailing from Amherst. The first part of the voyage was very rough; we suffered a good deal from sea-sickness, and my time was much occupied in taking care of Mrs. Judson. Having my assistants, however, I endeavored to make some progress in my work, though under great disadvantages. During the second month, Mrs. J. began to improve, and I had the most sanguine hopes of her recovery. After crossing the line, the ship sprung a leak, and the captain determined to put in at the Isle of France. Before reaching the isl- and Mrs. J. became so decidedly convalescent, that it appeared clearly to be my duty to return to Maulmain and leave her to proceed alone. On our arrival, we found a vessel bound to Maulmain, and though I was unwilling to leave her, until I should see her fairly on her way, I was so sure of returning myself, that I sent off the assistants by that vessel, and partially engaged my own passage in another which would sail for Calcutta in two or three weeks. In the meantime, we met with Captain Codman of the Sophia Walker, who invited us to take passage with him, and kindly offered such terms as induced us to leave the Paragon. The change furnished also an additional encouragement for me to return, as the Sophia Walker would take Mrs. J. to the very door of her friends, where also she would arrive a month earlier, than if she went by the way of England. But all our plans were frustrated by an unforeseen event. Mrs. J. experienced a dreadful relapse, which reduced her lower than ever before; and soon convinced me, that it would be impossible for me to leave her, so that, though I bitterly regretted the loss of my assistants, I felt obliged, after having remained three weeks at Port Louis, to re-embark with her, and we finally sailed on the 25th of July. After a time, she again appeared to be recovering, and in the cold weather off the Cape of Good Hope, my hopes became again very sanguine. But she never really recovered from her last prostration, and though sometimes better, continued on the whole to decline, until we neared St. Helena, when I gave up all hope of her recovery. She lingered a few days, while the vessel was detained in port, until the 1st inst., when at 9 o'clock in the morning, she obtained her release from further suffering, and entered, I trust, into the joy of her Lord; she was buried in the afternoon of the same day; and in the evening, we were again at sea.

Had Mrs. J. lived to reach home, and especially if my assistants had been with me, I should have expected to remain some time in America, that her health might become confirmed. But since this object is lost, I am desirous of returning as soon as possible—I hope that no objection will be made to my leaving, before the winter sets in. I dread the effects of a northern winter, not so much on my general health, as on my lungs. An attack of my complaint in the winter season would probably prove fatal. And though I refuse not to die, I have so much desire, in submission to the will of God, to finish my work in Burmah, that I must confess, I am unwilling to expose my poor life, though in other respects of no worth, to any unnecessary hazard. I remain, yours affectionately,

A. JUDSON.

WELCH BAPTISTS.

We commend the following to the attention of those who are in the habit of ascribing a very recent origin to Baptist principles. We find it in a note in a late number of the Baptist Memorial.

The Welch historians say, that, from the introduction of Christianity into Britain by the Apostle Paul in the year 64, till the visit of Austin, the monk by whom their conquerors the Saxons were "converted," about the year 600, the Welch knew no other baptism than immersion; and no other subject of it than the professing believer; and regarding the kingdom of Christ as not of this world, they had not connected the church with the state. Austin having succeeded in converting the Saxons from paganism, and subjecting them to the dominion of the Roman See, turned his attention to the Welch.

The monk met them in an association on the borders of Herefordshire, where he made them three propositions, one of which was that they should receive infant baptism. But it was promptly met by the reply, that "they would keep this ordinance, as well as all other things, as they had received them from the apostolic age." This prompt and decisive refusal so enraged him, that he exclaimed, "Sins ye wol not receive peace of your brethren, ye of other shall have warre and wretche." And setting the Saxons upon them, they murdered one thousand and two hundred of the ministers and delegates then present. The leading men being dead, the Welch king, Cadwalder, and a majority of the people, submitted to popery.

But not all; Evans traces the remnant of the ancient faith and practice through the darkness of popery to the year 1000; and Peter Williams down to the year 1115. From that time till the period of the reformation, but little is known of the existence of Baptist churches in Wales, except that, on the visit of the earliest of the English Baptist reformers, they found Baptist churches, particularly in the vales Carelon and Olchon, which are situated in almost inaccessible fastnesses of mountains, which had existed from time immemorial. So it is probable that some of those churches really have, as they profess, maintained an unbroken continuity.

BISHOP ONDERDONK.—DR. TYNG'S SPEECH.

"Ought he to be restored to the control of this diocese? Can he be restored to that position? I will discuss the last inquiry first.

Sir, character depends not upon acts of repentance consummated by reformation. We may receive the penitent back again into our affections—we may open the door of the father's house to the prodigal wandering child, and forget, in the flowing out of our paternal affections and confidence, that he has ever stepped aside from the paths of truth and duty—we may weep over this individual in the depths of his fall, and the time may come when on his contrition and reformation we may greet him with Christian joy as one restored to the fold of Christ,—when we may receive him to our hearts and entirely restored affections, and weep with gushing joy over him as we repeat the blessed testimony "he was dead and is alive again, he was lost and is found." But repentance never restores and cannot restore public confidence and reputation. As well might you attempt to gather the fragments of the chrystal vase which you have hurled upon the granite block, and re-unite them so that no seam or scar shall appear, as reinstate the fallen public minister of God to the position in which he may create around him a holy and blissful influence.

You may load your table with resolutions to that effect, but you will not thereby touch a single heart; they will not turn the frown into a smile upon the countenances that will meet him in the house of God'; they will not bring back a single portion of that feeling of reverent and holy affection which has brought the flock of Christ to his feet, to receive his holy benediction in the sacred rites of the Church. Oh, sir, it is not in the power of laws and canons to accomplish this result. No declarations, however unanimous or decided, can build up the breach, wide as the ocean's bed, which because of crime, believed crime, exists between public confidence and the individual named.

Oh could I reach his private ear with the language of influence, could I put the arm of affection around his neck, could I address him with passionate solicitation and entreaty, having no other desire than to rescue him from the deep tide of contumely that has assailed him, I could not procure for him a greater favor than his calm and peaceful retirement from this scene of conflict. Generous and noble as his nature is, few men are so likely to be crushed and tortured and ground to powder beneath the withering sentence of public rebuke. Nay sir, I can say nothing but breathe an earnest solicitation to heaven that some blessed influence may move his heart to make the sacrifice for the benefit—the resuscitation from death—of a body, of which he has for years been considered an ornament, and in which with sorrow and grief we miss the shining of his influence and his counsel from among us.

But I say again, sir, it is vain to seek to reproduce public confidence, or to let him return to any congregation. The influence would be the same in every place. You could not retain a congregation within the walls of any church to meet him, in these peculiar circumstances.

But consider, sir, the influence of this restoration on the Church itself. This is the main point of the amendment, and because it is so all the action of the convention has tended to this. All other propositions and amendments, have been as the mountain rivulets running down into this last ocean where they were all to sink. The purport of this report of the minority is restoration to office of the late diocesan has been the polar star that has conducted the bark of the majority over the devious waves of this discussion.

Can he minister with benefit to the Church? That depends on the settlement of the former principle. Can men teach their children to look up to him with that deep feeling of reverence with which his office has ever been regarded in our families? Can the members of the Church receive him into their domestic circles? Nay, would it not be as a lay gentleman (Mr. Hill, of Albany) said, the other day, his first visit would be his last? I do not wish to excite any thing but solemn, tender sympathy. There is no feeling in my breast that would not make any sacrifice for the honor, comfort and benefit of this man. But when we look at the character of the Church, what is the effect?—What is to be gained by the restoration of this gentleman to his office? Sir it is vain to hide from our eyes the influence of his reputation on the community and on the Church. We are comparatively a small body in the land, and have been gaining for years with rapidity, moral and religious strength. Men have been accustomed to look up to our Bishops as lights and guides as they have moved through the community. What would at this day have been the influence of Bishops White and Moore and Brown had their names come down to us tainted with believed immorality—had they been convicted of impurity in their intercourse with their flocks? Their character has been our capital. That they were such men as they were has been the grand secret of their influence and ours, the lever which God has given us to extend the borders of our Zion.

If this gentleman is to be restored to office what is to be the effect upon the confidence of the people in the ministry? Sir, a feeling on this subject glows in my heart's blood, it beats in every pulse. Take away public confidence in our characters, destroy that freedom of affection with which we may mingle in the scenes of domestic retirement, and you destroy that which is the great instrument of our usefulness among men.

We are commanded to abstain from the very appearance of evil, and can we ask confidence in the character of ministers, the majority of whom are prepared to say that they do not believe these facts an absolute disqualification for the public ministry. We should perish before the breath of such a furnace like flax, nor can we, nor sir ought we, to be sustained by these whose nicer sensibilities we have thus driven over and outraged.

What would be the influence of this restoration on our rising clergy? We find it already difficult enough to gain for youthful ministers of the Cross the character and position which they require, and are we to cripple the feebleness of the fledgling who tries to soar, instead of bearing him on our wings in his upward flight of truth and usefulness? Are we to send him out contaminated? Is he to go forth with a message, in reference to which apostles trembled poor, alone, youthful, feeble, away from parental counsel and paternal support, and at the same time set a mark on him that he is one of a stock in which it is considered no reproach to be convicted of absolute immorality?—Com. Adv.

THE WIFE.

To a fond and confiding girl, few hours in life are so full of buoyancy and hope, of kindness and affection, as those of courtship; and few, it may be truly said, are so important to her future welfare and happiness. In her lover she too often sees all that is worthy and respectable in man; the ardor of her affection often softens the most offensive traits of character, and obliterates all minor failings. Whatever she may have collected in poetry is brought in aid of her imagination, which pictures in the most glowing colors, the character of a husband; and her affection persuades her that in her lover she has found a perfect representative of the ideal picture.

In dreams of confidence in the prudence of her choice, and delightful anticipations of succeeding years of affection and happiness, she is led to the altar; and how often, alas! does one short year bring home to her aching bosom the sad reality of the falsity and emptiness of her hopes of all mutual love, tender assiduity and lasting affection. Yesterday, the lover was all attention, and love marked every action; to-day the husband is cold, distant, and neglectful, preferring the company of the worthless and dissipated to that of her, who but a few days since, he flattered himself was dearer to him than all the world beside.

I can hardly picture to myself a situation more truly heart rending and deplorable, than that of a female who has found every want anticipated, and every reasonable wish gratified under the parental roof, with the warm confidence of youth, to repose on the bosom of affection, but finding her confidence betrayed, her affection slighted, and herself, with a helpless offspring, left to struggle with unkindness, poverty and want. Such, alas! is too often the case in this world of uncertainty, where we find, mixed with the kindest blessings of our Heavenly Father, evils, which almost stagger our strongest faith.

In my boyish days, when every thing was bright and sunny, and pleasure sported in beautiful perspective before me, I sometimes wandered to a neighboring farm house, to pass an idle hour with its lovely and innocent inmates, who were as thoughtless and cheerful as myself. Among these beautiful girls, was one more advanced in age than the rest, whose modesty and blooming beauty was the admiration and envy of the village throng. Twenty winters had passed over my head since I saw her sporting on the green, and yet, at this distant day, I cannot recollect her sylph-like form, her sprightly manner, and her affectionate smile, without a thrill of delight.

Eliza's hand had been often solicited by her equals, and even by those whose fortunes were much superior to her own, but none were able to win her heart. About her twentieth year, she met at a friend's a young gentleman who had just come to reside in the neighborhood; his figure was elegant, his features regular, and his whole appearance such, as, at first sight, was calculated to excite the affections of a young, inexperienced and susceptible girl. He was flippant, bold, and even boisterous; which, to one little acquainted with the world, might indicate a great degree of spirit; but it was in fact nothing but the ebullition of an irritable and petulant temper; to this man Eliza became most passionately attached—he offered her his hand, and it was accepted, in opposition to the advice and entreaties of her parents.

It was about this time I left the paternal roof, and new scenes and increasing cares almost obliterated the lovely Eliza from my recollection.

During one of the inclement nights of our New England winters, I was called to an obscure part of the city, to visit professionally, a poor and helpless wretch, who was pining with disease produced by intemperance. As I sat by the bed of the sufferer, I heard in an adjoining room, the voice of a female, pleading with great earnestness, with one who appeared to be the employer of her husband. 'For heaven's sake,' she said, 'do keep back every cent you can of his earnings; not a shilling that enters his pocket ever finds its way here. The tippling shop and tavern take all—it is hard, and perhaps wrong to speak of one's husband thus.—The time was when I did not believe it possible; but what am I to do—where am I to seek sustenance, food, clothing, and fuel, for these my freezing children?' 'But, my dear sir,' she continued, her sobs almost suffocating her, 'this is but a small part of what I suffer. Oh! I could sustain myself under all poverty and want; I could live with him cheerfully and affectionately under all vicissitudes of fortune, if I could only receive the love and kindness which is a wife's due.'

I enquired the name of her who had so strongly excited my sympathy, in a moment the beautiful Eliza flitted before my mind—she, who at twenty was so beautiful, so affectionate and so happy. I arose with an indistinct feeling that I should meet something which my youthful mind was wont to contemplate with such delight. I entered the room, but what did I see? the shadow of her whose early dawn was the promise of earthly bliss. Would to God it had never been my lot to have thus encountered her, who, in youth had left such a magic and undying spell on my mind. S.

MENTAL INDOLENCE IN THE MINISTRY.

There is no work in which men are permitted to engage that demands greater industry and exertion than the work of the ministry. Yet the complaint is often made, by those who respect and love religion, that large numbers of ministers are notoriously indolent. In many cases this complaint proceeds from ignorace or misapprehension, and is therefore wholly groundless and unjust. In other cases there is good occasion for it, which ought to be removed, and which must be removed before the ministry will enjoy that respect to which, when properly exercised, it is justly entitled. Undoubtedly there always have been more or less persons in the ministry who had no higher aim than to please their hearers and secure for themselves a competent support. Such persons, if they once obtain a comfortable place, naturally adopt the habit of taking things easily; and of course it is useless to talk them about the duty of being diligent and studious in their work, unless they can be shown that neglect in this respect may endanger their pecuniary interests. But there is a large class of ministers who sincerely desire to be faithful and approved workmen, who yet imperceptibly fall into habits of mental indolence which invariably bring their ministry into disrepute and destroy their usefulness. To such, friendly suggestions, from whatever source they may come, are always welcome, and they are never made without being to some extent useful.

One of the most common forms in which mental indolence manifests itself among ministers, is in a strange satisfaction with a very limited range of general reading. Perhaps their minds are accustomed to dwell upon those examples of divine sovereiguty in which God has been pleased to bless the humblest instrumentalities to the accomplishment of the greatest results. Every instance in which a "man of one book" has been a successful preacher, is treasured up and magnified, until they are quite satisfied that a few books can abundantly supply the intellectual wants of a minister. Or, perhaps they have a remarkable veneration for The Book which is designed to be the Christian's source of instruction, as well as his rule of faith and practice; and while they think upon the richness of its treasures of knowledge, all human productions dwindle into insignificance. They are much like that Saracen invader of Egypt, who destroyed the Alexandrian library, the richest collection of books in existence, and then quieted his conscience by saying, "Either these books contain what is found in the Koran or they do not; if they do, they are superfluous; if they do not, they ought to be destroyed." So with those ministers who, from a profession of regard for the Bible, dispense with the stores of theological knowledge which holy men in times past have laid away for the benefit of their successors; if they do not actually destroy them because contrary to the Bible, they neglect them because surperfluous to those who possess the Bible. In this way they not only take the credit of great veneration for the sacred oracles, but they also escape from the uneasy feeling which might attend upon deliberately neglecting to study what they were conscious they ought to study. How different this from the course of most of those whom God has pre-eminently honored in days past. The Apostle Paul studied and wrote with unexampled diligence, though possessed of a most vigorous and cultivated mind, and constantly pressed with other labors. His son Timothy, if he obeyed the Apostle's directions, was alike diligent in giving attention to reading. Calvin, when once urged to stop at Geneva instead of proceeding to Basle, replied, "I must study." And the pious Baxter, whom no one will accuse of exalting mental improvement above spiritual qualifications, once said, "O what an abundance of things are there that a minister should understand, and what a great defect it is to be ignorant of them, and how much shall we miss such knowledge in our work!" In view of such instances of diligence in reading and study, on the part of men whom God has made the richest blessings to the church, what apology can be given for neglecting those uninspired works which may help the minister better to honor the holy calling to which he has professedly consecrated himself?

Not unfrequently mental indolence leads ministers into the habit of discussing in the pulpit only a narrow range of subjects, and that in a dull and uninteresting manner. Among the attendants upon the ministry will be found hearers of every class. There will be some so hungry for the bread of life, that they will receive it with joy in whatever shape it may be served up. There will be others whose appetites are not so sharp, and to gain the attention of whom the simple truths of the gospel need to be clothed in language of freshness and vigor as well as propriety. But if, instead of this, they find the naturally unpalatable doctrines of religion served up in a mean and slovenly manner, by those whose ministrations lead them every week over the "old familiar track," without variation of plan, illustration, or language, the result is certain. They will either be driven to abandon the sanctuary altogether, or to seek some place where the glow of excitement or the refinement of thought gives attraction to philosophic speculation or palpable error. In such circumstances, the indolent man may, perhaps, console himself by claiming that he has avoided the "enticing words of man's wisdom," and that his faithfulness in proclaiming unwelcome truth has driven from his ministerial influence those who could only be retained by the presentation of unsanctified novelties. But we fear that the decision of all candid observers, and of the last great tribunal, will be, that his own indolence and carelessness compelled them to seek instruction where it was imparted in a more attractive and effective manner. No one can doubt, that there is an inherent power in divine truth which adapts it to the accomplishment of great and good results. To this God has added his promise, that it "shall not return unto him void." But before resting with entire composure upon this assurance, let the minister of the gospel inquire with candor and diligence, whether he has put forth those intellectual efforts which are necessary to bring the truth into contact with the naked and sensitive souls of men.

Mental indolence undoubtedly has much to do with the frequent ministerial changes of the present day. Under the spur of excitement and novelty, the newly-appointed minister often puts forth surprising efforts which meet with a temporary and gratifying success. The people are drawn together in crowds, and the highest expectations are formed. For a time all goes on well. But at length the spur loses its power, the efforts of the minister are relaxed, he finds that the reservoir of thought is not inexhaustible, the people become tired of the reiteration of old discourses, and both minister and people begin to think that a change would be desirable. Hence commences a series of removals which are alike hurtful in their influence upon the character of the minister and of the parishes in which he may make a temporary sojourn. Ministers often speak of the indications of Providence that these changes are proper and desirable, and perhaps in many cases they are truly so. But there can be little doubt, that in many other cases these indications might better be interpreted as pointing out to the minister the duty of becoming more industrious and studious, and thus recovering the partially alienated affections of a disappointed people.

The day has gone by for men to enjoy the respect and reverence of their fellows on the ground of having passed under certain rites, and been pronounced duly consecrated to the work of the ministry. If they would now secure that respect and reverence, they must be workmen that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. And this they can never be while characterized by mental indolenee.

PUBLIC MEETING TO WELCOME MR. JUDSON.

A public meeting was held in Boston on Friday evening, the 17th inst., to welcome this devoted missionary to his native land. It is spoken of as a season of almost unprecedented interest. There was Dr. Judson himself, the oldest surviving missionary to the East, and the first who gave himself to that work. There were the members of the Mission Board with whom he had been officially connected, and hundreds of pastors and laymen who had supported him with their contributions and prayers, but to all of whom he had heretofore been unknown by face. The sight of the long-loved and toil-worn man, whose self denying labors for a long period had done so much towards keeping alive the missionary spirit, was enough to excite the deepest emotions in every bosom. It carried the thoughts back to the time when he was brought before kings and councils, or confined in dungeons and chains, for the testimony of Jesus. It moved all the spectators with one common and deep impulse which will not soon be forgotten.

The services of the evening were introduced by prayer and singing, after which Rev. Dr. Sharp, as President of the Board of Missions, and the oldest pastor of the churches, addressed Dr. Judson in the name of the friends of missions under whose direction he had acted. His address was appropriate and touching.

He was followed by Mr. Judson, who told the audience, through an interpreter, that it was the dying request of his late wife, that he would not attempt to address a public meeting while in this country; nevertheless he could not refrain from thanking them, in the name of his companions and the converted heathen, for what they had done for Burmah.

During the singing which followed these remarks, a gentleman came into the church, passed rapidly up the aisle to the pulpit, and embraced Mr. Judson with uncommon warmth and ardor, which was as warmly reciprocated. It was Rev. Samuel Nott, Jr. of Wareham, Mass., the only surviving member, besides Mr. Judson, of that company of five missionaries first sent out from this country by the American Board. He had heard of Mr. Judson's arrival, had immediately set out for Boston to see and welcome him, and had arrived just in time to meet him in the midst of this assembly of his friends. After being introduced to the audience, Mr. Nott made a few remarks, in which he alluded with much feeling to the little missionary band, consisting of Newell, Hall, Rice, Judson, and Nott, who were ordained and consecrated to the missionary work at Salem in 1812. The first three have entered upon their reward, and the last two remain to congratulate each other. His remarks were followed by devotional exercises, and the meeting was dismissed.

PERSECUTION IN MADEIRA.—By a letter published in the Christian Reflector from M. J. Gonsalves, we learn that Dr. Kalley has left the island of Madeira, and returned to England. The letter also states, that the hospital, where multitudes receive medical attendance, and precious medicine for soul and body, is now desolate. Many of the converts, who through grace were rescued from the horrible pit of Popery, and the miry clay of superstition, are suffering for the truth's sake in the filthy dungeon of Funchal. Police officers are constantly on the alert, seeking new victims for torture, and Bibles and tracts for the flames. Many through fear have left the island. One of the converts, a lady, writes, that three hundred have left for Demarara, British Guiana; and many more were anxious to leave.

LETTER FROM JAMES A. BEGG.

Some months ago we introduced to the readers of the Recorder our beloved brother JAMES A. BEGG, of Glasgow, Scotland, author of the "Connected View," "Letters on the Coming of Christ," &c. At that time we expressed the opinion, that he was doing much good as a witness for the Sabbath in Scotland. Since then we have received another private letter from him, a few paragraphs of which we venture to copy for the purpose of showing what are his present feelings and efforts. His proposition to furnish us with extracts from his unpublished work an the subject of the Sabbath, meets with our hearty concurrence; and we do not hesitate, from a hasty examination of the work two years ago, to promise our readers, that they will find in it new and rich trains of thought, which will amply repay their careful perusal.

35 ARGYLL ARCADE, GLASGOW,
Oct. 1st, 1845.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—I should have answered your kind letter of July 18th earlier, had I not had the expectation of being in Edinburgh before now, when I meant to make the inquiry about James Stewart. Very severe lameness has been the principal cause of my delay; but if, in God's mercy, I am able, I purpose being there soon, and hope to be able to get some account of him for you and myself. I think it very likely that there may have been, at all times, individuals who have in quietness been obedient to what they knew as God's blessed will, but who had little wish to excite attention. And it is not unlikely, that some may have made efforts to arrest public attention, who were unsuccessful in these efforts. I myself know many who feel uneasy at their violation of the Sabbath, who yet do not see how they can do otherwise. They have not that faith in God which it is the object of the fourth commandment to cherish. And some such may yet be compelled by the God of the Sabbath to prove Him, by trusting in His promises, through their loss of peace of conscience while in disobedience.

I have said, that some may have even sought to awaken public attention to the subject, of their own accord, without success; and I may illustrate this, by showing the difficulty. In the early part of last month, I addressed a letter to Sir Andrew Agnew, on his efforts for the promotion and maintenance of Sunday, as the Christian Sabbath. I subscribed it, and sent it to the Edinburgh "Witness" newspaper, which, has been the principal medium through which Sir Andrew's letters and discussions have appeared. It would make little more than a column of their close type, but they could not find room for it. I sent it then to the Glasgow "Scottish Guardian," but they declined it, as not suitable for their columns, although the part they also have taken in the question, seemed to say that except on the ground of their party views, and their interests, it was specially fitted for their columns. I next sent it to the "Glasgow Argus;" they also declined, I can hardly say I think from any religious principle, whatever other motive may be supposed to dictate the rejection. I have since sent it to the "Glasgow Chronicle;" that paper is published to-day without it; but the Editor sends me word, that although he has not yet got it read through, from being very busy, yet he considers Sir Andrew wrong, and wishes opportunity to read it; and that he may, perhaps, insert it yet. If it appears in any paper, I will send it to you. I do not, however, expect this; for I know that amid many professions of independence and love of truth, secular journals, and religious journals also, and probably more so than the other, trim their course for their party's favor, as if truth had no existence. And when I mention that that long letter has been four times written, without its finding its way to any but the editors, it tends to show how, even in this country, there may have been individuals not only keeping the Sabbath, but in vain seeking the opportunity of making known their faith to others. It is, therefore, with particular satisfaction that I contemplate the success of your efforts in this cause, although I never feel that my simple testimony for God's authority, in the midst of this great city, is wholly in vain. Indeed, I have been informed by persons themselves, that it made their consciences uneasy when, passing my door on the Sabbath, in the prosecution of their business, they read the words, "Shut on the SEVENTH day." I pray, therefore, the Lord of the Sabbath to give me grace to prove faithful and consistent, to the glory of his name. I consider this my most legitimate sphere, where my manner of life from my youth up is known to many. I am even less buried, than if I were in London; perhaps a greater number have had the question of the Sabbath put before their minds through me in Glasgow, than might have been the case in London, in the same circumstances. * * *

I am very glad to find not only the success of the Sabbath Recorder, but pleased with its character. The newspaper press of this country, from its general want of any real principle of religion, is I fear doing serious injury. In America, I think, there exists much even of a coarser character in the periodical literature, without any thing more of a redeeming character. I am fully aware that it is not an easy matter to continue supplies from day to day, or from week to week, without fail, of what is unexceptionable. The mental fatigue must be great, arising out of the revision, if not correction also, of what is supplied by others, sometimes well-meaning but ill-informed, and at other times of those who perhaps might be characterized as better informed, but less soundly principled. I can, therefore, form some estimate, my dear brother, of your labor, when added to those of an editorial character, there are those of the duties of the ministry. But when you ask me to write occasionally, you will be the better able to give me credit when I state that my opportunities and leisure are limited. Besides my business, I address a meeting on Sunday afternoon. If my health permit, this winter I should like to give a few lectures on Sunday evenings on the subject of the Sabbath. Yet I should be very happy if I could supply you with an occasional article. But, as you get files of the principal English newspapers, I always think you have thus the opportunity of seeing what is going on, and easily extracting what is most suitable. It has, however, occurred to me, that as I have a portion of MS. on the Sabbath, fully written out, that I could regularly employ my boy a while each week, to copy a portion in a form for posting to you if you considered it worth while to insert it. Although perhaps containg few ideas new to the readers of the Sabbath Recorder, yet as each mind gives forth in its own form, and with some variety of illustration, it might not be wholly unacceptable. I have not abandoned the intention of publishing it here as a volume, if the Lord should give me the means of doing so, for I cannot expect much sale; but your printing it, if you thought fit, need not prevent the fulfillment of that intention. * * *

Since I received yours, another meeting of the Directors and Shareholders of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, and of those of the North British Railway, (the link in the chain through which English Sunday desecration will be drawn into Scotland,) have decided, by large majorities, against those who seek to arrest the Sunday trains. The last ray of hope which such may have entertained, may now be dissipated; for, by a series of amalgamations, the Scottish lines are becoming so intertwined in their management, that, if I do not mistake, before two years all of them will be carrying their thousands of Sunday desecrators in all directions. The loosening of the bonds in one form will lead to another, and ere a few years have rolled away, those who prefer to work on Sunday and rest on the Sabbath may be left at liberty to do so. Not that I expect all inconvenience to be removed—far from it—on the contrary, I am persuaded that those who will live godly in Christ Jesus, will have the enmity and opposition of the world to bear. Yet in the keeping of God's commandments there is great reward, and deliverances he gives, and breathing times, in which the church obedient to her Saviour shall have rest and be edified; and, walking truly in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, shall be multiplied.

Praying that our brethren, not resting merely in their obedience to the divine command, but regarding this as but the means of their sanctification, may glorify God their Saviour by a walk and conversation becoming the gospel,

I remain, dear brother, yours affectionately,

J. A. BEGG.

THE ORDINANCE OF BAPTISM.—The editor of a New Haven paper, who is not himself a Baptist, in noticing a baptismal ceremony recently performed in that city by the Rev. Mr. Judd, indulges in the following natural and appropriate reflections:—

"However much men may differ in opinion as regards the ordinance of baptism, whether it should be by sprinkling or immersion—whether in infancy or adult age, there is something in the ceremony as performed by this sect of Christians, adapted to strike all beholders with due solemnity. The devout prayer and Divine invocation, as it rises from the water's edge—the hymn of praise, clear and full, from the assembled company—the repeating of the injunction of Christ by the pastor as he leads forth into the water one of his flock—the benediction in the name of the Holy Trinity, are things which throw around the place an air of reverence, which but few venture to break by any species of rudeness."

UNDERSTANDING THE SCRIPTURES.—The following passage occurs in the report of a lecture on the Bible recently delivered in this city by Rev. Dr. Powers. It is a Catholic's answer to the Protestant doctrine that the Bible is so easily understood as to be a proper book for the common people. It entirely overlooks the difference between that understanding of the Bible which is necessary to salvation, and that which is necessary to explain all the geographical and historical mysteries of revelation:—

"Oh, but the Scriptures are easily understood. Let us see. In order to understand the Sacred Scriptures well, a person must be acquainted with the ancient languages; in order to understand the Sacred Scriptures, he must have a pretty tolerable knowledge of Rabbinical learning. In order to understand them, he must be familiar with history, ancient, modern, sacred and profane. In order to understand the Sacred Scriptures, he must be a good geographer, a good divine, a good grammarian and a good natural philosopher. And with all this staring me in the face, any man who tells me that the Sacred Scriptures are easy to understand, I must answer, I cannot believe it."

THE NEW YORK MEDICAL AND SURGICAL REPORTER, is the title of a periodical just commenced in New York, under the editorial care of Clarkson T. Collins, M. D. Besides general articles on the medical science, it is designed to furnish a regular report of the medical and surgical practice of the public institutions of this city—particular of the two "Cliniques," recently established, similar to those of Paris, where indigent patients receive gratuitously the advice of eminent practitioners. By this means, members of the profession, and students at a distance, may secure the benefit of the various discoveries and improvements made by the practical and scientific gentlemen of New York. Published once a fortnight, at two dollars a year. Address C. T. Collins, No. 173 East Broadway, New York

COPARTNERSHIP WITH THOSE WHO DO NOT KEEP THE SABBATH.—The article upon this subject on our first page contains views which will be new, and perhaps objectionable, to some of our readers. But we are anxious to get at the true doctrine in regard to the matter, and therefore cheerfully make room for the article, and solicit for it a candid reading.

DR. REESE, the County Superintendant, who has figured so largely in connection with the New York school question, has been removed by the Board of Supervisors, after a great deal of discussion. The vote on his removal was 11 to 2. The vote on a resolution to the effect that he was not removed on account of his being in favor of the Bible, was 9 to 7. The vote on a resolution that the Board had no objection to the Bible being read in schools, was unanimous.

AN EDITOR'S TROUBLES.—The following is from a late number of one of our Baptist exchange papers. We copy it to show the folly of finding fault with editors for occasional delays or unimportant errors:—

"We received, by a late mail, upwards of twenty letters, containing payments, orders, directions to change, stop, credit, correct credits and names of persons and P. O., inquiries about persons and property, schools, teachers, apostates, insolvents, runaways, books, papers, accounts, receipts, doctrines, discipline, correspondents, &c. &c.—complaints, critiques, abuse and information on a variety of subjects, too numerous and (some of them) too trifling to specify, and sundry other items not found in the inventory of him who gathered specimens of the world's contents in his floating dominicil. At the same time we received a large file of papers, several calling and claiming our attention to their articles or ours. Now if we do not remember every item of all this, forevermore, and the mixed medley received by other mails, before and afterwards—even to the spelling of a name—why we are a sorry, careless, negligent, not-to-be-trusted editor, who merits severe castigation, and we must stand and take it like a rock, block or stock, as in duty bound, whether it be inflicted by a maid or matron, saint or scapegrace—and take it too, without a sigh, groan, murmur, frown, blubber, contortion of muscle, nerve, integument, or the slightest motion of the most delicate and sensitive fibre of the head, chest arm, forearm, foot, leg, thigh, lip, tongue, or little finger—and bow, and with cap in hand, say,—'Thank you sir' or 'madam,' as the case may be."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

YOUTHFUL ENTERPRISE.—Mr. William A. Macy, of New Haven, Ct., left this port for Hong Kong, China, in the merchant ship Lucas, on Thursday. He goes out under the patronage of the Morrison Education Society, and will be employed, immediately on his arrival, in teaching the English language to Chinese young men, who are desirous of thus preparing themselves for the rapidly increasing commercial business of the country. The Morrison Society is sustained chiefly by men of philanthrophy and piety in England; and Mr. Macy will at once be able to exert a missionary influence, perhaps more extensive and important than in any other way. He is a youth of 20 years, a graduate of Yale College, a fine scholar, and gives promise of eminent usefulness in the great nation wither he has gone. Who will go and do likewise?

ENCOURAGING PROSPECTS IN INDIA.—It has been generally supposed among the Hindoos in India, that the loss of property was inseparable from a profession of the Christian faith, by the terms of the Hindoo law of inheritance; and this has been one of the most serious hindrances to the spread of Christianity and to the success of all missionary institutions. But it is apparent from a communication in the Missionary Herald of November, that this obstacle will soon be removed, and all Hindoos be at perfect liberty to embrace whatever religion they choose without any prejudice to their interests. This must be regarded as another of those important events which, in the Providence of God, are preparing the way for the ultimate triumph of the Gospel.

THE MOVEMENTS IN GERMANY.—The King of Saxony has taken measures tending to strengthen the new religious reformation. His brother, who is supposed to have contributed greatly to the taking of these measures, recently went to Leipsic, and there reviewed the Municipal Guard. The General of the Guard wanted to make the people shout "Long life to the Prince!" They, on the contrary, cried out "Hurrah for Ronge!" When the review was over and the Prince had returned to his palace, the crowd came to his windows shouting and throwing stones into his apartment. A troup of soldiers fired, killed twenty persons and wounded many others. The people, indignant, took counsel together, and while the King's brother was escaping, a popular deputy was sent to the magistrates, requiring guaranty against such conduct in future. The local authority wrote to that effect to the King, who so far from giving any excuse for the conduct of the troops, addressed a censure to the people. This affair (says a correspondent of the Evangelist,) it is probable will contribute to drive the Prince to measures still more injurious to liberty as well as to exasperate still more the people. The Council at Stutguard has passed off with great success. Ronge, and a large number of deputies from the various parts of Germany, and even from Rotterdam and London, were present. The political journals of the country are entering with zeal into these struggles for religious liberty and reform.

MISSIONS IN TURKEY.—A missionary of the American Board, writing from Turkey, says, "I find a spirit of inquiry generally diffused among the Armenians, though differing in degree in different places. Our books are sold to a certain extent every where, in spite of opposition." At Tocat, he says, there is a very interesting state of things. Some of the natives express an earnest desire for the establishment of a mission station in that place. There is a spirit of inquiry very generally waked up, which should be promptly met by the friends of truth and moral improvement.

CHOCTAWS.—There are now four female boarding schools among the Choctaws, sustained mainly from the public funds of the nation; but under the immediate care and instruction of the missionaries. The influence of the Holy Spirit has been enjoyed at some of the stations; and eighty-five have been added to the church during the year. From the stations and vicinity, including Doakesville and Fort Townson, $658 68 have been contributed within the past year for the mission and other benevolent purposes.

PUBLIC RELIGIOUS PATRONAGE.—The East India Company has lately contributed about $200,000 towards the erection and support of a Protestant Church in Calcutta.

General Intelligence.

SIX DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamer Great Western which brings us Foreign papers to a later date than any yet received—we learn that the crops in England are still in a partially depressed state. The harvest has been considerably retarded, owing to the unsettled condition of the weather. Late rains have aided in spreading the Potato disease which defies all attempts at eradication. Great damage has also accrued to the Corn crops all over the country—and it is feared that much of it will not be in readiness for gathering in before the advent of cold weather. A steady rise in the value of bread-stuffs will be the consequence.

At Liverpool, Grain of all kinds has receded in value, and flour has likewise declined.

In Scotland the same unstable weather has been followed by like disastrous effects.

From Ireland there are more favorable accounts, good weather having prevailed up to within a week of the Western's departure.

Orders from Holland and Belgium have been too limited to meet with a supply.

Strange diseases, of a similar character to that which infect the potatoes, are committing great ravages among 'fish, flesh, fowl and vegetables.' It may be caused by some peculiar emanation from the earth.

CHAIN OF RAILROADS FROM NEW YORK TO CINCINNATI.—A company has recently been organized in Ohio to construct a railroad from Columbus, the capital of that State, to Cleveland, on Lake Erie. From Cincinnati to Xenia, the Little Miama Railroad, 65 miles in length, is now in operation, and from Xenia to Columbus 50 miles, a railroad is in progress, to be completed, it is intended, in two years. From Columbus to Cleveland is about 140 miles, and from Cleveland to Dunkirk, the termination of the New York and Erie Railroad, is about 150 miles; over the latter route a railroad will doubtless be constructed when the New York and Erie Railroad is completed.

When these projects are carried into effect, it will be seen, that a great chain of railways will connect the commercial emporium of the United States with the greatest inland city of the West, running through some of the most important and flourishing agricultural districts of the Union.

The following are the distances from New York to Cincinnati by this route:

New York to Piermont,	24 miles.
Piermont to Dunkirk, by Erie R. R.	450 "
Dunkirk to Cleveland,	150 "
Cleveland to Columbus,	150 "
Columbus to Cincinnati,	115 "
Total,	879 "

This distance may be run on railroads in less than 48 hours. [Farmer and Mechanic.

BUSINESS OF NEW YORK.—No better idea can be formed of the enterprise and inexpressible activity of the business community of New York than by a walk through—if you can get through—the scene of the late disastrous conflagration. But a few weeks have gone by since an ocean of flame subsiding after a fierce and protracted tempest in which millions were engulphed, left nothing but a blackened field sowed broad-cast with desolation and strewed with wrecks. Now on every hand rise tall and costly edifices, standing shoulder to shoulder and planted as thickly as young trees in a nursery. Over the whole area swept by the raging flames now nothing is to be seen but the gigantic labors of the Genius of Brick and Mortar, and the dust that he shakes from his feet at every step. The fire has passed away like a dream and is no more remembered; while the 'Burnt District' will be in a few days the most splendid and imposing section of the city. When one sees how much, how quietly and how speedily the union of Capital, Labor, Experience and Energy can accomplish the mightiest works, he cannot help sending forth an aspiration for the time when all work for the convenience and comfort of mankind shall be accomplished on the same admirable and only true theory. THE WAY THE NOBILITY WERE "TAKEN IN."—The French correspondent of Wilmer and Smith's European Times tells the following amusing anecdote:

A good joke has occurred at Marseilles. An African, of the sweetest dinginess, recently arrived there, with a letter from the Governor-General of Algiers, stating that he was the cousin of the Emperor of Morocco, and entrusted with an important diplomatic mission. The authorities received the man with every honor; feasts were given to him, visits made to the theatres, deputations presented, addresses offered—even the troops were called out, and "the Prince" actually pass-them in review. The Government actually sent down a valuable gold watch and appendages for "the Prince;" but before it could be presented, letters arrived from Algiers, stating that "the Prince was a perfect humbug—a miserable adventurer—a swindling blackguard, compelled to make a precipitate retreat from his own country to save himself from the punishment his misdeeds merited." The poor authorities were terribly chop-fallen, and are at present the laughingstock of everybody.

WHALING CRUISERS.—A gentleman from New Bedford, assured us a few days since, that one ship belonging to that place had made four successive and successful cruises after whales within eight years, and had brought home upward of thirteen thousand barrels of oil. The crew consisted of thirty men, and during that period no spirits of any kind had been allowed on board as a beverage on any occasion, nor had any man died of disease, or been seriously sick, or met with any accident, except in one instance, when one of the men in a boat, after a whale had been struck, was dragged out of the boat by the bight of the line catching around his leg, and hurried downward with great velocity. While in this awkward and somewhat novel predicament, he seized his knife and cut the line—but to his disappointment it proved to be that part of the line which was attached to the boat! Finding himself still carried down by a force he could not resist, he made another attempt, and fortunately succeeded in severing the line which tied him to the whale, when he ascended to the surface, puffing and blowing "very like a whale," and was soon rescued by his companions, without having experienced essential injury! [Boston Journal.

DISASTROUS FIRE.—The new and spacious edifice erected by the City of New York on Randall's Island for the residence of the Children who are dependent on Public Charity, was burned to the ground Wednesday morning. It cost $60,000 and is nearly a total loss. The fire broke out about 1 o'clock A. M. It is not positively known how the fire originated—probably from some defect in the Heating Flues with which the building is furnished throughout, so as to be equally heated from the furnace in the cellar. The heating apparatus had been put in operation but the day previous, when the building was cleaned and scrubbed preparatory to the removal thither of the children from the Old Nursery and Farm on Long Island, opposite Blackwell's Island.

HEROES OF THE CREOLE.—A late letter of Hiram Wilson to the editor of the Granite Freeman says:—"A few weeks ago, in Toronto, I saw a colored gentleman who emigrated from Canada to Jamaica three years since. From him I learned that about 100 of the emancipated people of the brig Creole were comfortably settled in Jamaica and generally doing well. He had seen several of the head mutineers, and among the number Ben. Blacksmith, who had lately wrought with him in the same shop. He had heard of Madison Washington there, but had not seen him."

MELANCHOLY.—A horrible affair is related in the Cortland County Whig. The young and interesting wife of the Rev. Mr. Lord, a Presbyterian clergyman, settled at South Virgil, in the southern part of Cortland County, was found on Sunday evening two weeks; with her infant, six months old, lying dead upon the floor of their dwelling, with both their throats horribly cut and mutilated. They were first discovered by the husband and father as he returned from milking. The circumstances are such as to leave no doubt that the young mother committed this dreadful deed during a temporary fit of insanity.

GRAND EXPERIMENT.—The experiment of carrying the wire of the Magnetic Telegraph across a wide river has been tried at the East River with perfect success. The lead pipe through which this communication is made weighs over six thousand pounds, and was laid at the bottom of the river from a steamboat employed for the purpose, though not without great risk and labor. The whole plan and work, as we learn from the Morning News, has been executed under the direction of Mr. Samuel Colt, Engineer, who has been for some time making arrangements with the New York and Offing Electro-Magnetic Line, now soon to be completed. Too much credit cannot be awarded to Messrs. Fathom & Co., Water Street, who have made this continuous line of pipe, more than half a mile in length, perfectly air-tight, and without a single joint in the whole distance.—Through this extensive line of heavy pipe are four copper wires, completely insulated, so as to insure the transmission of the electro-magnetic fluid. The various routes, North, West, and East, have been delayed at the intervening streams, for the purpose of learning the result of this bold experiment of Mr. Colt, who well merits the applause of the public for its triumphant success. INTERESTING CELEBRATION.—One hundred years having elapsed on the 9th inst. since the formation of the Church of North Coventry, Ct., the event was commemorated by religious exercises. The divine blessing was invoked by Rev. Dr. Nott, of Franklin, now in the ninety-second year of his age and the sixty-fifth of his ministry. After religious services, the company dined at the Academy, near. At the head of the table was seated the venerable patriarch before mentioned. He was furnished with a pewter platter, which once belonged to Rev. Samson Occum, the famous Indian preacher, and also with a napkin made 150 years ago by a lady of Boston, who has been dead more than a century. Much of the furniture of the tables was of pewter, such as our ancestors used; and cake was served, made from a recipe used a century ago; nor was "bean porridge," a favorite dish of our ancestors, wanting. After dinner a vote was passed adjourning the meeting to October 9th, 1945.

WESTERN FRUIT AND HORTICULTURE.—We have before us the Catalogue of Messrs. Ellwanger & Barry's "Mount Hope Botanic Garden and Nursery," Rochester, N. Y., forming a large, close pamphlet of 44 pages. It offers to the public one hundred and seventy-one varieties of Apple-trees, one hundred and forty-six of Pears, 35 of Cherries, 18 of Peaches, 8 of Apricots, 6 of Nectarines, 6 of Quinces, 21 of Foreign and 5 of Native Grapes, 7 of Currants, 9 of Raspberries, 4 of Mulberries, 24 of Strawberries, &c., with a great variety of Ornamental Trees, Shrubs, Vines, &c. Roses alone fill seven pages of the Catalogue. The book is diversified with brief, clear, judicious directions for setting out and managing Trees, Shrubs, &c. As an evidence of the good taste of our Western people, we have looked over this Catalogue with interest. Where but in this country was such a nursery ever sustained in a region which but a few years since was an unbroken wilderness? [Tribune.

FEAR OF STARVATION.—We learn from the Charleston Courier that the failure of the corn crop in the upper sections of South Carolina has created excessive alarm—leading even to the migration of some thousands of the white population to Tennessee and Kentucky, and other western regions, to seek bread for their families, during the coming scarcity of corn, supposed to be rendered certain as the consequence of the late unexampled drouth. Several of the railroad companies have reduced the rate of toll on corn to almost a nominal charge, in order that it may reach the interior at comparatively reasonable prices.

BREACH OF PROMISE.—At Springfield, Massachusetts, Mr. William McCune has had to pay $800 for changing his mind suddenly. Mr. McCune lived in Ohio, where he became a widower; not liking that solitary condition, he set about finding another wife, but took a fancy into his head that she must be a Yankee girl; so he came to Massachusetts, and, like a sensible man, went wife-hunting among the factory girls at Chicopee Falls. He saw the plaintiff, Miss Lydia Smith, was smitten and proposed—all in the course of ten days. His proposal was received favorably, but now his purpose changed and he went back to Ohio wifeless—vouchsafing, withal, no explanation of his conduct. For this, as we have said, he has to pay $800. He will get no pity from the corn-fed lasses of the Buck-eye State, whom he originally slighted, nor from the factory girls of New England whom he has wronged in the person of a sister.

THE MORMON TEMPLE.—This remarkable edifice, which occupies the most imposing and highest position in Nauvoo, is built of fine limestone, has thirty pilasters—six at each end and nine on a side—each surmounted by a capital on which is carved a human face with rays around it, and two hands holding trumpets. The Temple is 128 feet by 88; from floor to roof is 65 feet; and from the ground to the top of the spire is 165 feet. The baptismal fountain is in the basement, to be supported by stone oxen. Each floor is estimated to hold 4,000 people, so that 12,000 persons can be accommodated, being about one-fourth the size of Solomon's Temple. It is said 350 men are zealously at work upon the building, which it is supposed will be finished in a year and a half, probably at a cost of half a million of dollars.

WONDERFUL ESCAPE.—On Friday Oct. 17th while Mr. George Frink of Hounsfield was driving a cart loaded with corn from the field home, his little grand-daughter, a girl about nine years old, daughter of Mr. Elias Frink, who had climbed on the top to ride, was jolted off, and the wheel passed directly over her abdomen, leaving her to appearance dead. She however revived after a short time, and though badly hurt, hopes are entertained of her recovery. The cart and load were supposed to weigh more than a ton. It is next to miraculous that she escaped instant death. [Black River Journal.

CASTER OIL MANUFACTURED IN GEORGIA.—Professor Means, in a letter to the editors of the Southern Medical and Surgical Journal, states that in consequence of the depressed price of cotton, Mr. John Willis, of Troupe county, Geo., has abandoned its cultivation, and successfully commenced the growth of the Ricinus Communis, or Palma Christi, (the Castor Oil plant.) During the past year he manufactured about 1500 gallons, which was sold to the physicians of Columbus and the adjacent country. The quality of the oil is pronounced excellent—almost destitute of color or smell.

SUMMARY.

A small trunk, containing probably about $30,000, in charge of a messenger of Livingston & Wells' Express, was stolen from the cars at Rochester on Thursday evening last, and has not yet been discovered.

One of the cutters at "Oak Hall," and a poor man, with a large family, received the intelligence by our last steamer Hibernia of a large amount of money, houses, land, plate, horses, carriages, &c. &c. amounting to from $150,000 to $200,000, being the effects of a rich pawnbroker deceased, of whom the cutter is sole heir.

The editor of the American Farmer says the cost of the Alpaca, including that of purchase and transportation, would not exceed, delivered at any of our Atlantic seaboard cities, twenty dollars per head.

Wallace Smith of Patchogue, a victim of the Millerite delusion, in compliance with an imaginary command of the Lord to slay five persons, a few days since attempted to murder his wife, who was only preserved by the interference of the neighbors.

It is estimated that the cost of the calomel manufactured in the United States for the past three years has been, on an average, two millions of dollars per annum.

It was announced by the Postmaster General in Philadelphia, in the year 1755, (ninety years ago) that great inconvenience had been experienced in consequence of the Mail from that city for Boston taking its departure but once a fortnight, but henceforth it would go once a week, enabling persons to write to Boston and receive answers in three weeks, which formerly required six.

The Editor of the Cleveland (O.) Herald has just received a private letter from Burlington, Wisconsin, containing the information that a certain well-known individual, who had, according to his own account, been visited by several dreams, wherein a wonderful secret had been revealed, proceeded, in company with some friends, to dig a hole beneath a tree which he had designated,—the result of their labors being the discovery of a vessel containing plates of brass inscribed with divers mystic characters, "of the meaning of which they were entirely ignorant, but which the prophet has since translated." We wonder what this new sect will call themselves.

The evidence given before the Senate Committee to investigate the Swallow disaster, proves that the number of passengers on the Hudson in 1844, was over one million. This year the low fares will carry it up above twelve hundred thousand, which, for the nine months of navigation, gives one hundred and thirty thousand passengers for every month of the navigating season. This is enormous indeed. Of the Eastern travel, the number of passengers by railroad and steamboat between New York and Boston in the month of September, by the several routes passing through Providence, and through Worcester and Norwich, was 19,314.

New Haven is now larger than Boston was at the date of the Revolution, and within 5,000 of the then population of New York.

It is said that Mr. Gough has suffered a relapse and that fears are entertained that he cannot recover.

Mr. Dwight L. Williams, of West Heartland, Ct., shot on Saturday an American Eagle of very large size. When its wings were spread they measured from tip to tip 7 feet 8 inches.

Recent rains have completely neutralized the effects of the great drouth which has for some time past prevailed among some of the Northern States, and this State in particular.

The proprietors of the Lowell companies and the new Essex Company down the river, have purchased the water rights of Lake Winnipissiogee, Squam Lake, Newfound Lake, and Great Bay, situated in New Hampshire, and which are the great feeders of the Merrimack river. By this purchase the water-power of the Merrimack will be immensely increased, and will secure a full supply of water every day in the year. The lakes which we have named, we understand, give a surface of water of between 80,000 and 100,000 acres.

A cabinet-made barrel and half barrel of flour, marked in gold letters, "Lyman A. Spaulding, Lockport," intended for exhibition at the fair of the American Institute, has been bought and sent off as a present to Queen Victoria.

The average number of wrecks of British merchant ships a year is 600! The average sum lost, about two millions and a half sterling. The average of lives lost, the lamentable number of 1,500.

The example of the Pittsburgh operatives has stimulated those of Newburgh to act likewise. They have made a demonstration in favor of higher wages, and published a manifesto, setting forth their case, in the papers of that place.

It is stated in the St. Joseph Gazette on the authority of Mr. Robert Lurtey, who lately came down the river, that the company of Oregon emigrants who some time since lost their way, and were high up the Missouri, were Mormons. They were left at Fort Vermillion, three hundred miles above the Bluffs; at one time about two hundred lodges of Indians had assembled there with a view to drive them off and exterminate them—but the traders had obtained, after much persuasion, permission for them to remain till next Spring at which time they purpose prosecuting their journey.

The Journal des Debates announces the arrival at Bordeaux of Mr. Washington Irving, the celebrated American writer. He is said to be charged with a diplomatic mission to France by the Government of the United States.

When the Royal family of France are domiciled in the palace of the Tuilleries, in Paris, their whole number, including attendants, is fifteen hundred.

A line of Telegraph is now in the course of construction from Brooklyn to the Westmost point of Coney Island, which is to be in operation by the first of November. Newspapers are to receive their ship-news, &c., by this.

The Express with the English mails came from Boston over the Long Island Railroad, with the Hibernia's passengers, in two hours and twenty minutes, running time—a rate of 40 miles per hour.

Eighty-four stray children have been taken to the house of the Coroner of Brooklyn, since the 20th of June last, when that officer of Kings county, benevolently advertised his house as an asylum for lost children.

The terrapin and the catfish are dying by thousands in the Dismal Swamp. Their bodies have an eruption upon them like the measles.

The Allegheny Methodist Conference lately required "that no minister shall be admitted into this Conference who uses tobacco in any of its forms, except as a medicine, and in that case satisfactory evidence shall be given."

General Bennett, of Arlington House, Long Island, is on his way to Illinois to settle the difficulties between the Mormons and their neighbors.

Capt. Coy, of the Mass. Guards, who represented Gen. Washington, in a burlesque of the Revolutionary war, was accidentally shot at Dedham on Friday. A Mr. Eaton was also badly wounded. Coy is not expected to live.

Thanksgiving in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, Nov. 27th.

About three fourths of the towns in Connecticut have voted not to license the sale of intoxicating drinks.

The coal field in Allghany (Md.) is said to consist of 130,000 acres, underlaid with available coal, 15 yards thick. In the common way of working it would yield fifty thousand tons per acre, or 32,000,000 of tons per mile.

A recent geological survey of Canada has led to a result of some consequence to artists—the discovery of lithographic stone at a place called Rama, on Lake Simcoe. This stone is said to be of the best quality, and similar material is obtained in only one other place in the world—Solenhoten, on the Danube. The supply at Rama is very large.

A man named Samuel Cunningham fell from the roof of a building on the corner of 12th st. 6th Avenue on Saturday, about 40 feet to the ground, while on the roof for the purpose of extinguishing the sparks from a chimney. His face was pretty badly cut, but he had not a bone broken, and will soon recover.

A Vermont merchant brought into market at Boston, a few weeeks since, ninety tons of butter—his fall supply!

PLAINFIELD FAMILY SCHOOL.

THIS Institution will commence its Winter Session on Monday the 27th of November. The course of instruction embraces all the solid branches of education, and is designed to prepare boys for college or mercantile pursuits. The French and Spanish languages, both written and spoken, are also taught on the most approved principle. References and other particulars will be given on application to J. O. MAURIAC, Principal.
Plainfield, N. J., Oct. 20, 1845.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
IRA SAYLES, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics
GURDON EVANS, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. HARTSHORN, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. STILLMAN, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. MAXSON. Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences. The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense. SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees

MISSIONS.

BY MRS. SIGOURNEY.

Light for the dreary vales
Of ice-bound Labrador!
Where the frost-king breathes on the slippery sails,
And the mariner wakes no more;
Lift high the lamp that never fails,
To that dark and sterile shore.

Light for the forest child!
An outcast though he be,
From the haunts where the sun of his childhood smiled,
And the country of the free;
Pour the hope of heaven o'er his desert wild,
For what hope on earth has he?

Light for the hills of Greece!
Light for that trampled clime,
Where the rage of the spoiler refused to cease
Ere it wrecked the boast of time;
If the Moslem hath dealt the gift of peace,
Can you grudge your boon sublime?

Light on the Hindoo shed!
On the maddening idol train;
The flame of the suttee is dire and red,
And the fakir faints with pain,
And the dying moan on their cheerless bed,
By the Ganges laved in vain.

Light on the Persian sky!
The Sophi's wisdom fades,
And the pearls of Ormus are poor to buy
Armor when death invades;
Hark! hark! 'tis the Christian wanderer's sigh,
From Ararat's mournful shades.

Light for the Burman vales!
For the islands of the sea!
For the coast where the slaveship fills its sails
With a sigh of agony,
And her kidnapped babes the mother wails
'Neath the lone banana-tree!

Light for the ancient race
Exiled from Zion's rest!
Homeless they roam from place to place,
Benighted and oppressed.
They shudder at Sinai's peaceful base;
Guide them to Calvary's breast.

Light for the darkened earth!
Ye blessed, its beams who shed,
Shrink not, till the dayspring hath its birth,
Till wherever the footsteps of man doth tread,
Salvation's banner spread broadly forth,
Shall gild the dream of the cradle-bed,
And clear the tomb
From its lingering gloom,
For the aged to rest his weary head.

JOHN GASPER LAVATER AND THE POOR WIDOW.

It was the practice with Lavater to read every morning several chapters from the Bible, and select from them one particular passage for frequent and special meditations during the day. One morning after reading the fifth and sixth chapters of the gospel of St. Mathew, he exclaimed,' "What a treasure of morality—how difficult to make choice of any particular portion of it!" After a few moments consideration, he threw himself upon his knees, and prayed for divine guidance.

When he joined his wife at dinner, she asked him what passage of scripture he had chosen for the day. "Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away," was the reply. "And how is this to be understood?" said the wife. "Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away, 'are the words of him,' rejoined Lavater, "to whom all and every thing belongs that I possess. I am the steward, not the proprietor. The proprietor desires me to give him who asks of me, and not refuse him who would borrow of me; or, in other words, if I have two coats, I must give one to him that has none, and if I have food, I must share with him that is an hungered and in want. This I must do without being asked; how much more, then, when asked?"

"This," continues Lavater in his diary, "appeared to me so evidently and incontrovertibly the meaning of the verses in question, that I spoke with more than usual warmth; my wife made no further reply than that she would take these things to heart.

I had scarcely left my dining room a few moments, before an aged widow desired to speak with me, and she was shown into my study. "Forgive me, dear sir," she said, "excuse the liberty I am about to take. I am truly ashamed, but my rent is due to-morrow, and I am short of six dollars. I have been confined to bed with sickness, and my poor child is nearly starving; every penny that I could save, I have laid aside to meet this demand but six dollars are yet wanting, and to-morrow is term day."

Here she opened a parcel which she held in her hand, and said: "This is a book with a silver clasp, which my late husband gave the day we were married. It is all I can spare of the few articles I possess, and sore it is to part with it. I am aware it is not enough, nor do I see how I can repay, but, dear sir, if you can do assist me."

"I am very sorry my good woman, that I cannot help you," said I; and putting my hand into my pocket, I accidentally felt my purse, which contained about two dollars; these I said cannot extricate her from the difficulty, for she requires six; besides, if even they could, I have need of this money for some other purposes. Turning to the window, I said: "Have you no friends, no relatives, who could give you this trifle?" "No, not a soul. I am ashamed to go from house to house. I would rather work day and night. My excuse for being here, is, that people speak so much of your goodness. If, however, you cannot assist me, you will at least forgive me the intrusion; and God, who has never yet forsaken me, will not turn me away in my sixty-sixth year!

At this moment, the door of my apartment opened, and my wife entered. I was ashamed and vexed; gladly would I have sent her off, for conscience whispered, "Give to him that asketh of thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." She came up to me and said with much sweetness. "This is a good old woman, she has certainly been ill of late, assist her if you can." Shame and compassion struggled in my darkened soul. "I have but two dollars," I said in a whisper, and she requires six. "I'll give her a trifle in hand and let her go." Laying her hand on my arm, and smiling in my face, my wife said aloud what conscience had whispered before, "Give to him that asketh of thee, and from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away." I blushed and replied with some little vexation—"Would you give your ring for that purpose." "With pleasure" answered my wife, pulling off her ring.

The good old widow was either too simple or too modest to notice what was going on, and was preparing to retire, when my wife requested her to wait in the lobby. When we were left alone, I asked my wife, "Are you in earnest about the ring?"—"Certainly, how can you doubt it? do you think I would trifle with charity?" Remember what you said to me a year ago; "Oh, my dear friend, let us not make a show of the gospel." You are in general so kind, so sympathizing, how is it that you now find it so difficult to help this poor woman? Why did you not without hesitation, give her what you had in your pocket? And did you not know that there were yet six dollars in your desk, and that the quarter will be paid to us in less than eight days?" She then added with much feeling, "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink, nor yet your body, what ye shall put on. Behold the fowls of the air; they sow not, neither do they reap or gather into barns, yet your heavenly Father feedeth them." I kissed my wife, while tears ran down my cheeks.

"Thanks, a thousand thanks, for this humiliation!"

I turned to the desk, took from it six dollars, and opened the door to call the poor widow.

"Here is what you need," I said, addressing the widow.

At first she seemed not to understand what I meant, and thought I was offering her a small contribution, for which she thanked me and pressed my hand, perceived that I had given her the whole sum, she scarcely could find words to express her feeling.

She cried, "Dear sir, I cannot reply; all I possess is this poor book, and it is old."

"Keep your book," I said, "and the money too, and thank God and not me, for verily I deserve no thanks, after having so long resisted your entreaties; go in peace and forgive an erring brother."

I returned to my wife with down-cast looks, but she smiled and said, "Do not take it so much at heart, my friend, you yielded at my first suggestion; but promise me so long as I wear a golden ring on my finger, and you know that I possess several besides, you will never allow yourself to say to any poor person, "I cannot help you." She kissed me and left the apartment.

When I found myself alone, I sat down and wrote this account in my diary, in order to humble my deceitful heart which no longer ago than yesterday dictated the words, "Of all characters in the world, there is none I more anxiously desire to avoid than a hypocrite," yet to preach the whole moral law and fulfil only part of it is hypocrisy. I read over once more the chapter I had read in the morning with so little benefit, and felt more and more ashamed and convinced that there was no peace except where precept and practice are in perfect accordance.

How peacefully and happily I might have ended this day, had I acted up conscientiously to the blessed doctrine I preach.

From the Boston Recorder.

SALOME MULLER—A WHITE SLAVE.

Salome Muller was born of free white parents in Germany, in July 1813, and sailed with her parents, two brothers, and a sister, with a large number of other emigrants, for New Orleans in 1817, where she arrived in March 1818, when between four and five years of age.

Her mother and one of her brothers died on the passage. Her father, with herself and surviving brother and sister, were fraudently sold under the "Redemption law," for a term of service, to pay their passage which had before been once paid.

Immediately after the sale, the family were carried about a hundred miles into the country, to the parish of Attikapas, where the father soon died of the fever of the country, the brother was drowned, Salome reduced and sold into perpetual slavery, and her sister to this day, has never been heard of by her German relations. Salome, having been reduced to slavery, was of course, subjected to its incidents, moral and physical degradation. When accidentally identified by her friends after twenty-five years' servitude, exposed to the sun's rays in the sultry climate of Louisiana, laboring in the cotten and sugar field, with head and neck unsheltered, as is the custom of female slaves, she had no knowledge of her real name, age, or family, but asserted that she was a slave, and supposed that she always had been. Her first child was born in 1829 or 1830, when she was 16 or 17 years of age, and was sent by her first master, one of the oldest residents, and it seems a wealthy and highly respectable citizen of New Orleans, to his sister in Cincinnati, to be nurtured and brought up.

Her master then gave her to one of his colored overseers for a wife, who retained her till she was sold to her last master for his wife, with whom she was found at 30 years of age in 1843.

Her friends have since successfully prosecuted a suit for her freedom, and now an action for damages is pending against those who are alledged to have reduced and held her in slavery.

Will some of your learned correspondents, who profess to have some correct estimate of the value of the human soul, be so good as to favor your readers with a rule by which her damages in dollars and cents, may be precisely or proximately calculated? T. F.

The above facts are gathered from the last number of the "Law Reporter," and may be relied upon as perfectly authentic. The enslaving of a white woman enlists more sympathy than a woman of color. But is this crime of any deeper dye? Has not God made of one blood all the nations of the earth? EDS. OF REC.

☞ Some folks are very fearful that northern papers speak too freely of southern institutions. Perhaps they do; but the following article from a southern paper will show that they do not much excel those who, from their opportunities for observation, ought to understand the matter.

IMPORTANT PROPOSITION.

To the Editor of the Baltimore Saturday Visitor:

The late outbreak among the blacks of Charles county, has given a just alarm to the friends of Southern Institutions, and has led me to inquire into some of the measures, which if adopted, would put a stop to this evil in time to come.

I propose then, in the first place, that petitions be gotten up immediately, and sent to the next Legislature, taking the appropriation away from the Maryland State Colonization Society, and its Charter also, for ever. The propriety of this course will be seen at once—for, as Mr. Calhoun said in the United States Senate, "as long as the idea is held forth that a negro can be set free at all, in this country, it will be a source of discontent to the slave." No one who knows this gentleman, will doubt his devotion to Southern institutions, whatever may be thought on his attachment to the Union.

In the second place, I propose that the right to emancipate a slave in Maryland, be taken away altogether. This will in a great degree reconcile the slave to his fate; as is now the case in Georgia—where it is made a penal offence for the Clerk of the Court to put on record any such deed of emancipation. This would make our beloved Maryland what Georgia now is, "a little heaven upon earth" to the slave.

In the third place, I propose that no more Legislation be sought in regard to free negroes, because the right to dispose of those in our midst, is with the slaveholder, who is the only one interested in the case. The slaveholders of the lower counties have fixed upon December as the time for the free blacks in those parts of the State to leave. Next spring might be a period sufficiently long for all the State to go. The question might be asked where are the free blacks to go? I answer: let them go wherever they please—to Pennsylvania, Liberia, Cape Palmas, or as a distinguished member of the slaveholders' Convention from Prince George's said, "let them go to hell—I never want to see them again."

In the fourth place, I propose that the elective franchise be taken away from all non-slaveholding white men, because the very circumstance of one white man being a slaveholder and another being from it, creates a caste in citizenship, and acts as a disturbing influence upon the valuable institution of Domestic Slavery.

I propose, in the fifth place, that it be made a criminal offence, and to be punished in the Penitentiary —— years, for any man to write, or speak against involuntary negro slavery in the state of Maryland! The necessity of this measure will appear from the fact, that negro slavery is an Apostolical Institution, and the foundation of a Republican Government. See letter to Gov. Hammond, of South Carolina, to Mr. Clarkson of England.

In the sixth place, I propose, that the Editors of Newspapers shall advocate the above measures, or any other regulations which may from time to time be agreed upon hereafter, shall be paid for their services, out of the State Treasury; and also that the "American Republican and Baltimore Clipper" be constituted the special organ of this great Reform. 1st, because of its readiness to engage in every good work; and 2d, because of the great success of the venerable Editor in behalf of the Natives. For who don't know that but for his ability and labors in the cause of American freedom, lots of foreigners, long ere this, with the Devil and the Pope at their head, would have deprived us of our blood-bought liberty forever.

In the seventh place, I propose, that the Legislature provide, by special statute, that the negro is not a man, but a beast, having no soul, and that his only business is to eat and drink, work and die; and that he is responsible to no being, in this vast Universe of God, but his master.

In the eighth place, I propose, that a Convention of all the people of the United States be called to change the Declaration of Independence, so as to make it read, "all white men are born equal," &c. I do not say that the words are not correct as they now stand, for Mr. Jefferson, who formed that glorious instrument, never thought that negroes were men; and you know what he said in his "Notes on Virginia," viz: "God has no attribute in his nature that can take sides with a negro slave." I would make the words in the Declaration specify "all white men," &c.—this would exclude the red Indian, the black African, and a small sprinkling of the French. To bring about all the changes which I have suggested, would cost money and labor both, but then I have lived long enough in this world to know, that any thing can be done by trying. Robert Raikes looked at the word try—put forth his strength, and Sunday Schools sprung into existence never more to pass away. Look at Texas, the refuge of virtuous debtors, and the future wide-spread field of Southern Institutions. Who would have thought, three years ago, that Texas would now be united to our glorious Republic, and that Northern men, yes, Abolitionists too, would have assisted at the marriage? So much for trying. Who would have supposed two years ago, that the large and still increasing Methodist Church in this country, would now be split into two parts—and that, too, by one good Southern Bishop, who gave one blow, with his Episcopal sledge-hammer, in defence of slavery, and smash went the whole establishment, like a hail-storm on a pane of glass! So much for trying.

In the ninth and last place, I propose that the Legislature cause to be manufactured a number of swords, at a cost of not less than $300 each, and that these swords be presented to the patriotic citizens of Rockville, Montgomery county, as a mark of respect for the splendid Victory of last month, over the black army of Charles county; and, as an additional triumph of that day, it is proposed, that the next Slaveholders' Convention be held in that town.

A Southern man with Southern Principles.

THE TRACES OF CRIME INDELIBLE FOR EVER.—While the atmosphere we breathe is the everlasting witness of the sentiments we have uttered, the waters and the more solid materials of the globe bear equally enduring testimony to the acts we have committed. If the Almighty stamped upon the brow of the first murderer His indelible and visible marks of his guilt, he has also established laws by which every succeeding criminal is not less irrevocably chained to the testimony of his crime; for every atom of his mortal frame, through whatever changes its several particles may migrate, will still retain, adhering to it through every combination, some movement derived from that very muscular effort by which the crime itself was perpetrated. The soul of the negro, whose fettered body, surviving the living charnel-house of his infected prison, was thrown into the sea to lighten the ship, that his Christian master might escape justice, will need, at the last great day of human account, no living witness of his earthly agony. When man and all his race shall have disappeared from the face of our planet, ask every particle of air still floating over the unpeopled earth, and it will record the cruel mandate of the tyrant. Interrogate every wave which breaks unimpeded on ten thousand desolate shores, and it will give evidence of the last gurgle of the waters which closed over the head of his dying victim—confront the murderer with every corporal atom of his immortal slave—and in its still quivering movements he will read the prophet's denunciation of the prophet-king, "Thou art the man!"

CHARMING POWER OF THE SNAKE.

Mr. H. B. Hamilton, in the Savannah Georgian, says:—"On the 29th of May last, I was riding on a small road in Dooley county, near the Allappahaw, when I saw a common sized fox-squirrel sticking to the side of a pine tree, some six or eight inches from the earth. When I got opposite to the squirrel, I saw him move a little on the side of the tree. I rode some twenty or thirty yards past the squirrel, when the idea occurred to me that it might be charmed by a snake. I immediately turned back in the direction of the tree, and when within eight steps of it, I heard a rattlesnake commence singing, apparently under the feet of my animal. I clapped spurs, and got off a few yards, stopped and looked back, and saw a very venomous looking rattlesnake, not more than four and a half or five feet long. I immediately dismounted, and took up a limb that lay near, and gave the snake a pretty heavy blow. At the time I struck the snake, the squirrel leaped from the tree, I think about three feet. I gave the snake a second blow, and the squirrel leaped again. All the while the snake had continued singing loudly. I gave him a third blow, when he sung weaker, and the squirrel seemingly got weaker in the same proportion. I then went to the tree, and found the squirrel struggling and panting for breath. I returned to the snake, and with the same limb I pecked his head off. I again returned to the squirrel, and saw him, in about one minute, breathe his last. I took him up, and the blood ran out of his left nostril down the jaw and neck. I am certain the squirrel was not hurt by me. After partly killing the snake, I went to the squirrel and touched it with the toe of my boot—it did not move nor try to get out of the way.—I am forced to the opinion, that killing the snake was the cause of the squirrel's death. The snake was not larger round, I think, than the wrist of a large man. It had five rattles and a button.

INVETERATE HABITS.

There is nothing more familiar to our daily observation than the power and inveteracy of habits, insomuch that any decided propensity is strengthened by every new act of indulgence, and virtuous principle is more firmly established than before by every new act of resolute obedience to its dictates. The law which connects our actings of boyhood or of youth with the character of manhood, is the identical law which connects our actings in time with our character in eternity. The way in which the moral discipline of youth prepares for the honors and enjoyments of a virtuous manhood, is the way in which the moral and spiritual discipline of the whole life, prepares for a virtuous and happy immortality; and, on the other hand, the succession of cause and effect from a profligate youth and dishonest manhood to a disgraced and worthless old age, is just the succession also of cause and effect between the misdeeds and depravities of our history on earth, and our endurance of worthlessness and wretchedness for ever."

WASHINGTON'S LAST TOAST. "Health to the sick, and freedom to the slave." The first part of the toast would be popular at this time, as most people like good health for themselves, and have no objection to their neighbors enjoying it also. But as to the freedom of the slave, it is a fanatical idea, and quite impracticable; and furthermore, it is a pleasant thought to dwell upon, that those with a skin not colored like our own, should enjoy the freedom which has cost so much blood and treasure.—Washington must have been imprudent, to give such a toast—it was a stab in the dark at our institutions. He ought to be voted down as an incendiary.

The Sea-Captain Rebuked.

Recently a crew returned to New York, from a pleasant voyage to the Mediterranean. The commander made it his daily study and effort to keep the divine commandments, and endeavored, both by precept and example, to lead his men to do the same.

After being in New York a few days, some of this crew wished to ship again. Their old Captain not being ready, they sought a new one in another ship, and went on board to complete an engagement partially made. As they stepped on board, some incident aside from them provoked the captain, and brought out a thunder-storm of oaths. The sailors looked on with astonishment. After he had worked off his steam so as to be safely approached, they gathered around him, and said, "Captain, we've concluded not to go in this ship." "Why not?" he inquired. "We choose not." "Why choose not, don't the wages suit you?" "Yes, that's well enough." "Then why not go with me?" "Captain," said they firmly, "we can't go with a man who swears so."

It was a word fitly spoken. Let all sailors imitate these, and the ship-masters who have not principle enough to abstain from taking the name of God in vain, will be deterred from a foolish and inexcusable practice, by the very presence of men who are morally their superiors; and the old proverb, "He swears like a sailor," will pass away. [N. Y. Commercial.

REMARKABLE CASE OF ACCIDENTAL AMPUTATION OF THE ARM.—A baker's boy, a youth of about 20 years of age, was engaged in raising some sacks of corn by a windlass.—For the sake of a frolic, he seized hold of the chain, wishing to be raised to the upper part of the granary; but he was drawn so high that his head came against that portion of the roof through which the chain passed. Not being able to hold by the chain, he fell with his arms stretched out. In falling, his left arm came in contact with the top of a door below, which was standing open; and the force was such that the arm, which was bare, was completely separated, at about a hand's breadth from the shoulder-joint. His body fell on one side of the door and his arm on the other. Under this extraordinary amputation the arm appeared as if it had been chopped off by an axe: the bone and muscles were as evenly separated as if they had been divided by a blunt knife, and the end of the bone was not at all splintered, a few nervous filaments only hanging to the wound. The fall of the patient must have been broken by his arm thus coming in contact with the edge of the door; for the only injuries to his person were a few contusions and abrasions about the skin of the face. He was, however, at first speechless and senseless, but he recovered his speech and conciousness in a few days. The wound blod but little; it was dressed, and the brachial artery was tied, to guard against accidental hemorrhage; the nervous filaments were cut off, but neither the muscles nor the bone required the use of a knife or a saw. Fever with delirium followed. A strict antiphlogistic regimen was adopted, and ice was applied to the head. This treatment was attended with benefit. The wound of the arm, which was at first discolored, assumed a good appearance; healthy suppuration came on, and the patient, after about two months, was perfectly restored. The stump cictarized well, and the bone was completely covered with skin. [Med. Gaz.

FREE MASONRY AND ODD FELLOWSHP.—The North Indiana Conference of the M. E. Church passed the following preamble and resolution.

"Whereas, we conceive it to be our duty, as ministers of Christ especially, as far as practicable, to avoid any thing calculated to cause dissension in the Church, or cut off our access to the people, and thereby lesson our influence; and, whereas, many in our country are strongly opposed to our ministers becoming members of the societies of Free-masons or Odd-fellows; therefore,

"Resolved, That while we would not, in our conference capacity, pass sentence of approval or condemnation upon either of said societies, yet we recommend that our preachers refrain from becoming members of them, or associating with them in their lodges."

KNOWLEDGE FOR THE PEOPLE.

RE-ISSUE OF THE

PENNY MAGAZINE,

AT ONE HALF THE ORIGINAL PRICE!

4000 IMPERIAL OCTAVO PAGES,

2000 ENGRAVINGS!!

A COMPLETE LIBRARY WITHIN ITSELF.

THE London Penny Magazine, issued under the direction of the Society for the "Diffusion of Useful Knowledge," is, unquestionably, one of the most entertaining and useful of all the popular works which has ever appeared in any age, or in any language. Its pages embrace every subject in the wide field of human knowledge, and as every article, whether on

passed the careful scrutiny and critical ordeal of an able committee of learned men, the work may be placed in the hands of the youth of the country without danger or distrust. The popularity of the work in England may be judged of from the fact that during the first year of its publication of the monthly parts were disposed of. In the United States too, the work has acquired no inconsiderable popularity.

The undersigned having purchased the Stereotype plates, with the Engravings, of the London edition of the above-named work, has commenced its republication in the city of New York. The whole work consists of about 4000 large imperial octavo pages, and is Illustrated with 2000 Engravings. The American Re-issue will be printed on good paper, and well done up in handsome paper covers, and issued

BY

24 PARTS AT 25 CENTS EACH.

The Parts average 170 pages each, and will be published every other Saturday, till completed, commencing SATURDAY, MAY 3d, 1845. It is an exact reprint of the London edition, without alteration or abridgment.

☞ The work is sold by all dealers in Books and cheap Literature, throughout the United States. Persons wishing to obtain it regularly on its issue, will do well to hand in their names to some Bookseller in their neighborhood, at as early a day as possible. Postmasters will be entitled to ten numbers for Two Dollars.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PUBLISHED AT NO. 9 SPRUCE ST.

VOL. II—NO. 20. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1845. WHOLE NO. 72.

The Sabbath Recorder.

AUTHORITY FOR CALLING SUNDAY THE SABBATH.

The almost universal custom of applying the title Sabbath to Sunday, has probably done more than any other one thing to make that day sacred in the eyes of the common people. We have once and again protested against this custom, because unscriptural and directly calculated to deceive. As corroborative of our remarks, we have thought it might be useful to copy the following paragraphs from an English work written by one Charles Larkin, who claims to be a Christian, and to write under the promptings of a sense of duty to his fellows. Read and ponder

"There is no authority whatever in Scripture for giving to the Sunday the denomination of the Sabbath. It is a theological delusion to use such language, and they who use it are guilty of misleading and deceiving the people. They are guilty of more. They are, in the midst of their pretensions to sanctify, guilty of impiety and a direct disobedience to God—'Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it.'—Deut. 4: 2. Both in the Old Testament and in the New, it is the seventh day; the Saturday, that is called the Sabbath. The very Bibles, printed by authority, by her Majesty's special command appointed to be read in all churches, in the table of time that is usually printed along with them, tell us expressly for our information, that the Saturday is the Sabbath. The practice and tradition of the Jews, preserved and acted upon to the present day, informs us of the same fact. In opposition then to Scripture, in opposition to the authority of their own church, in opposition to the information of all history, in opposition to the practice to this very hour of the very people to whom the fourth commandment was expressly given, and who to the present time deviate not in the slightest degree from the practice and custom of their ancestors in the day which they observe as the Sabbath, how dare these clergymen come forward, and with shameless audacity tell us, that the Sunday is the Sabbath-day of the fourth commandment? The language is unscriptural. It is not theological according to the doctrines of their own church. It is the adoption of a vulgar and puritanical cant, which is a disgrace to them. Sunday is not the Sabbath, nor has the law of the Sabbath any reference to Sunday. If that law be in force now, the strictest and most straightlaced observer of the Sunday is a violator of the Sabbath-day. It surprises me, that clergymen, for the purpose of gratifying the rascal hypocrisy and despicable cant of the time, and who should show to the world the example of a higher morality, and reverence for truth as the most sacred of things, should publicly evince such a contempt for truth, and such a disrespect to the sacred scriptures, by the use of language and the promulgation of doctrines so utterly at variance with both.

"In the New Testament, Sunday has no other denomination than the first day of the week. The first verse of the 27th chapter of St. Matthew, both informs what day was the Sabbath, and that the first day was not the Sabbath. 'In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre.' Another Evangelist tells us, that they came with sweet spices which they had bought to anoint their Lord and Saviour. During the Sabbath they allowed him to rest unanointed in the tomb; but with the early morning dawn of the first day of the week, with that piety and reverential love, which so strikingly belongs to and adorns the character of women, these pious matrons, anticipating the sun, allowing not a moment to be lost when they had a duty to perform, came mournfully to that which had been, but was not, the sepulchre of Jesus. The rest of Christ in the tomb was the last of the Sabbaths. In the morning he was risen, and his resurrection consecrated to piety the first day of the week, made it a festival and a day of joy—yes, of joy—extatic joy—for what else could it have been to men, who loved, reverenced, adored their Master; who on the Friday had beheld that Master, meek and lowly, humble and resigned, in the hands of his enemies, stripped and scourged, struck, buffeted, and spat upon, clothed in scarlet in mockery of the Imperial Purple, a reed placed in His hands, whom the winds and waves obeyed, at whose bidding the lightning would have descended, or the volcano burst forth, and the earth opened and swallowed up his oppressors, as it did Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, instead of a sceptre; a crown of thorns planted on his head instead of a regal diadem; who had beheld the Lord of heaven and earth thus arrayed, mocked with insulting homage, and exposed to the derision of a rabble populace; who had beheld him dragged forth out of the city gates as a felon whom it vomited forth, and ascending slowly, laden with his cross, along its dolorous way, the Mount of Calvary, and there as a malefactor, between malefactors, publicly executed—what, I ask, but extatic joy must it have been to men, loving, reverencing, adoring him, to have beheld their lately derided and executed Master alive, risen from the dead, victorious over death and the grave, triumphant over all his enemies? It must, indeed, have been a day of triumph and of joy, and naturally would become consecrated forever as a day of religious festivity and rejoicing—but made so by no ordinance—by no command—but solely through the feelings of deep, enthusiastic, reverential, awful love. It became no Sabbath, but a triumphal day—a day which Christian love, but no command, divine or apostolic, consecrated. Hence in Scripture the simplicity of its designation. It is marked by no peculiarity of name; by nothing that indicates its having any peculiar sanctity or holiness about it. The first day of the week. It is so called by the Evangelists. It is so called by St. Paul. This is the Evangelical and Apostolical denomination of it. The denomination of Sunday we derive from the heathens—the day consecrated to the worship of the sun.

"But I may be told, that it is called the Lord's Day. Alas! sir, of this we have no proof—no proof whatever in Scripture. There is only one passage in Scripture in which the Lord's Day is mentioned, and that with so little of speciality of reference to the particular day to which the designation was given, that we are left solely to conjecture as to what day the great Divine and Prophet of the New Testament alluded when he used the expression, 'I was in the spirit on the Lord's Day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet.' Rev. 1: 10. This is all the Apocalyptic writer deigns to say on the subject. There occurs nothing in Scripture, either before or after, to resolve the mystery of these words. They are dark, and left in darkness. Whatever the Lord's Day was, there is no description given of it; no command given to keep it more holy than any other day. So that even if we admit the probability of the Sunday being the day thus designated by the Apostle, still there is no command given to observe it as a Sabbath. As far, then, as the Scripture is concerned, we are in perfect ignorance as to the day that was designated the Lord's Day. The name occurs not in the Gospels, not in the Acts of the Apostles, not in the Epistles, solely and but once in the book of Revelations, and the day to which the sacred writer alludes is left as dark and mysterious as the Apocalypse itself. By tradition certainly the enigma may be resolved. But those whom I oppose reject tradition, and adhere to Scripture alone. To that authority, then, they cannot consistently appeal, but must be left to flounder and stumble on as well as they can in the darkness and doubtfulness of conjecture."

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The father of modern missions to the heathen is William Carey; a man who lived to see the field of Christian enterprise, into which he was the first to enter, extended to every great division of the globe, and hundreds of reapers engaged, each in gathering a few sheaves of the immense harvest. Mr. Carey died at Serampore, India, June 9, 1834, in the 73d year of his age. He was at first a poor boy, who learned the trade of a shoemaker, but by the force of native talent and industrious self-cultivation, he rose to the situation of village schoolmaster, and afterwards became pastor of a small Baptist congregation in Moulton, England, with a salary of ten or eleven pounds per year. By still continuing to keep school, and occasionally laboring at his trade, he supplied the deficiency of his revenue so as to maintain his family.

But this obscure situation could not fetter his vigorous intellect, or limit his benevolent desires. He had an uncommon aptitude for the acquisition of languages, and a capacious and far-reaching mind, that could embrace large designs and future results. Moreover, his heart was so warmed and enlightened by divine grace as to glow with ardent desire for the conversion of those millions of heathen of whom heretofore the Christian world had been negligent. By dint of talking, praying, preaching, and printing on this subject, he kindled the zeal of many of his brethren in the same cause. Such noble coadjutors as Fuller, Ryland, Sutcliffe, and Pearce, gathered round him; and on the 2d of Oct. 1792, in the back parlor of a private residence, a Baptist missionary society was founded. This was the earliest Protestant institution for the conversion of heathen nations in modern times, and the progenitor of all our missionary societies. Mr. Carey offered himself for the first missionary, and sailed for Calcutta in 1793. The missionary establishment at Serampore, which has been a well of life to many in India, was founded by his persevering efforts, and there, at the end of forty years, death found him still laboring in the vineyard, still ardent and happy in his work.

A HEATHEN TEMPLE.

The Rev. Eugenio Kincaid, for many years a missionary in the Burman Empire, has recently returned to this country, and is now lecturing on the condition of the heathen, to large audiences. In one of his recent discourses, he describes a heathen temple, which we have never seen paralelled. It stands in the city of Arva, or the golden city, which for six hundred years has been the capital of the Burmese Empire. The foundations of this temple are of solid masonry, composed of bricks of the best materials. It is two thousand feet square, the walls being eight feet thick and seventy high. On the top of the walls rest two rows of massive pillars. At each corner of the walls rises a beautiful spire. On the top of each spire is placed a huge bar of iron, surmounting which is an iron network ten feet in diameter, in the shape of a spread umbrella. On the bottom edge of this are suspended bells, of every size and tone. A piece of bright copper is attached to every clapper, so arranged that when the winds are strong every bell is set ringing.

On the top of this temple is a second one, one hundred and fifty feet high, and on each corner rises a beautiful tower, with its compliment of bells. On the top of the second stands a third temple one hundred and twenty feet square and thirty feet high, each corner having its tower and bells; and surmounting this third is a fourth and last temple, seventy-five feet square and ten feet high, each corner also having its spire and bells. From the top of this fourth temple ascends a magnificent spire, with an immense iron net-work at its summit, having numerous bells suspended from its edge. On walking along by this temple, when the wind is strong, all these bells, comprising an endless variety of tones, are ringing. A wonderful sensation is produced, as though music was descending around from the clouds.

The whole interior of the temple is stuccoed, and has the appearance of polished marble. In the centre is an immense throne, on which the King of Arva sits—on the throne is a gigantic image. Mr. Kincaid had the curiosity to climb up for the purpose of measuring some portions of it, and from the end of the thumb to the second joint, was a distance of eighteen inches. It was placed there at a cost of 150,000 rupees or $50,000. Besides this, in niches in the wall, are placed 500 other images, each one larger than life, each one upon a throne, with inscriptions on the wall directly above them. On the walls are other images in tiers, higher until they reach the lofty ceiling. Look about you which way you will, in this immense building, and it seems as though the gods were looking down upon you wherever you turn your eyes. Look upon this 274 feet of solid mason work, dedicated to idolatry, and to the thousands upon thousands of worshipers, who pour in their offerings of gold like water, and fancy, if you can, the expense of this idolatrous worship.

This temple, with all its images—the 3,000 bells—the sculpture, which adorns the building and the lofty towers, cost more money than all the churches in New York.

It was begun and finished within two years. Thousands were making brick, and more laying them, and thousands upon thousands engaged in the various departments. We can hardly calculate the cost of the building. Thousands of poor men gave two months' labor to the work, others four, and but few less.

NO TIME TO THINK.

"Can you spare five minutes; only five?"

"Well, what is it, Mr. H.?"

"I am desirous to say a word to you on business of some interest."

"Business, Mr. H.! why, I have business enough on hand for a dozen men, with twenty pair of hands."

"I know you have, Mr. A., and always have had, ever since I knew you. Have you made your will?"

"My will, Mr. H.!—are you serious?"

"Never more so. You are yet in the prime of life, to be sure; but men die every day, and there is no prospect of your ever having any leisure in this world; it would not be amiss to keep your house in order. You look surprised, Mr. A., but listen a moment. The last time I spoke with you, (some six weeks since,) you admitted that you had some doubt of your being a child of God—'though you have been a professed follower of Jesus, some twenty years, you had not that evidence of being a child of God which you knew you ought to have, and which you thought some did possess.' Permit me to ask; have you taken any decided measure to remove all doubts in this matter of such immense importance? I anticipate your answer, you have been incessantly occupied night and day, ever since we parted, harrassed with conflicting [illegible] the Sabbath. The daily papers you are obliged to con, but as for new books and common periodicals, you take them all for the benefit of your family, but don't pretend to read them. You must confess that things don't go on just right with your children; you have some misgivings whenever the question arises, whether you are bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; but then you can't get time to look at these matters. Now, Mr. A., what shall be the end of these things? By and by you must find time to die; and when you come to lie upon your death-bed, and I come in to pray with you, I shall pray, to be sure, that God would put beneath you his everlasting arm, and that

> 'Jesus would make your dying bed
> As soft as downy pillows are;'

but shall say to myself all the while, it's almost impossible, for he is resting on thorns.

His reflections can only be such as these;—Death!—Heaven!—what are they? I have had no time to think. What will become of my wife and children? I have had no time to think. Are my children Christians? I have had no time to think. Some of them are professors—I hope my wife is a Christian. Have I done all I could for them? Why yes—no, not exactly, I am a poor miserable creature to have had the care of immortal souls; but then I might have taken time, and studied their wants; 'where there is a will there is a way.'"

But enough. Reader, "time is the warp of life; O weave it well." Possibly you are erring from the narrow way. Look well to your misgivings. Examine well your hopes of heaven.

TRINITY CHURCH.

Trinity Church is identified with the very first establishment or Episcopacy in New York, for the charter of its land and buildings was given by William and Mary, in 1697, subject to the yearly payment of one peppercorn. The communion plate is massive and very valuable. Several flagons, chalices, &c. bear the royal arms, having been presented by William and Mary, Queen Ann, and the Georges. The churchyard in the midst of which the present building stands, is one of the most ancient in the city. Successive generations have slept there for a century and a half. It was once a very secluded spot on the verdant bank of the Hudson, but the noble river has been forced back a quarter of a mile by the growth of the city, and this ancient grave yard now lies directly on the noisy street. In digging the foundation of the present building, a paved walk was found three feet under ground and some curious relics. Among these a massive silver coffin plate, on which was engraved the armorial bearings of Lady Cornbury, whose husband was Governor of New York, before the Revolution. The inscription states that the Sleeper was Catharine, Lady Viscountess Cornbury, Baroness of Clifton, and Leighton Broomwood, in the county of Warwick, sole sister and heir to the most noble Charles, Duke of Richmond and Lenox, and that she died in New York, August 11th, 1706, in the 34th year of her age.

1697, the vestry of Trinity Church ordered that "no negroes be buried within the bounds and limits of the church-yard; and that no person whatsoever do presume to break up any ground for the burying of his negro, as they will answer it at their peril." Had this been prophesied to one of the newly awakened Sleepers at Ephesus, he would probably have deemed it fortunate that there would be no occasion to ask Christian burial in New York for the wealthy and intelligent Ethiopian, who invited St. Philip into his chariot, and was afterwards baptized by him. It is sufficient for modern Christianity that this interesting incident in Scriptural history is commemorated with perfect respectability of taste, by naming the Episcopal building for colored people, the Church of St. Philip. Queer things happen when churches go to sleep for centuries.

THE MORAVIAN VICTORY.

During the rebellion in Ireland, in 1793, the rebels had long meditated an attack on the Moravian settlement. At length they put their threats into execution, and a large body of them marched into the town. When they arrived there, they saw no one in the streets nor in their houses. The brethren had long expected this attack, but true to their Christian profession, they would not have resource to arms for their defence, but assembled in their chapel, and in solemn prayer besought Him in whom they trusted to be their shield in this hour of great danger. The ruffian band, hitherto breathing nothing but destruction and slaughter, were struck with astonishment at this novel sight; where they expected an armed band, they saw it clasped in prayer; and where they expected weapon to weapon, and the body armed for a fight, they saw the bended knee, and the humbled head before the altar of the Prince of Peace. They heard the prayer for protection; they heard the intended victims asking mercy for their murderers; they heard the song of praise, and the hymn of confidence in the sure promise of the Lord. They beheld in silence this little band of Christians; they felt unable to raise their hand against them, and after lingering in the streets, (which they filled) for a night and a day, with one consent they turned and marched away from the place, without having injured an individual or purloined a single loaf of bread. In consequence of this signal mark of protection from Heaven, the inhabitants of the neighboring villages brought their goods, and asked for shelter in the Green Hill, which they called the "city of refuge."

"YOU ARE THE MAN I WANT, SIR."

A fact was told me on the grounds at Ticonderoga concerning Gen. Amherst and one of his guard, which may illustrate a great truth in religion. [illegible] army of that General was besieging "Old Ti"—as it is called—then in possession of the French, the General, to try the fidelity of his guard, left the camp one night, and in his uniform passed out along the line. He found that by telling them who he was, he could pass them, and that some would let him pass without a word from him—though their positive orders had been to let no one pass in the night, no matter who he claimed to be.

At length he came upon one who ordered him to "Stand!" "I am your General," was the reply. "Stand," said the guard, "or you are a dead man." "Do you not know your General, sir?" "My orders are to know no man, and I know no General Amherst here to-night." To test him still further, the General advanced, as if to pass. But no sooner done, than the guard brought his glittering musket to his shoulder, and in a tone that could not be mistaken by the General, said, "Another step, sir, and I'll shoot you." The General turned upon his heel, saying, "You'll hear from this in the morning."

Morning at length came; and the guard, not knowing what the result would be—knowing only his orders, and the fidelity with which he had kept them, was summoned into the presence of General Amherst. Fixing his piercing eyes upon him, that officer proceeded with his intended though concealed test. "Did you keep guard at such a post, last night, at such an hour?" "I did, Sir." "Did General Amherst attempt to pass you?" "Some one claiming to be him, attempted it." "And do you know your General?" "Not when I am on guard, Sir," was his undaunted reply. "You are the man I want, Sir," said the General, clapping him on the shoulder; "I have tried you, and I know your are faithful—hereafter you are enrolled as one of my body guard."

Now, not to dwell upon the fact, that in an army, the office of a guard is as necessary as that of a general, my question is, who will not say, that in that office, there is scope given for as much valor, and as high an act of fidelity, as any circumstances the General was ever in himself afforded? And though we have not the name of that soldier, while the name of the officer lives in renown, if there is any virtue in war, will not every one say that the man on guard should be regarded as not less deserving of his country, than the General himself.

So in religion. Dr. Beecher once said, "God does not want all captains in his army." He wants men who will be good soldiers and true. All cannot be missionaries or ministers; all cannot be men of wealth, nor of equally great influence. But all can be faithful in their sphere—be that sphere the humblest in the militant host. And shall not the reward of men in the last day be, not according to their sphere of action, but their fidelity in that sphere? I believe that the man who, by an honest calling, supports in his proportion a missionary abroad, or a minister at home, will be as much rewarded, as if with the same heart he himself had preached the gospel, or gone on a mission. And the widow, or mother in Israel, who can give but her pennies and her prayers, will be as glorious at the resurrection, as if, with the same heart, she had been the leader of the sacramental host. What Lord Bacon calls "David's military law," will then be illustrated, "that, those which stayed with the carriages, should have equal part with those that were in action."

J. W. B.

From the New York Evening Gazette.

THE TOMB OF COLUMBUS.

Being in Havana in the spring of 1835, I went to see the spot which contains the mortal remains of this great man. These remains are placed in the wall of the Cathedral Church of Havana, on the west side of the grand altar.

Columbus died at Vallodolid, 1506, aged 70 years. 1513 his remains were removed to Seville; in 1546, they were transported to the city of St. Domingo; and in January, 1796, they were taken in great pomp, by a Spanish squadron, to Havana, and placed in the Cathedral. The particulars of this ceremony are related in the third volume of Irving's Columbus.

Since Mr. Irving's great work was published the Cathedral, to designate the spot which contains the relics. On the tablet is a medallion likeness of Columbus in profile; under it is the following inscription:

> "O! resto e ymangen del grand Colon!
> Mil siglos durad guardados en la Orna,
> Y en la remembranza ne nuesra Nacion.
> Fecit, Havana, 1832."

The following translation was given me by an officer of the United States Navy, then in Havana:

> "O! rest the image of the great Columbus!
> May it endure a thousand ages, guarded in this Urn,
> And in the remembrance of our nation."

CAVERN OF THE EARLY CHRISTIANS.

A cavern remarkable in an archæological point of view has just been discovered at about eight leagues from Guelma, in Algeria on the side of the Mlaia Mountains. It is hollowed out of an immense calcareous rock, and a circular entrance of seven or eight yards in diameter, is about 400 yards in depth, and runs from 1000 to 1200 yards in length, taking an inclined direction, and requires 35 minutes to reach its extremity. A thousand stalactites of various forms adorn its inside, and the ground is encumbered with a prodigious quantity of enormous blocks fallen from the vault. But what gives it its greatest interest is the number of Latin inscriptions at the entrance. They are for the most part illegible, but the name of Donatus is to be deciphered in more places than one. It belongs to the earlier times of Christianity, as the name of unknown martyrs appear, and there is no doubt the cavern was the refuge of the then persecuted Christians. The Arabs have many fabulous legends on the subject, and dread entering it, [illegible] an Arab, the Chief Deradji Ben Kerad, who led some Frenchmen into this cave, the silence of which has not been before disturbed for ages.

PHRENOLOGY, MESMERISM, RELIGION.

There are two recent offsets from Physiology, which have been supposed fraught with influences unfavorable to religion. I refer to Phrenology and Mesmerism. The first has been thought to favor materialism, and to lessen human responsibility; and the latter, to bring miracles into disrepute; and to direct us, for the cure of the body and the soul, to a class of dreaming pretenders, whose responses are about as much to be relied on, as those of the oracles of Delphos, the god of Ekron, or the witch of Endor; and whom it is about as impious to consult. The merits of these new branches of science, this is not the proper occasion to discuss; nor is it easy as yet to ascertain definitely what principles in them are settled. But admitting their pretensions, the first seems to leave the question of materialism just where it found it; since it is as easy to see how an immaterial soul should act through a hundred organs as through one. Nor does it seem to me more difficult, on natural principles, to see how the mind may act at a distance, through the undulations of a mesmeric medium, than to see how light and heat are transmitted by the waves of a luminiferous ether. On the other hand, if physiology and phrenology tend to materialism, certainly mesmerism tends more decidedly to immaterialism, as the conversion of several materialists will testify. It does, also, open to the Christian, (admitting its statements to be true,) most interesting glimpses of the mode in which the mind may act when freed from flesh and blood, and clothed with a spiritual body. Indeed, I doubt not, that in regard both to Phrenology and Mesmerism, the general principle will prove true, that the more ominous of evil any branch of knowledge seems to be, in its incipient state, the more prolific it will ultimately become, in illustrations favorable both to morality and religion.

SIMPLICITY.—The more I see of the world, the more I am satisfied that simplicity is inseparably the companion of true greatness. I never yet knew a truly great man—a man who overtopped his fellow men who did not possess a certain playful, almost infantile simplicity. True greatness never struts on the stilts or plays the king upon the stage. Conscious of its elevation, and knowing in what that elevation consists, it is happy to act its parts as other men, in the common amusement and business of mankind. It is not afraid of being under valued.

A LAKE OF BLOOD.—Dr. Dick estimates the number of those who have perished directly or indirectly by war, at fourteen thousand millions. Edmund Burke placed the number at thirty-five thousand millions. Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith, has taken the estimate of Dr. Dick, and assuming the average quantity of blood in a common sized person, states that the veins of those fourteen thousand millions would fill a circular lake of more than seventeen miles in circumference, and ten feet deep, in which all the navies of the world might float!

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 6, 1845.

MORALITY OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS COMPARED.

It is often asserted, that Christ taught a higher and purer morality than Moses and the prophets. Those who take this view, also maintain, that the Old Testament is superseded, and rendered useless as a guide for our conduct, by the New. Of course, therefore, sin is a want of conformity to that system of doctrine, or law, which is given in the New Testament. Men are guilty, or righteous —not as they want, or possess, a conformity to a law given before Christ came, but—as they want, or possess, a conformity to this new law.

It follows irresistibly from this view, that the doctrine of atonement is a fable. This is clearly seen by most of those who espouse the sentiment in question, and accordingly the doctrine of atonement is entirely exploded from their creed. But there are others, whose minds are more or less corrupted with the sentiment, who would shrink instinctively from any depreciation of the sacrifice of Christ. They suppose, that by exalting the morality of the New Testament so far above the occurs to them, that by this very course they degrade their Saviour. For such brethren we feel concerned, lest the word which they so unwarily embrace, should prove corrosive as a canker.

If the Old Testament was entirely abrogated by the coming of Christ, and the Lord's people were from that time put under a rule of conduct entirely new, it is clear, that Christ did not die to save his people from the penalty of any law which they had already transgressed. For they certainly could not have transgressed a law, which they were never under. They were never under Old Testament law; at least, none but Jews. Hence, if Christ's death had respect to that law in the way of atonement, it could, according to the doctrine in question, have availed for none except such of his people as were contained in the Jewish nation. It could have availed nothing for any others. The rest of his people, it seems, have lived under a different law—a law which had no existence till he came and published it. We cannot, therefore, suppose that his death was a real atonement for the sins of his people, unless we suppose it had respect to two different laws at the same time, under one of which his people were antecedently to his coming, and under the other of which they have been ever since. But this supposition is inadmissible, being at variance both with reason and with scripture. Besides, on this supposition, the great body of Christ's people were not already in need of a Saviour when he came, but were rendered so by his coming. Yet all scripture goes to show, that Christ came because the world was already

Let it, however, be granted—for argument's sake—that Christ's death had respect to two different laws at the same time. Each of these laws must have its own proper penalty; for a law without a penalty is no law at all. The one which inculcates the higher and purer morality, will of course be sanctioned by the heavier penalty. It follows, therefore, that of the whole company of those finally redeemed by the blood of Christ, one class will be found giving praise for recovery from greater ruin, and another class for recovery from less ruin. Instead of all viewing themselves as having once been in the same horrible pit of alienation from God, they view themselves as having been in different circumstances, according to the laws under which they were placed. Orthodoxy is not willing to be responsible for such results.

The results growing out of the assumption, that the New Testament morality is higher and purer than that of the Old, are so inconsistent with the notion of an atonement, that thinking persons either reject the assumption entirely, or else discard the atonement. Suppose, however, it be admitted, that the great object of Christ's mission was to inculcate a purer morality than what is taught in the Old Testament, rather than "to magnify and make honorable" a law already violated. We would then ask, upon what ground did he place that morality? Did he place it upon the ground of the natural relation existing between man and his Maker, and between one man and another? In other words, did he enjoin this morality upon men, because as the creatures of God they were bound thus to serve and glorify the one who created them! If so, he placed his morality upon THE VERY SAME ground, on which the morality of the Old Testament is placed. Wherefore, instead of being a purer and higher morality, it must be the very same. To suppose it different, we must necessarily suppose it to be placed on different ground, or in other words, to be founded in different relations. We can conceive of Christ's unfolding more fully to our view the moral injunctions of Moses and the prophets;—we can conceive of his rectifying all mistakes concerning their nature and diversified applications;—we can conceive of his breaking the crust of carnality, within which they had been confined, and allowing them that free expansion, to which their own nature tended;—we can conceive of his developing, by his expositions, their purity and searching spirituality;—but we cannot admit, that he taught a morality of higher order, or one that rested on different grounds. We can freely admit, that the effect of his ministration is to promote a higher and more perfect conformity to a law already developed; but that is a very different thing from admitting that the law itself is different.

But if we suppose, that Christ did place the morality which he taught upon a different ground from what it is placed on by Moses and the prophets; —that is, if we suppose, it was not placed on the ground of the natural relation which men sustain to God, as creatures to Creator—we must then suppose, that he placed it upon the ground of his own special interposition in their favor. If so, then it becomes necessary for us to inquire, what is the particular nature of that interposition? For unless we understand its nature, no obligation founded on it can be made to take hold of us, and wake us up to action. If we find that interposition to be of the nature of an atonement for sins, then a prior obligation must at once be admitted, devolved by a law to which the atonement has respect. Hence it would follow, that the morality of the New Testament is not placed solely on the ground of Christ's interposition in our behalf, but has its origin farther back. But if we go farther back, we can find no other ground to rest it upon but the natural relation of men to God, as creatures to Creator; which is contrary to the supposition. We are therefore forced to the alternative, that Christ's intervention in our behalf is not a real atonement for sins. So that we come back at once to the other supposition, that the work of Christ was simply to instruct us in God's will, and to commend obedience by the force of his own example.

But if Christ inculcated the will of God, upon what is that will founded? Certainly not upon sake of commanding. He does not utter his will for the mere sake of showing his authority. His will is founded in reason. And, as we have just seen, it cannot be founded merely in Christ's mediation, it follows that it must be grounded on the great primary relation which we all sustain to God as the creatures of his hand.

Whether, therefore, we suppose the Lord Jesus Christ to be our atoning High Priest, as well as Prophet; or whether we regard him as a Prophet merely, we cannot, without the greatest inconsistency, suppose the morality of the Old Testament to be inferior to that of the New, or that the New is any thing more than an expansion of the same great principles which are found in the Old, enforced by additional sanctions.

Are these sentiments confirmed by Christ himself? The highest duty that man is capable of discharging to his God, is "to love Him with all the heart, and with all the soul, and with all the mind, and with all the strength." The highest duty that he can perform towards his neighbor, is to "love him as himself." To no higher degree of perfeetion than this can man attain under any possible circumstances. Yet our Saviour taught that on these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets. In summing up all the duties necessary for one man to discharge towards another, he said, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." And then adds, "FOR this is the LAW AND THE PROPHETS." *

PLYMON SEAVER AND THE VERMONT OBSERVER.

The last number of the Vermont Observer contains our article announcing the release of Plymon Seaver from prison, connected with various editorial expressions of sorrow, that the Sabbath Recorder should manifest sympathy for "this offender against law and order." Among other things, the editor says, "We know Plymon Seaver, and have known him from a boy, and know nothing against him, only that he has become a rank Murrayite, i. e. infidel, and cares no more for the seventh day than for the first day, and would as soon work on the former as the latter." Here then we have the sum and substance of poor Seaver's offending—he is a Murryite, i. e. infidel, and therefore, although nothing special is known against him, he ought to be fined and imprisoned for working on the first day of the week! Had this doctrine been advocated two hundred years ago by one of the persecutors of the English Anabaptists, it would not have surprised us. Nor should we have been much surprised to hear it from the lips of one of those old puritanic persecutors who thought it necessary to whip and imprison the early Baptists of this country for not bringing their children to be sprinkled. But to hear it from the editor of a Baptist paper in the State of Vermont, in the middle of the nineteenth century, we must confess excites our surprise. Does the editor really think, that in such a case imprisonment has a healthful influence upon the offender himself? If so, let him read Mr. Seaver's account of its effect upon him, which was to increase his hostility to the custom for neglecting which he was punished. Does he think it would serve as a warning to those who might be in danger of doing likewise? If so, we advise him to read some of the numerous articles which have been written upon the subject by those friendly to the imprisoned man. From them he will learn, that instead of serving as a warning, it has tended directly to arouse a disposition to do likewise. As a matter of policy, then, this imprisonment of Plymon Seaver has proved a total failure. It has put back the cause of Sunday sanctification in Vermont indefinitely more than the late State Convention has put it forward. Hence we think, that if the editor of the Vermont Observer would expend his strength in showing the folly of the whole proceeding, instead of finding fault with us for not approving it, he would much more effectually serve what he probably deems a good cause.

BAPTISM OF A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER.—The Rev. Robert Wallace, who has been for the last twelve years pastor of the Free Presbyterian Church in Broad street, Birmingham, has recently embraced the views of the Baptists and been immersed. Mr. W. is spoken of in high terms, as an able and talented man. Though much esteemed by his church, and enjoying a handsome salary, he has renounced all for the sake of a good conscience. It seems that he had conceived a high respect for the character of the late Dr. Carson as a man and a theologian; and when the Doctor's Baptism appeared, he felt anxious to see how weak might be the arguments of a great and good man in favor of what he esteemed an erroneous and unscriptural view. Under this influence he commenced reading the work, in which he found facts and arguments that shook his old convictions on the subject and rendered him not a little uneasy. After various attempts to throw off the subject, in which he was unsuccessful, he at length commenced a careful investigation of it, which resulted in a conviction that there was no scriptural warrant for infant baptism. He spoke freely to his brethren in regard to his change of views, and finally withdrew from them to join a people among whom he thought the true mode of baptism was practiced.

ELDER ELON GALUSHA.

We have seen in some of our exchanges an announcement of the excommunication of this brother from the church to which he belonged. Most of our readers know, that Mr. Galusha was a minister of high standing in the Baptist denomination; and many of them are aware, that he adopted the views of Mr. Miller concerning the end of the world. The adoption of these views was probably considered heresy by the church of which he was a member,—we know it is so considesed by the [illegible] affecting his moral character was ever [illegible] him, we have not been able to learn. All the accounts which we have seen have been brief, simply stating the fact of his expulsion, but nothing more. We think it is due to the public—we think it is due to those who have long known and esteemed Mr. Galusha, and especially to those who have regarded him as one of the pillars of the denomination he represented—that it should be stated distinctly, and unequivocally, whether the church found any other sin in him than that of believing that "the end of all things is at hand." We hope some of our exchanges will enlighten us on this point. *

THE BAPTIST RECORD, a weekly paper which has been published at Philadelphia for nearly ten years past by the American Baptist Publication Society, is to be discontinued at the close of the present year. Three reasons are given for this course. The first is, a conviction that the issuing of a weekly paper is foreign to the objects of the Society. The second is, the exceeding difficulty of maintaining a neutral position in respect to Domestic Slavery since the withdrawal of the southern portion of the Church. The third is, that the Society can not afford to continue it at the expense of funds contributed for other purposes. It is quite probable, that the discontinuance of the Record will lead to the establishment of an independent paper devoted to the interests of the Baptists of Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

THE CHRISTIAN PARLOR MAGAZINE for November [illegible] neatly executed title page, and a fine plate of Philadelphia, where was gathered one of the seven churches of Asia. The articles, as usual, are of a high order. Among them are "The American Christian Citizen," "The Transplanted Flower" by W. H. Burleigh, "Sketches of Life in the City," "The Parlor," "Our Family," &c. Published by Rev. D. Mead, 141 Nassau St.

NEW JERSEY BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION.—A meeting of this body is to be held at Piscataway, N. J., on the 12th inst. Besides the regular business of the anniversary, Mr. Kincaid is expected to be present, and speak of his labors in other lands, the condition of the heathen, and the power of the gospel when preached among them.

☞ Our Pennsylvania brethren will no doubt take immediate action towards obtaining the passage of a law the coming session of their Legislature, which shall render them as secure in the enjoyment of their religious rights, as the observers of the first day of the week are. We send out this week an amended form of the petition we published a week or two since. We are advised that it is important to have two petitions circulated in each neighborhood, and each one of them signed by every individual, so that one may be sent to each branch of the Legislature. We hope that the signatures, not only of those who are actually members of the church, will be obtained, but also of all those who make it a matter of conscience to keep the Sabbath.

CORRECTION.—Some of our readers are aware, that there has been considerable difficulty among the officers and members of the American Female Moral Reform Society, touching the question who should edit their paper, and certain other matters connected with their internal organization. The disaffected persons have published one or two statements of their grievances, to which the regular officers have replied. We have not felt sufficiently interested in the strife to give it that attention which would be necessary to express an opinion as to the right or wrong in the case. But our attention has been called to a paragraph in the last paper of the minority, which demands a notice.

It seems that in order to substantiate some point in their case, the majority have availed themselves of the testimony of Mr. JOHN H. TOBITT. This testimony the minority have thought it necessary to invalidate, which they have attempted to do by intimating that Mr. Tobitt is a man of so little religious principle that he keeps his office open on "the Sabbath." Now it so happens that we hire an office of Mr. Tobitt, and that the 'Sabbath' work to which reference is here made is done by a man employed by us, who is probably as conscientious about resting on the seventh day of the week and working on the first, as most people are about resting on the first. Such being the case, the charge against Mr. Tobitt is UNTRUE and UNJUST. We are sorry it has been made, not only because it may injure an innocent man, but also because it may cast suspicion upon the other testimony of those who make one statement without sufficiently investigating the facts. We cannot doubt, however, that when the facts are known, every reasonable effort will be made to undo the injury which may have been done.

NO JEWS AMONG CRIMINALS.—The Recorder of New York, a few years ago, stated that during his term of office not a single Jew had ever been arraigned before him for crime, neither had he known a single representative of that nation to be in the penitentiary or almshouse. A table has recently been published, exhibiting the number of crimes committed in New York within the last six months, together with the birthplaces of the criminals. It includes a great variety of nations, but not a single Jew. Such facts speak loudly for the general morality of the children of Israel.

CHINA AND THE CHINESE.

Two addresses on China and the Chinese were delivered in New York on Wednesday and Friday evenings of last week, by Hon. FELTCHER WEBSTER. They consisted chiefly of facts and incidents which fell under his personal observation while on a recent official visit to the Celestial Empire. As the subject is one of very general interest, and as Mr. Webster's manner of treating it was remarkably lucid and concise, our readers will thank us for making the following copious extracts from the reports of the addresses which appeared in the Daily Tribune:—

In China there are three sorts of religion—that of Confucius for the learned and liberal classes, the religion of Landson, for the middle class, [illegible] is a hereditary Buddhist, but is also a follower of Confucius. There is no prohibition of religion in China, nor any established State religion. Not even the Christian religion would have been proscribed had it not been for the quarrels among the early missionaries themselves, who after much bickering had called in the authority of the Pope to settle the matter. This interference of a foreign potentate in the affairs of his kingdom aroused the deepest indignation of the Emperor, and its immediate result was the prohibition of the Christian religion, under pain of death, throughout his vast empire. Mr. W. then proceeded to institute a comparison between the Catholic religion and the Buddhism of the lower orders of the Chinese. Both had their idols, images, worship and prayer to saints, gifts; both burn incense; the priests shave their heads, &c. The Chinese, however, are constantly asking of their gods and saints the most trival things, and do not pretend to perform any act of the least importance without invoking their aid and protection. In every house is an image of the God of Longevity; and he is faithfully and devoutly worshiped, too. The Chinese Pantheon is pretty extensive. Mr. W. counted in a single temple the images of 60 deities. The Chinese are deplorably ignorant on religious subjects, and Mr. W. related having conversed with one of the lower class, or Buddhists, who had never before heard of such a thing as a future state of existence.

The personal appearance of the Chinese is just such as we see them pictured; and when a stranger sees them for the first time strutting and wadling about with their long tail queue dangling from the centre of their shining polls, his first and almost irresistible impulse is to catch hold of those tails and pull their owners over.

M. W. gave a very amusing account of an interview between his party and four Chinese dignitaries who brought a letter from the Emperor to the Embassy. The ceremonies were peculiar. First, the parties met with their hats on (this being the sign of honor there;) then the Chinese shook their own hands at their friends, which was another distinguished mark of politeness. Then the guests who were seated, according to Chinese etiquette on the left of their hosts, wishing to be profoundly complimentary, selected choice tit-bits which they put with their own greasy chop-sticks into their friends' mouths! They were obliged to submit with a good grace to this touching mark of civility, and had nothing for it but retaliation in kind, and this they faithfully practiced. But the crowning civility was the close and minute scrutiny which their illustrious guests made of our friends' clothing—hats, boots, coats, vests, suspenders, shirt-bosoms, &c. This in China is regarded as the highest honor which can be paid to a new acquaintance —except to ask his age!—which was performed in due course on this occasion. The Chinese didn't seem to eat much—but they manifested a decided liking for barbarian Champaigne and Cherry Bounce. The Chinese all converse in a very loud voice; and, toward the close of the interview, they seemed themselves to be pretty nearly as elevated as their voices. After about two hours spent in such intellectual interchange of civilities, the august bearers of the Imperial Letter took their leave—having served to fix indelibly the impression that the Chinese are the very reverse of us in everything, and that the intellectual, moral, political and civil obstacles to a closer union between the two people are about equal.

The voyage from Macao to Canton was described as being very pleasant, and allusion was made to the Floating City containing 300,000 inhabitants—all of whom live continually on the water, and thousands of whom never step foot on land from birth to death. Whampoa, a very beautiful place, is nine miles below Canton, and three below the barrier built across the river to keep off the English. The City of Canton is built on low ground with lofty hills on the East and prominence in rear crowned with a Tartar military station. The population of the City proper is estimated at between 500,000 and 1,000,000—but the suburbs contain probably as many more. In regard to the population of the whole Empire, Mr. W. is disposed to receive the statements of the Chinese themselves with more favor than has generally been allowed them. He made a comparative calculation and estimate by which he proved the capacity of China proper to subsist 240,000,000—while Chinese Tartary had probably a population of 70,000,000—thus overrunning the Chinese estimate, which is 800,000,000 for the whole.

In regard to the subject of small feet, Mr. Webster said that the Chinese manifested as much astonishment at the small waists of the American women as these at their small feet—wanted to know if such waists were not very painful and distressing.

They have a good many beggars in Canton, but not more in proportion than in European countries. The Government pursues a rigid course of non-interference in the affairs of this favored class. They are entitled by law to visit any man's house or shop they please and make all the noise they can with their nefarious instruments of music, until they get the cash out of him. If he is obstinate, they are patient; if he is all endurance, they are all perseverance; and it becomes a most ludicrous contest between the most active and persevering annoyance on the one side and an appearance at least of the most stalid indifference on the other.

The Government of China is patriarchal—a pure, unalloyed despotism. The Czar of Russia does not exercise powers near so extensive or so complete as the Emperor of the Chinese. He is not only the owner of all the soil and wealth in the Empire—the absolute arbiter of the lives and fortunes of his subjects—the originator and embodiment of all law and justice—but the mediator between Earth and Heaven—the direct interpreter of God himself. The Empire is divided into Provinces, each of which has a Governor appointed by the Emperor and directly responsible to him for the good order, tranquility and virtue of his Province. These Provinces are subdividrd into Districts, Towns and Hundreds, each of which is managed by a subordinate officer. But the great characteristic of the Chinese Government, and which pervades all its ramifications, is that each department, each member of every family, every individual, is made directly responsible for the good conduct of every one else. If a crime is committed, the whole town, district or province, is held accountable, and the magistrates and officers are especial objects of punishment. If one member of a family commits a theft, the whole family —father, mother, sons and daughters—are bamboozled until the guilty one confesses. The Emperor acts on the principle that inasmuch as he maintains the Government and exercises all the functions of legislation and execution, the people whom he thus consecrates to honor ought to make any sacrifice in order to aid him. If the authorities are vigilant and impartial, no crimes can take place—if parents do their duty faithfully, children will be virtuous; this is the imperial dogma, and one which is very literally acted upon. A very striking illustration of this was given in the case of an American who lost his watch while making his way through a mob at night. Without much expectation of recovering his property, he stated his case to a Magistrate, who promised him that his watch should be restored in three days. The first step was to collect all the police officers in the place (about 100 or 200) together and throw them into prison. One of the leading ones was then taken by the Magistrate and told that he must find 'that' watch, and that all his companions should remain imprisoned till he had accomplished it. Well, the policemen all had wives and families—they all had friends and relatives. The contagion spread—every body was interested in getting these worthy men out of limbo, and the spectacle was presented of a whole community turned thief-catchers. Suffice it to say, the watch was found within three days, and the unlucky police officers were liberated.

The adroitness of the rogues is as great as the vigilance of the Police. The burglars there sometimes strip themselves stark naked, oil their bodies all over, conceal knife-blades in their hair, and then slip through the hands of those who attempt to secure them, or cut the fingers of whoever would grasp them by the hair. It is not strange that Chinese burglars should have ways of their own, as everything in China is reverse of what it is with us. They mourn in white —their compass points South—they put their saucers on their cups—the sun goes round the earth—the earth is a perfectly square, flat body—they punish the innocent to find out the guilty—they shake their own hands instead of those of their friends —they whiten the soles of their boots—the left hand is the post of honor—and how is it to be supposed that their thieves should be like ours? In China one thing is certain: crime brings punishment as surely as evaporation brings rain. For every crime somebody must be punished. And, like rain, punishment might be said to "fall alike upon the just and upon the unjust."

The reigning family is Manchoo-Tartar. In 1644 the Manchoos, until then tributaries, rose and seized the Government, marking their way with the most frightful slaughter and devastation. On assuming the reins, the Tartars wisely refrained from making any violent changes in the government or costume of the people—so that the revolution was, after the suffering caused by the war had subsided, merely a change of rulers, not of government. One thing the new dynasty prescribed, and that was remorselessly insisted on—the shaving of the head and wearing a queue. This is a Tartar custom. The Chinese, before the revolution, all wore their hair naturally. But the Tartar was inexorable—he would have nothing to daily remind the Chinese that there was a conquering and a conquered people in the same empire—and all China was shaved in a day!

There is no hereditary aristocracy in China. A few members of the Imperial Family and of the descendants of Confucius, are allowed small annuities from the Government and permitted to wear the yellow sack. But rank in China consists almost entirely in official dignities, and expires with its possessor. Offices are usually the reward of good conduct or literary distinction. There are nine grades of official rank, which are distinguished simply by the button on the cap and the peacock's feather. The highest corresponds to an English Duke, and its possessor is distinguished by a red button on the top of his conical cap and a two-eyed peacock's-feather. Wealth is regarded very little in China. It never confers respectability; and although it can purchase offices and honors, yet they command only the exact deference prescribed by law, and are otherwise held in contempt—while offices conferred as a reward for good deeds are regarded quite in a different light.

Filial duty is the strongest and most predominant of all sentiments in China. Their romances are filled with exaggerations of it, as ours of love. Extraordinary instances of filial devotion are publicly rewarded; and sons often, in cases of crime on the part of the father, step in and are punished in his stead. This affection is like although more sacred than that of husband and wife with us. The wealthy Chinese build temples to their ancestors, and all worship the dead.

Two things tend powerfully to establish the extreme antiquity of China—her Language and her Government. The latter is patriarchal—the earliest and most primitive form of Government; and the Language is that of Hierogyphics, which is also universally recognized as the first attempt at a written language. The Chinese language consists entirely of independent characters, intended originally to represent ideas by pictures. There are 200 radicals, 800 primitives, and about 80,000 arbitrary signs in the Chinese language—each one of which must be learned before you are a complete Chinese scholar. One might as well go to work remembring all the faces he sees in New York in a month as to remember all these signs.

General Intelligence.

EIGHT DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Caledonia reached Boston on Monday morning last, bringing Liverpool dates to Oct. 19. She had 118 passengers. The follow summary contains the principal news of general interest.

The cotton market is still depressed, and prices have a downward tendency.

The prospect of the harvest is still uncheering, and corn is rapidly rising.

There is quite a warlike activity going on in the dockyards and naval arsenals of England. In the share market speculation goes bravely on.

The failure of the potatoe crop in Ireland is a most distressing event. The accounts connected with this subject, from all parts of that country, are painful in the extreme.

The French have been again overreached by Abd-el-Kader. He surprised and captured 200 men of their troops.

Mrs. Fry who for so many years devoted her time and her purse to ameliorate the miseries of the inmates of our various prisons, died after a protracted illness.

The Basle Gazette publishes intelligence of the slipping of a mountain in the Grisons. on the 17th ult. It occurred at Buschlaws, and carried away an entire forest of young trees. On the 14th another catastrophe of the same nature occurred; immense masses of rocks were rolled into the valley, the inhabitants of which fled in the greatest consternation. The damage done is estimated at 400,000f.

Mons. Jobard, a Belgian, has invented a process for procuring gas equal to that from coals, from oil and water.

France.—The success of Abd-el-Kader has greatly incensed the French people. A correspondent of Wilmer's Times, says:

"France will take a stern and terrible vengeance; the defeat of Djemmaa-Ghazaouat will be wiped out in fire, and desolation, and slaughter. It will be repaid ten and twenty-fold upon the people, if not upon the victors. Already have twelve thousand men received the order to march instanter to Algiers, and a naval force is destined for the same place. Abd-el Kader will be pursued even into the very heart of the empire of Morocco, and Morocco will pay dearly for harboring him. Marshal Bugeaud, who had returned to France with the intention of never again going to Algiers, has departed for the seat of his ancient government, to resume the supreme command."

Intelligence had been received by way of Marseilles, that at the close of another desperate struggle in the westward of Algiers, 200 troops, and among the number five officers and forty Zouaves, surrounded on all sides by hosts of Arabs, and summoned to surrender as prisoners of war, laid down their arms.

Two curious documents have just been published. They are letters of the celebrated Talleyrand to the Pope and the Archbishop of Paris, written shortly before his death, in which he bewails his secession from, and hostility to the church, as well as his connection with the French Revolution and the government that resulted therefrom. These epistles, in fact, are a recantation of all the doings of his life, and the manifestation of a sincere desire to be reconciled with Holy Church.

On the 8th ult., was Louis Phillippe's 73d birthday, and he was never in better health.

A recent official return establishes that separation between married people pronounced by the law courts, are increasing in a remarkable manner. In 1837, for instance, they were 643; and in 1843, 1077. The cause of the greater part of these separations are adultery. They have no divorces in France.

In Paris there are 396 newspapers, with 700,000 subscribers, and in the departments of France 898, with about 350,000 subscribers.

Revenue of the United States.—The receipts from customs for the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1845, will exceed $27,500,000; from public lands, $2,000,000; miscellaneous and incidental sources, $163,998; making in all, over $29,700,000. There was a balance in the treasury 1st July, 1844, of $7,857,379,64, which, added to the receipts, will make a total of over $37,500,000. The expenditures for the same time were about $30,000,000, which leaves a balance in the treasury of above $7,500,000. In the items, the expenditures under the direction of the war department were very large, being over $15,000,000, or more than one half of the whole expenses of the government.

Prejudice in England.—Frederick Douglass, writing from England, says: "One of the most pleasing features of my visit, thus far, has been a total absence of all manifestations of prejudice against me, on account of my color. The change of circumstances, in this, is particularly striking. I go on stage coaches, omnibuses, steamboats, into the first cabins, and in the first public houses, without seeing the slightest manifestation of that hateful and vulgar feeling against me. I find myself not treated as a color, but as a man—not as a thing, but as a child of the common Father of us all."

Another Large Robbery.—The upper part of this State is overrun by a regular organized band of itinerant burglars, who hold correspondence with each other at stated intervals, and, meeting at some appointed rendezvous, divide the proceeds of their villainy. This is the only way in which we can account for the numerous depredations of which New York is the constant theatre. Within a few days, Mr. Davison, grocer, of Kingston, has been despoiled of between $1300 and $1400 in gold, which he left in his dwelling, connected with the store. The box which had held it was found under a barn, close by—a watch, two dollar bill, and some papers, being left untouched—thus showing that the thief, whoever he may be, is an experienced burglar, and, knowing well enough that these articles might serve to identify him, had wisely left them behind.

The Potato Rot in New Jersey.—We learn by the Burlington Gazette that Nathan Stowell, of that place, has directed his attention for four years past, to the subject of rot in the potato, in hopes of discovering the cause of a disease which begins to threaten very serious consequences. Mr. Stowell thinks the rot is owing to sound seed having all run out, and that too little new seed has been procured. He has himself produced a fine crop of new potatoes from the tabers of the Foxite variety, and out of nearly fifty bushels, not a single potato is diseased. The vines are free from blight. A patch of Mercers, close by, was grievously afflicted with the rot.

Save the Pennies.—The people along the way from Memford to Camden, N. J., were a short time since, struck by a singular phenomenon in the road. For miles together, there was a regular deposit of cents; and as there was no claimant, the people who lived by the way turned out to gather up the drippings, and a pretty collection was taken up. For miles there were receivers. The road and ruts were trodden close, and even the charcoal men, who invariably sleep on their coal in the progress downward, were wide awake. It appears that a bag containing ten thousand cents had been put on the top of a stage, and after some shaking, either the string broke, or a hole was worn. One of the pennies, not having any particular attachment to the sack, popped out, and then another went, and so each followed his file leader, until the bag was empty and the road well lined.

Saccharine Food.—The Manchester Guardian, after quoting a paragraph from our last week's paper, on the use of molasses for feeding cattle, says—"Some thirty or forty years ago, Dr. Cartwright, the inventor of the power loom, communicated to the Board of Agriculture an interesting account of some experiments he had made on the effects of sugar in fattening sheep. He states that he gave to fifteen sheep four ounces of sugar each per day, mixed with other food, and, in the short space of twenty-eight days found, that on the average, they had increased upwards of one-fourth. As to the cost of the sugar, he was of opinion that sugar, supposing it to be purchased at 4d. per lb. would at the rate of four ounces per day, be paid in a return of flesh, exclusive of the advantage of expeditious feeding, and the benefit to be derived from the manure." [London Times.

Stump Clearing.—The Maine Farmer recommends the following simple and efficient method of stump lifting, and states that it has been adopted with great success.

Take a strong, stiff, hard-wood stick of timber, say fifteen or twenty feet long and six inches diameter. Cut around the stump and take off some of the roots. Then place the timber upright against the stump, and chain them together strong. From the upper end, which is now in the air, let chains pass to the axletree of a pair of cartwheels, to the tongue of which a pair of strong oxen are attached. When all is ready, start the oxen along, and the stump "keels over" as easy as you capsize a cabbage in the garden.

Singular.—While some workmen were digging near the granite bridge in this place, a few days since, they came to several maple and oak logs on a gravely bottom, twenty feet below the surface. In one of the logs was a hive of bees, a good deal decayed, but still in a tolerable state of preservation, the wings, legs, etc., of the little laborers being perfectly distinguishable. Several oil nuts were also discovered, whole and sound. It is but a short time since large trees, a century old, whose trunks were imbedded in the soil, were growing upon the spot. Probably this miniature Herculaneum, while "teeming with life and industry," was buried in the earth long ago by a slide from the elevations in the neighborhood. [Manchester (Vt.) American.

SUMMARY.

No attornies are allowed by law in China, but some assuming that character, act in that capacity contrary to the imperial mandate. They are thus curiously described by a literary Chinese:—"Villainous and perverse vagabonds, who are fond of making a stir, and who, either by fraudulent or crafty schemes, excite discord, or by disorderly and illegal proceedings, intimidate and impose upon the people."

In Benares, India, there are 5,000 places of worship; and there are supposed to be 50,000 Brahmins in that single city. One individual has presented $1,200,000 to the different shrines simultaneously, for the support of heathenism. A missionary saw the money carried through the streets; there were between thirty and forty cart loads.

"Flogging," says Gov. Hammond, in his letter to Clarkson, "is not degrading, and unless excessive, occasions little pain."

On the above, the Boston Recorder remarks:—"It makes all the difference in the world who takes the flogging. A hundred lashes well laid on to Gov. Hammond's own back, would teach him never again to insult mankind with such a declaration."

The shares in the Cunard Boston Steamers, which originally cost £1000, sell in England at £2500. The company invest their profits in new boats, &c.

Rev. Dr. Joseph Wolf has taken up his residence at Mechlin, and has accepted the chaplaincy of the English Protestant Chapel there, where he will perform divine service every Sunday.

A correspondent of the Hallowell (Me.) Standard, who lately visited Charles T. Torrey, in the Maryland Penitentiary, states that his confinement is undermining his health; his eyes are dim, his voice hoarse, and his spirits depressed; and it is feared he cannot live out the period (five years) for which he was sentenced.

Mrs. Hannah Gough died in New York recently at the extraordenary age of 109 years 11 months and 15 days. She had seen and conversed with every President of the Uuited States.

A quarry of the most beautiful variegated marble, commonly called serpentine, has been lately discovered in Florida, Mass. Specimens, which surpass the Egyptian in beauty and variety of colors and susceptibility of polish, have been shown us, which we learn are a fair sample of an inexhaustible mass. The grain is finer and the structure more compact than that of other marble in this region, and when polished in thin slabs, the clouds and different shades of color are of great beauty.

Among the manufactures established at Cincinnati, that of stoves is growing into much importance. It appears from an official statement that forty-five thousand stoves and grates are manufactured there annually, by twelve foundries. These articles are valued at $512,000, and of the number mentioned, above thirty thousand are cooking stoves.

A stranger lately obtained a loan of a hundred dollars from one of our merchants, securing repayment by the deposite of a cask of extra brandy. He went his way. "On a full examination," says the Chronicle, "it was found that a copper can, which contained a small quantity of brandy, had been firmly fitted around the bung hole, and all besides was water."

The remains of Mrs. Gilson, of Schenectady, one of the passengers lost in the steamboat Swallow, were discovered on Thursday, two miles below Athens, and though in a state of decomposition, they were identified by a watch with her name on it. The money she had with her was also found. The watch had stopped at ten minutes past eight, which was about the time the boat sunk.

The Lowell Journal states that the Electro-Magnetic Telegraph between Boston and Lowell will be completed in a few weeks; that the workmen are now putting up the posts; and that the line will run along by the railroad. It is a Lowell enterprise, and will be the first Magnetic Telegraph in New England.

At the recent Circuit Court of Westchester, a breach of marriage promise was brought against Addison Hill, by Esther Conklin. The courtship was of some two years continuance, and the time for the ceremony twice agreed upon. The circumstances justified the jury in giving damages in the sum of $4,041, and 6 cents costs.

As soon as your apples are gathered, prepare the following mixture and give your trees a painting—take in the proportion of two gallons of soft soap, one pound of flour of sulphur, and one pound of Scotch snuff, mix the whole together, and apply it to the body and roots of the trees above ground. This will not only destroy the eggs of insects, but prevent injury from mice and rabbits.

A writer in the Morning News recommends the use of the Magnetic Telegraph on our Atlantic coast to herald the approach of northeast storms. It is well known that they commence in Philadelphia often some hours sooner than here, and farther south—at Baltimore, Washington, or Norfolk—still earlier; and in New York before they commence in Boston. His plan is, to send word ahead of any hurricane or storm, and prevent loss and shipwreck by remaining at their wharves, instead of venturing out until the storm has passed over.

The American Whig states, that a brick building, three stories high, and 154 feet long, is now going up at Thompsonville, Ct., for the purpose of accommodating newly invented Knitting Machinery, by which each girl employed, can knit sixty yards a day!

The Great Britain will not make a return trip to America until next spring.

The egg trade of Cincinnati is not short of $100,000 per annum. Not a few farmers in Ohio, pay all their family expenses from the proceeds of the sale of this one article alone.

The Big Gun recently made in England for the U. S. steamer Princeton, is now on its way to this country, and may be expected here in a few days. It was shipped on board of a packet, which was to sail from Liverpool the latter part of September.

Price, the Post Master at Hamburgh, who stole money from letters passing through his hands, has pleaded guilty, and been sent to Auburn for a term of ten years.

The Newport Rhode Islander says that a sweet potatoe raised from the seed this season, in that town, weighed fourteen and three quarters pounds, and measured in circumference thirty-four inches. In shape it resembled a turnip more than a potatoe.

Those counties in this State in which there are manufactories have, with few exceptions, increased in population, while those having few or none, have decreased for the last five years.

Fifty or sixty barrels of flour were found afloat on Lake Erie lately—probably swept from the deck of some vessel in a storm.

The Session of the Presbyterian Church in Goshen, Orange county, have suspended several members of that Church for taking milk to the Railroad Depot on Sunday. This decision excites controversy through the columns of the papers in that village.

On last Tuesday, says the Morgantown, Va. Mountainer, at the Iron Works of E. T. Ellicott, in that county, 105 kegs of nails were cut in nine hours with nine large machines, and five small ones. This is said to be the best work ever done in the United States.

Some of the pews of Dr. Bellows' new church in Broadway were sold on Tuesday afternoon. Thirty-six pews, appraised at $19,000, brought $3,016,75—amounting altogether to $22,019 75. The entire value of all the pews is appraised at $70,000.

An immense establishment exists in St. Petersburg for the manufacture of locomotives for the different lines of railway now in progress. It is in the hands of Messrs. Eastwick and Harrison, of Philadelphia. They employ 3,500 men, Russians, Americans, English, and Germans.

The Morristown Jerseyman states that a bed of coal has been discovered, while digging a well at Mr. Nevin's Hotel, in the village of Basking Ridge. The well is nine feet in diameter. On the west side the vein is ten inches in thickness, and on the opposite side four feet, at only 13 feet from the surface. It appears to be more of a bituminous than anthracite nature, and burns with a beautiful flame.

The mother of Rothschild, the wealthy banker, now in her 97th year, had recently a violent attack of illness; when she recovered she remarked to her friends about her—"No, no, my friends, I am not going to leave this world until I am quoted at par." Meaning that she would hold out till she had reached one hundred years!

One hundred and forty-four thousand, two hundred and sixty-nine dollars and fifty cents, were appropriated the last year, by the Roman Catholic Association for the Propagation of the Faith, to the support of Catholic Missions in the United States and Texas.

Gov. Baldwin of Connecticut has appointed Thursday the 27th of November next, as a day of public and social Thanksgiving.

It is stated that proposals have been handed in to the Postmaster General for a monthly mail to China, via Oregon and the Sandwich Islands. The estimated time in summer, allowing fifty days from Oregon to Canton, and thirty from Washington to Oregon, is eighty days. This is about twenty days less than the best passages of our ships from China direct.

The Boston Daily Advertiser says that the number of passengers by Railroad and Steamboats, between New York and Boston, in the month of September, by the several routes passing through Providence, and through Worcester and Norwich, was 19,314.

On Friday afternoon between the hours of two and half past three o'clock, over five thousand letters for the steamship Hibernia at Boston were deposited, stamped, assorted and dispatched from the Post Office of this city. An instance of dispatch fully equal to this also occurred in the newspaper department on the arrival of the Great Western, on Tuesday last.

Roxbury, Mass., was the scene of a destructive fire on Tuesday night, which destroyed the Spinning Factory of Messrs. J. Wheeler & Son, in Davis-st., and property to the amount of $27,000, $2000 of which only was covered by insurance. The fire is supposed to have originated in the accidental dropping of a spark among the hemp, when the operatives were leaving the building.

The steamer Niagara, Capt. De Groot, left this city at seven minutes past 7 o'clock, on Wednesday morning—reached Newburgh in 3 hours 9 minutes, Poughkeepsie 3 hours 58 minutes, Albany 8 hours 8 minutes, arrived at Albany 15 minutes after 3 o'clock, making twelve landings—leaving the running time 7 hours and 25 minutes, without extra effort being made. From Newburgh to Poughkeepsie, 16 miles, she ran in 47 minutes.

Two brothers recently went out bee-hunting in Madison township, Ia., carrying with them a gun for the purpose of shooting at a mark. One of them having laid it down, the other in jest picked it up, and ran off with it. A playful tussle ensued, during which the charge exploded, instantly killing one of the young men. Their names were Anderson.

On Friday a merchant while standing in a Bank in Boston had his pocket picked of $3,000. On the same day two forged checks for a considerable amount were paid by one of the Banks.

A young lady who has formerly resided in New Richmond, Ohio, since early childhood, has just received intelligence that one of her relatives in England has deceased and left her £40,000, about one hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars. She has sailed for England to take possession, having left her heart in charge of a young clerk in Cincinnati.

Protestant Church at Jerusalem.—The long talked of Protestant Church at Jerusalem is likely soon to be commenced. It is now stated that the Sultan has given his permission for its erection, the firman containing his formal sanction to that effect has been issued. The delay, it is said, arose from the desire of introducing a clause against Proselitism, which the Porte has been taught by the French and Prussians to consider as the object which the Protestants have in view.

MARRIED,

In Adams, N. Y., on the 29th ult., by Rev. G. M. Langworthy, Mr. Leonard R. Green to Miss Mary B. Potter.

In Newport, R. I., on sixth day, October 24th, by Rev. Mr. Bradley, Mr. George I. Lewis to Mrs. Susan Allen.

DIED,

In Schenectady, on Thursday, Oct. 30, Mr. ABEL WARD, in the 46th year of his age. Mr. W. was an industrious and enterprising citizen, and has been for several years past, the keeper of the County Alms House. In him, the poor and unfortunate have lost a friend, and the public a valuable citizen. His earthly career was cut off in the prime of an active life. He was a man of strict integrity. The warmth and generosity of his heart, and the many pleasant social qualities which he possessed, had greatly endeared him to a large number of friends, by whom his death is keenly felt, and deeply lamented. PLAINFIELD FAMILY SCHOOL.

THIS Institution will commence its Winter Session on Monday the 27th of November. The course of instruction embraces all the solid branches of education, and is designed to prepare boys for college or mercantile pursuits. The French and Spanish languages, both written and spoken, are also taught on the most approved principle. References and other particulars will be given on application to J. O. MAURIAC, Principal.

Plainfield, N. J., Oct. 20, 1845.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
Ira Sayles, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics
Gurdon Evans, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. Hartshorn, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. Stillman, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. Maxson, Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. Kenyon, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences. The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

The Teachers' Classes, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

The Academic Year for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

Expenses.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense. SAMUEL RUSSELL,

President of the Board of Trustees

CONSOLATIONS FOR THE LONELY.

BY MARY HOWITT.

There is a land where beauty cannot fade,
Nor sorrow dim the eye;
Where true love shall not droop, nor be dismayed,
And none shall ever die!
Where is that land, O where?
For I would hasten there.
Tell me—I fain would go;
For I am wearied with a heavy wo!
The beautiful have left me all alone;
The true, the tender, from my path have gone!
O guide me with thy hand,
If thou dost know that land,
For I am burdened with oppressive care,
And I am weak and fearful with despair.
Where is it? tell me where.

Friend, thou must trust in Him who trod before
The desolate paths of life;
Must bear in meekness, as he meekly bore,
Sorrow, and pain, and strife!
Think how the Son of God
These thorny paths hath trod;
Think how he longed to go,
Yet tarried out, for thee, the appointed wo;
Think of his weariness in places dim,
Where no man comforted or cared for Him!
Think of the blood-like sweat,
With which his brow was wet—
Yet how he prayed, unaided and alone,
In that great agony, 'Thy will be done!'
Friend, do not thou despair:
Christ, from his heaven of heavens, will hear thy prayer!

☞ Some of our readers are already familiar with the self-denying missionary labors of Rev. Hiram Wilson among the refugees from slavery now in Canada. Such will be glad to learn the facts contained in the following Circular. Others will be interested to read of the new and inviting field which is rapidly opening there.

CIRCULAR.

BRITISH AMERICAN INSTITUTE AND CANADA MISSION.

The undersigned, as the Committee of the Institution above mentioned, beg leave to bring before the Christian public a brief statement of its condition and wants, as well as the mission with which it is connected. This institute, which is conducted on the manual labor system, especially for the benefit of refugees from oppression and slavery, has its location in the township of Dawn, Canada West, at the head of navigation on the Lydenham river, 60 miles North by East of Detroit. Its site is commanding and beautiful, and in the midst of a fertile section of the country, where the climate is mild and healthy, and in that part of the province which is the easiest of access to the numerous emigrants from slavery. It has attached to it 300 acres of first quality land, held equally by white and colored trustees, who are all British subjects. Sixty acres or more have been cleared of the heavy timber, and brought under cultivation, during the last three years. A large school house, and several dwellings of moderate dimensions, have been erected and are now occupied; a framed barn was built the last year, and a pot ashery started. During the present year, a brick building, 30 by 32 ft., 2 stories high, the foundation of which was laid last fall, has been erected and will soon be completed and in use. Another building, of hewn timber, 22 by 34 feet, two stories high, is now in progress, and will probably be occupied by the first of December next.

Our agent, Bro. Josiah Henson, who labored assiduously last winter and spring in New England, returned in May with a report of his services and success highly satisfactory to the committee. As the result of his agency, a payment of $220 had been made upon the last purchase of 100 acres of land for the institution, and the deed secured—its operations have been sustained through the season, and its debts considerably diminished. (He has spent most of the summer itinerating at his own charges among the colored people of Canada.) Our present number of scholars is over 80. Applications for admission are frequent. We shall doubtless have at least 100 scholars the coming winter, and might have three times that number had we accommodations for them.

The Institution is now in debt to the amount of about $500, which is mostly due to the steward and others immediately concerned, for services rendered and monies advanced for its relief.

By reason of the late spring frosts and subsequent drought, our crops have come short. Had they been plentiful as usual we could hardly expect a supply, as the Institute is yet in its infancy, in a new country, with small improvements, yet rapidly increasing in numbers. But lately it has had important accessions from the house of bondage, of those who promise fair for usefulness, if educated. Several of these have been hopefully converted to God in the midst of a precious revival of religion now in progress in the Institution and community. At such accessions we rejoice, but our sympathies are moved and our souls weighed down with sorrow when compelled to turn away importunate applicants for want of a shelter and the means of subsistence. The principal labor for young men in the winter season is chopping and clearing land, the fruits of which we cannot begin to realise till the ensuing summer; yet every advance made upon the surrounding forest tells to the future advantage of the Institution by furnishing increased facilities for its expansion and support. Hence such aid as may easily be furnished by generous friends at the West, in the form of produce, (freightage paid,) to be shipped upon the Lakes and water courses to Detroit, Mich., care of Messrs. Gillet & Desnoyers, would be thankfully received; also such implements as axes, hoes, &c.

The importance of our work can scarcely be appreciated by those who have not by personal observation, become acquainted with the condition of the colored people, and the cruel prejudices of a share of the white inhabitants. We add that such is the destitution of the colored people in the western portion of Canada, as respects common school instruction, that we feel bound to act in their behalf. We have resolved to keep up intimate correspondence with our brethren in every part of the province, with the view of supplying the destitute.

It is proper here to allude to what has already been made known, that it is a prominent and fondly cherished object of the Manual Labor Institute to rear up Teachers of the right stamp, for the destitute and benighted poor. Thus acting for the welfare of the refugees and their children generally, and in harmony with the committee of the Canada Mission Board in Rochester, N. Y., we earnestly solicit help for the destitute, and would state that such means as may come through the Committee above named, or through any other channels, designated for the support of common schools, will be appropriated accordingly. This arrangement we doubt not will meet the approbation of all who feel an interest in the prosperity of the Canada Mission; and for the more effectual prosecution of the great work before us, we have extended a call to a most devoted and untiring friend of the oppressed, who, it is hoped, will soon be associated with us to promote equally the interests of the Institution and Mission which are indissolubly connected. We now ask the generous concurrence of Christian Philanthropists, with the generous designs of heaven in the prosecution and consummation of this good work, which seeks the disenthrallment and elevation of the deeply injured race with which most of us are connected. In the fulness of confidence and fraternal sollicitude, we commend to the kind consideration and sympathy of the Christian public, our beloved brethren Hiram Wilson and Josiah Henson, as the accredited agents for our Christian enterprize.

I propose in this communication to notice farther, some things implied in offering an acceptable and prevailing prayer. If we would prevail with God in prayer it is evidently implied,

3. That we ask for an object with the express desire that God may be glorified in giving us the desired object.

God will never refuse to answer a prayer offered to him from such motives. The petitions of Elijah were all offered with special regard to the glory of God, and were accepted. Behold him as he sits upon the top of one of the hills of Samaria! His holy, calm and reflecting mind is aroused by the appearance of several of the servants of Ahaziah, on their journey to Ekron to enquire of Baal-zebub respecting the recovery of the king. His soul is filled with holy indignation at the thought, that the king of Israel—the descendant of Jacob, that man of prayer, should forsake the living God and enqire of, or pray to a dumb idol! I am ready to be used any way to show the people of Israel their error, and glorify thy holy name. "Arise," then says the angel of the Lord, "go up to meet the messengers of the king of Samaria, and say unto them, is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that ye go to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron? Now, therefore, thus saith the Lord, thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shall surely die. And Elijah departed." (2. Kings 1: 3, 4.) Elijah has delivered his message, and it is done with such confidence in God, the servants of the king dare not resist his words, but with mutual consent return and inform their haughty sovereign that he shall surely die. What an unwelcome message! Full of rage, he calls for an armed band to bring Elijah before him, for daring to interfere with his arrangements—his worship. The captain is excited by the flaming speech of the king, and with his spirit burning for martial glory, does not enquire what enemy he is about to encounter, but approaches the prophet who is armed with "the whole armour of God," and commands him in the name of the king to "surrender!" "If I be a man of God—if my interest is in the glory of God," says the prophet, "then let fire come down from heaven and consume thee and thy fifty," and it was done. Yes, the thunder bolts of heaven were at the control of Elijah, if needed to vindicate the character of Jehovah.

Again, the widow with whom the prophet sojourned, doubts the truth of the words of Elijah, and of his being a man of God. Her child dies. Elijah is reproached, and he carries his case to the Lord in prayer, beseeching him to restore the child to life again, and the dead is raised to life! What illustration drawn from scripture could the apostle James have used, that is so full of encouragement and instruction, as the case of Elijah?

But why is there so little of this prevailing prayer? Is it not because the object is desired for some other purpose than to glorify God? To pray for a revival of religion because their society is small, neighbors vicious, their relatives would be less troublesome if converted, or for any other object than the glory of God, is to ask amiss, to consume the blessing upon certain lusts, which he will never countenance.

4. This prayer must be indited by the Spirit of God, if we would be heard and answered from heaven.

To be under the influence of this spirit, we must be willing to be used by it unconditionally; for it will never dwell in the heart of him who will not submit to its teachings, or is in love with the spirit and things of the world.

"We know not what we should pray for as we ought," without the aid of the Spirit! How important then, that we have clean hands and pure hearts, that this divine Spirit may guide us into all truth so as to be heard in prayer, and saved from sin.

5. Prevailing prayer implies faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as our advocate with the Father.

Hence says the apostle (1. John 5: 14, 15.) "and this is the confidence that we have in him, That, if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us: And if we know that he hears us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him."

Our Saviour himself hath declared (John 14: 13.) "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." It is through the intercession of Christ that we are heard in heaven, and we have confidence that our petition will be answered only as we have faith in him.

I have heard individuals pray, who seemed to leave Christ wholly out of their petitions. His character as advocate was not even referred to, or His merit as a sacrifice for sin plead before the throne of grace as a reason why the desired object was asked for! "Without me" says Christ, "ye can do nothing." This every Christian knows full well, and when he feels the force of this truth he draws nigh to God by faith in Christ, asks and receives, and his joy is full. If Christians were ever called upon to offer the prayer of faith—prayer that will avail much, it is at the present time. Infidelity seems to be increasing in almost every community, and there is a lack of moral courage on the part of many who profess to be the friends of God and his word, to speak out against this God-dishonoring spirit.

Having done all on our part, we can put up our prayers to God with the reasonable expectation of being heard, and then we can "stand still and see the salvation of God." We have many objects to pray for, and let us all examine ourselves that there may not be any thing to separate between the Lord and our souls when we ask for a revival of his work. J. M. H. Dow.

Bear Hunt—Thrilling Adventure.

KILLING A BEAR IN HIS DEN.

Mr. Charles Rounds, a citizen of this place, returned from a visit to his brother in McKean County, Pennsylvania, a few days since, and brought with him the head and foot of apparently the largest bear that has been killed, for many a day. Mr. Rounds has given us a detail of all the circumstances attending his capture, but which for the want of room, we are not able to give in full. It appears that the inhabitants near where he was killed, had been obliged to submit to his depredations upon their hogs, sheep, &c., until they could stand it no longer, and accordingly several of them, with Mr. Wm. S. Rounds and John Pool at their head, started in pursuit of him. Night and day for five days they followed his trail, but without coming up with him. Worn out with their tramp and want of rest, they concluded to stop that night and start afresh the next morning. A few hours after starting, their dogs came up to, and closed in with him. A desperate fight ensued, in which one dog was killed, and the other severely cut and bruised. He however succeeded in getting away, and returned to the company, when Mr. Rounds, with a heavy hickory club, started off in full speed, the dog leading. They soon came up to, and the dog closed in with him. The bear first struck him with his paw, then caught hold of him and would most likely, soon have killed him, had not Mr. Rounds come to the rescue.

With his heavy club he beat him so severely over the head that he was obliged to let go his hold on the dog. From this time Mr. R. and the dog kept close to him for some three or four miles, fighting him continually, when he arrived at the mouth of his den. As he started in the dog caught hold of him, and Mr. R. hold of the dog, but so exhausted was he, that he fell, and was thus dragged several feet into the opening to the cave.

As soon as he had recovered his strength and the remainder of the pursuers had come up with him, Mr. Rounds went into the cave to reconnoitre. After proceeding about 30 feet he discovered the bear with his back towards him, crouching in his lair but a few feet from him. He then returned, and, after cleaning their rifles and reloading them, Mr. R., together with Mr. John Pool, again entered the cave. Finding the bear occupying the same position that he did at first, when they had got within about ten feet of him, they fired and lodged four successive balls in and about his haunch, and then retreated out of the cave, the bear following them. As he emerged from the entrance, one of the gentlemen who had remained out, put a ball through his head, which finished the work.

The bear is said to have weighed upwards of seven hundred pounds!

CONTENTMENT.—Cowley having known the perplexities of a particular condition, readily persuaded himself that nothing worse was to be found, and that every alternation would bring some improvement; he never suspected that the cause of his unhappiness was within: that his own passions were not sufficiently regulated; and that he was harrassed by his own impatience, which would accompany him over the sea, and find its way to his American elysium. He would, upon the trial, have been soon convinced, that the fountain of content must spring up in the mind; and that he who has so little knowledge of human nature as to seek happiness by changing any thing but his own dispositions, will waste his life in fruitless efforts, and multiply the griefs which he proposes to remove. [Johnson.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT.—We would remind the few remaining advocates of extreme corporal punishment of the Smith, who called to his son to bring a more efficient hammer that he might harden the iron. The reply was, "Try the horsewhip, father, with which you hardened me."

FOR THE CHILDREN.

Be Kind.

Be kind to thy father—for when thou wert young,
Who loved thee so fondly as he?
He caught the first accents that fell from thy tongue,
And joined in thine innocent glee.
Be kind to thy father, for now he is old,
His locks intermingled with grey,
His footsteps are feeble, once fearless and bold;
Thy father is passing away.

Be kind to thy mother—for low! on her brow
May traces of sorrow be seen,
O, well mayest thou cherish and comfort her now,
For loving and kind hath she been.
Remember thy mother—for thee will she pray,
As long as God gives thee breath,
With accents of kindness, then cheer her lone way,
E'en to the dark valley of death.

Be kind to thy brother—his heart will have dearth,
If the smile of thy love be withdrawn;
The flowers of feeling will fade at their birth,
If the dew of affection be gone.
Be kind to thy brother—wherever you are,
The love of a brother shall be
An ornament purer and richer by far,
Than pearls from the depth of the sea.

Be kind to thy sister—not many may know
The depth of true sisterly love;
The wealth of the Ocean lies fathoms below
The surface that sparkles above.
Thy kindness shall bring to thee many sweet hours,
And blessings thy pathway to crown:
Affection shall weave thee a garland of flowers,
More precious than wealth or renown.

The Dying Scholar and her Teacher.

There was a little girl in my own Sunday school, that was called at an early age to lie down and die. She was visited by her teacher with great frequency and urgency. The teacher, on the last occasion, found her very weak, and asked her whether she was happy; to which she replied, "Yes." On inquiring as to the ground of her hope, she said she was resting on the word of Jesus Christ. Pausing a little, she said to her teacher, "You have told me that Jesus will give to those who die and trust in him a golden crown in heaven." The teacher, with tears rolling down her cheek, said, "It is true; you shall have such a crown, according to the word of Christ." "O!" said the little girl, "shall you get a crown?" The teacher cut to the heart for a moment, paused for a reply, and the little darling lifted up her sweet eyes with gratitude to the teacher, (mistaking the object of the pause,) and said, "Well, if he does not give you a crown, I will take mine from my head and put it on yours." Such a response of gratitude from a child just soaring into paradise, would surely be enough to pay a large period of toil and labor. [London Bap. C. Mag.

YOUTHFUL TRAINING.—It is not an uncommon thing for the youth to feel, as he is sent away from home, and confined down to books, that it is really a hard way to obtain an education. He thinks of the brooks, the groves, or the hills and ponds near his house; of his skates, his gun, or his fishing-tackle, or of the social circle around his father's fireside, and sighs that he must be exiled from all these, and shut up in his naked room, among strangers, and there must unceasingly pore over his books. It is not to wondered at, that he feels so; but let him reflect, that this is the time to form habits, and to begin a course of mental discipline, which, in a few years, will raise him high in the esteem, the respect, aud the honors, of his fellow men. Every distinguished man has trodden the same path. There is no other road to knowledge, to improvement, to distinction. If the voice of experience could come to your ear, and if you could see the agony of the heart which those feel, who once had your opportunities, but misimproved them, you would be astonished to see the real value of your situation. [Todd.

I'M GOING TO BE A MAN.—A gentleman was visiting, some time since, in a family, where he saw a little lad about four years old. Calling the little fellow to him, he said,

"Well, my little boy, what do you intend to be when you grow up?"

He had asked the same question a great many times before, and some boys told him they meant to be farmers, some merchants, and some ministers. But what was the answer of this little boy? Better than all of them.

"I mean to be a man!" said he.

It will matter very little whether he is a farmer, or a merchant, or a minister; if he be a man, he will be successful, and be loved and respected. We have known some persons who never became men, but great boys, after they were grown up. Ask your teacher, children, what makes the man, and then like the little boy, aim to be one.

AN HONEST BOY.—That "honesty is the best policy" was illustrated some years since under the following circumstances, detailed by the Rochester Democrat. A lad was proceeding to an uncle's to petition him for aid for a sick sister and her children, when he found a wallet containing fifty dollars. The aid was refused, and the distressed family were pinched for want. The boy revealed the fortune to his mother, but expressed a doubt about using any portion of the money. His mother confirmed his good resolution—the pocket book was advertised, and the owner found. Being a man of wealth, upon learning the history of the family, he presented the fifty dollars to the sick mother, and took the boy into his service and he is now one of the most successful merchants in Ohio. Honesty always bring its reward—to the mind if not to the pocket.

AFFECTION IN A BRUTE.—There are many remarkable instances of affection in a brute that we do not often find in human beings. The Woodville Republican states that on the Pittsbare plantation two little negro boys who were recently riding an old poney in pursuit of cattle, when all of a sudden, a wild-cat leaped from a fence upon the pony and seized upon one of the children, the poney in a fright, jumped away. The older boy seized the cat to rescue the other from his claws and teeth, when the poney returned to their rescue, and actually stamped the wild cat to death! The poney is a pet, some 25 years old—lives in the yard and eats slops; is a great favorite—walks among the cradles with the utmost care; and, in gratitude for kindness, has exhibited a trait of character that would honor a man.

A Mark upon the Rumseller.

"A mark should be set upon him." Ay, that is it!—a mark! He should be known in his true character of Mercenery Poisoner. Honest men should shun him, and never visit his slaughter-house of souls!

When he goes into the street let every honorable man and woman avoid him as a walking pestilence. Let children reflect, "there goes a rumseller." "There is the man who, for three cents, will sell poverty, and death!" "There is the man who murdered my father!" "There is the man who broke my poor mother's heart!" "That monster received my mother's last bed in pawn for rum!" "That man made a brute of my fair-haired brother!" "But for that robber I should have a home!" "Let him wear the livery of his master the devil!" "Drive him into his den!" "There's blood upon his fingers!" Lowell Standard.

"To see a man fearless in dangers, untainted with lusts, happy in adversity, composed in a tumult, and laughing at all these things which are generally either coveted or feared, all men must acknowledge that this can be nothing else than a beam of divinity that influences a mortal body."

[Seneca.

A martyr was asked whether he did not love his wife and children, who stood weeping by him? "Love them!" saith he, "Yes if all the world were gold, and at my disposal, I would give it all for the satisfaction of living with them, though it were in a prison: yet, in comparison with Christ, I love them not!"—Luke 14: 26.

INFANTILE POEM.

BY LADY FLORA HASTINGS.

When I kneel down my prayers to say,
I must not think of toys or play;
No! I must think what I should be,
To please God, who is good to me.

He loves to see a little child
Obedient—patient too—and mild;
Not often angry, but inclined
Always to do what's good and kind.

And I must love my dear mamma,
And I must love my dear papa;
And try to please them, and to do
Things that are right, and say what's true.

For God is always pleased to see
Even little children such as we,
Whose hearts (as angels' are above)
Are full of peace and full of love.

PROSPECTUS
LITERARY EMPORIUM.
A COMPENDIUM OF Religious, Literary, and Philosophical Knowledge

We shall be modest in our pretensions, while we give as true a description of our intended course as we can, in plain English. In the first place, light literature will find no place in its pages, i. e. love tales, literary trash, &c. In the second place, sectarianism will not be admitted into the Emporium; that is to say, it will favor no particular denomination of Christians; but we do not mean by this that it will not advocate the religion of the Bible. It is intended that it shall do this, and in the strongest terms. It will urge the necessity not only of a change of heart, but of a virtuous and holy life, in order to be truly happy in this world, and to be prepared for that which is to come. It is intended that its religious matter shall be of such a nature as will be calculated to cultivate, to inspire and please a good and correct taste—that which will inform, expand, and elevate the mind, and also excite in the soul love to God, holiness, virtue, and humanity. In regard to its literary character, it is designed to be of such a nature as to water the thirsty soul that is studiously endeavoring to acquire a knowledge of man in his past and present condition; also, some information in relation to the different sciences and arts, and the variety of the works of nature, with such miscellaneous reading as will invigorate the faculties of the mind, give scope to the imagination, while it shall address itself to the good sense of all who desire to be truly elevated by reading.

Each Number contains 32 pages of handsome paper and type; it also contains splendid plates; is published monthly, at $1 a year, if paid in advance. One third allowed to persons who procure subscribers for the work. Good agents wanted to circulate the Emporium. All letters, orders, &c., should be addressed to

KNOWLEDGE FOR THE PEOPLE.
RE-ISSUE OF THE
PENNY MAGAZINE,
AT ONE HALF THE ORIGINAL PRICE!
4000 IMPERIAL OCTAVO PAGES,
2000 ENGRAVINGS!!
A COMPLETE LIBRARY WITHIN ITSELF.

THE London Penny Magazine, issued under the direction of the Society for the "Diffusion of Useful Knowledge," is, unquestionably, one of the most entertaining and useful of all the popular works which has ever appeared in any age, or in any language. Its pages embrace every subject in the wide field of human knowledge, and as every article, whether on

SCIENCE, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, LITERATURE, OR THE ARTS,

passed the careful scrutiny and critical ordeal of an able committee of learned men, the work may be placed in the hands of the youth of the country without danger or distrust. The popularity of the work in England may be judged of from the fact that during the first year of its publication of the monthly parts were disposed of. In the United States too, the work has acquired no inconsiderable popularity.

The undersigned having purchased the Stereotype plates, with the Engravings, of the London edition of the above-named work, has commenced its republication in the city of New York. The whole work consists of about 4000 large Imperial octavo pages, and is illustrated with 2000 Engravings. The American Re-issue will be printed on good paper, and well done up in handsome paper covers, and issued in

24 PARTS AT 25 CENTS EACH.

The Parts average 170 pages each, and will be published every other Saturday, till completed, commencing SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1845. It is an exact reprint of the London edition, without alteration or abridgment.

☞ The work is sold by all dealers in Books and cheap Literature, throughout the United States. Persons wishing to obtain it regularly on its issue, will do well to hand in their names to some Bookseller in their neighborhood, at as early a day as possible. Postmasters will be entitled to ten numbers for Two Dollars.

"Whosoever, therefore, SHALL BREAK ONE OF THESE LEAST COMMANDMENTS, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever SHALL DO AND TEACH THEM, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven." Matt. v. 19.

BY JAMES A. BEGG, GLASGOW, N. B.

PREFACE.

There are few subjects on which there seems a greater harmony among Christians, than with regard to the change of the Sabbath. By almost universal consent, in all the lands called Christendom, the first day of the week has come, in some sense, to hold the place which the seventh formerly obtained by divine command. The reality of such a change is assumed as a perfectly settled point,—admiting neither of dispute nor calling for inquiry,—and any attempt to impugn the decision which general practice may be supposed to imply, is by many regarded as equally hopeless and uncalled for.

It is, however, an important subject; and the very ease with which it has been disposed of by a great proportion of our community, ought to form a reason for their more willingly reviewing the grounds on which they have come to a conclusion. It is a question interesting to every human being, as relating to a divine appointment for the purpose of imparting to all a Father's blessing; and, therefore, not only deserving the serious consideration of all, that they deprive not themselves of a provided blessing; but they are also bound to inquire whether no disparagement be put upon the authority of the Lawgiver, by substituting a day of man's adoption for that which God has sanctified.

Besides, I apprehend that the sanction which numbers and comparative antiquity have conferred upon the first day of the week in the Christian Church, have never wholly succeeded in stilling the voice of God in man's conscience with regard to the Sabbath. There are, perhaps, few to whom, on reflection, it seems in no way strange, that authority more unquestionable, and evidence more direct, have not been given in the Bible, authorizing their departure from the day which the God of heaven so early and so formally set apart in commemoration of His resting from creation work—a day, the appointment of which, and the very special reason for its appointment, still stand embodied among those commands of universal obligation, which were written by the finger of God, and uttered amid the flames, and the thunders, and the lightnings, and the darkness, and the tempest, of Sinai's glory, at the appearance of the God of Israel, while the sound of Jehovah's voice, in loudest trumpet notes, made all the people to quake—a day since commended to our love and sanctification by the recorded example of the holy Jesus, followed by the practice of His faithful apostles and apostolic church. I believe the number to be indeed small to whom, in the hours of cool reflection, it has never seemed remarkable, that the claims of this day to Christian observance should so quietly have ceased,—as all admit that with no such impressive accompaniments, as those which attended its promulgation from Sinai, has its cessation been marked, or that cessation, as a fact, been in any open manner declared. And as the occasional disquiet which I know many have felt on the subject—all too easily put away,—may have been, and I doubt not often was, the power of divine truth, in the Spirit's striving with them, that the righteous will of the righteous Lord may in this matter find its place in their hearts, I would seek to avail myself of it as an argument for reconsideration. For, however awfully a charge of the Church's dereliction is herein involved, in the fear of that God whose solemn sanction the seventh day so often received, I am constrained thus to avow my unqualified conviction, that it has ceased to be recognized as the Sabbath of the Lord without the requirement of any competent authority,—nay, in opposition to the plain dictates of divine revelation;—and that, therefore, God's blessing upon it remains yet unrevoked, and that all his solemn sanctions still stand in force, and that in so secularizing it for so many ages, and from so early a period, the professing Church of Christ has been, and still is, in a measure, under the power of that delusion which Paul prophetically descried, and specifically foretold as the apostacy, or great "falling away."

In proposing to discuss the subject, the order I wish to adopt in the consideration of Scripture texts, is that of time. I conceive that in no form could the subject be presented more distinctly, nor in any manner less liable to objection, than by simply tracing through the Word of God, in chronological order, the accounts given of the Sabbath, from the record of its original institution to the latest and most minute details of its millennial observance, prospectively given in inspired prophecy—the oversight of which last intimations of the divine will, has, perhaps, more than any other reason, contributed to the church's departure from God's appointment.

A very full view of the whole subject will thus be presented, and the ground of many objections examined, some of them more peculiar, and others more common, with those who have undertaken the vindication of the church's Sabbath. I had, indeed, contemplated a frequent and systematic introduction of quotations, in the examination of such arguments; and it is only an unwillingness to load my pages with the names and words of individuals, where opposition is so general, that has led me to abandon this design. Those acquainted with the manner inwhich the question has been discussed, and the nature of the arguments which are usually advanced for a change of the Sabbath, will, however, observe as I advance, that if not avowedly, yet in effect, I overthrow the assertion of the Westminster Divines concerning the sanctification of the first day of the week, since the resurrection of Christ—that I reply to the Irish Archbishop Whately, that there is now no Sabbath of divine appointment, but one only of the Church's enactment—that in the same manner I expose the inconsistency of the Bishop of Calcutta's idea (maintained also by Dwight, the popular American Professor and Divine,) of a "transfer" founded on the prophecy of "the new heavens and the new earth"—that I meet the suggestion of Mede, since taken up and insisted upon by Jennings and others, that it must have been the first day of the week that was originally observed under the divine command by the Israelites in the wilderness, subsequently changed into the seventh—and that I also reject the untenable idea, broached in the seventeenth century, if not one of the fancies of the early fathers, that the Sabbatism which remaineth for the people of God, refers to the first day of the week; a view which, in our own day, has been made the occasion of a most moving appeal by the Rev. Dr. Wardlaw, that this interpretation be received, in order that the church may not be deprived of the most direct text in proof of such a change. But although each of these points will be made the subject of individual consideration, the true value of such fancies will be best estimated when seen in connection with the many direct texts on the subject of the Sabbath which they are used to set aside.

Yet I would not omit here stating that, however objectionable their treatment of this part of the subject, some of these writers have illustrated with much beauty the nature and design of the Christian Sabbath. And to this I the more readily allude, as it is here less my design to enlarge upon what has often and recently been well urged, than by maintaining that which most deny, and which is generally ill understood, to recall attention to the fact, that it is the seventh day alone which God has sanctified and blessed.

Besides the growing indifference to any Sabbath, circumstances have of late rendered it more than formerly evident, that, even on the part of religious people, the unanimity in regard to the change is more apparant than real, and that all the influence of a wide-spread conformity and long-continued practice, have not wholly succeeded in obliterating from the minds of Christians the sacredness of the day which God has hallowed. In the discussions which have arisen from the various recent efforts for procuring new legislative enactments investing Sunday with sanctity, not a few have been made, on examination, to feel and confess that in the authority setting apart the first day of the week, there is little that is divine; and that the arguments usually urged in its support fall sadly short of what in most cases would be required for conviction. That it is altogether inadequate to establish the claims of Sunday to the name and place of God's Sabbath, it is presumed a faithful examination would suffice to demonstrate. To aid in this, is the object of these pages, in which, being assured that I have the witness of God's Holy Spirit, and seeing no reason to regard the question as one of obscurity, I will not abstain from presenting and considering the arguments which I believe to be regarded as affording greatest sanction to the Church's practice. The reception desired for what is thus to be advanced, is only that which it may be felt to merit when brought to the touchstone of divine truth.

While I hold it desirable how soon the Sabbath may be restored to the place assigned it of God, I have no wish to be associated with many of the principal promoters of the late opposition to the proposed Sunday Bills. Radically unsound were the principles avowed, and godless the feeling which was manifested in various of their movements. They little aimed at the glory of the Lord of the Sabbath; and, therefore, although I had withdrawn from business on the seventh day long before the recent altercations began,—and that on a principle which denies the right of any to apply God's Sabbath-sanctions to another day,—I could take no part with those in whose views I have so little sympathy, fearing less the evil of being unduly restrained in the exercise of my Christian liberty, than that of giving the appearance of countenance to the claims of impiety.

It may, notwithstanding, be charged against me, that by my weekly practice, and in these pages, as also in other forms of imparting instruction, I am seeking to create division, by unhinging the minds of men upon a subject which has long been dormant. To such a charge my answer is, that I am well assured it is the truth of God for which I plead, and I know that truth unites. It is error only that can justly be charged with the evil of division. I love those whe love the Lord, and would that they all knew His mind, and would possess themselves of the peace aud pleasure of walking in His ways, proving the yet higher blessedness of more perfect obedience. For, in striving to recall the attention of the Church to the divine appointment respecting the Sabbath, I am influenced not merely by a desire that glory should be given to God in his children's yielding obedience to his command. This of itself were, indeed, sufficient to warrant our utmost efforts for its attainment; but it should also be remembered that the appointments of God are directed by infinite wisdom, and are the gift of infinite love. The privilege of the creature, as well as the prerogative of the Ceeator, is involved in the question,—for God's commandments are not merely absolute, they are also the best that could be framed.

I therefore give thanks to the Lord who has led me back unto himself, that I have been given to know of a few to whom my observance of his day has been useful, in provoking to inquiry, and awaking from unsound repose. Those, therefore, who would say that the questison ought not now to be stirred, and who would regard the present attempt as only a troubling of the church, I would remind of Elijah's answer to King Ahab in reply to a similar charge, "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord." 1 Kings xviii. 18.

There are also some who, though convinced of the church's declension in this matter, yet deprecate discussion, from a fear of the triumph which thus the irreligious may be supposed to obtain, and the use which might be made of the arguments advanced, in removing the restraints under which such are now kept. That many may be disposed to avail themselves of any pretext for casting off the burden of seeming to set apart a day to the Lord, is indeed exceedingly probable; but, are we thence to infer, that it were better for the church herself to continue the perversion which former ages began? In all cases the sins of the friends of the Redeemer have proved occasions of stumbling to the weak, and have often times been made an apology for deliberate transgression by those who delight in evil. It is, however, to be observed, that the restraint which ignorance alone imposes is a very precarious tenure by which to bind the consciences of men; and the very weakness of the argument that pleads for God by appeals to which his Spirit cannot testify, may often have precipitated their rejection of the truth, also, in their disregard of what was manifestly false.

But to withhold from the avowal of a known truth, on such a ground, were to act on a principle utterly subversive of all hope of reformation; for the argument may be urged with equal force at whatever period existing evil of any kind is exposed. Too long have the friends of truth allowed the adversary thus to prevail; the time is now short, and admits not of delay—still less on such pretexts. We lift the warning voice, in the assurance that the Lord Jesus shall soon be revealed from heaven, calling each to an account of his stewardship; and not without a hope that, as in the coming fires of "the great tribulation," "many shall be purified and made white," they will then, at least, be brought to see the dishonor done to the name of Christ, by the declension of his church, and rejoice in being yet found "walking in all the statues and ordinances of the Lord blameless." But, whatever may be the issue in this respect, our avowal of the truth of God is to be independent either of the assurance of success, or apprehension of the contrary. Efforts made from love to God, in love to men, are seldom allowed to remain wholly fruitless; but our obedience to the truth, in the love of it, is to spring from a higher motive than our anticipation only of its favorable reception by others. "If I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ."

Besides, there are other considerations by which I am actuated in thus presenting evidence for the continuing obligation of the Sabbath of the Lord. During the years in which, by its observance, I had borne a silent testimony for God, I had often been urged to set forth, through the press and otherwise, the authority under which I so act—a solicitation with which I have the more willingly eomplied, that it has come from not a few who acknowledge that, having been led to a more close examination of the claims put forth for the first day, by my known observance of the seventh day, they have found themselves unable to obtain evidence in favor of the supposed change which they could regard as at all satisfactory, and were desirous of proceeding in their investigation till they should arrive at a proper conclusion.

Emulous, moreover, of the blessing pronounced by our Lord, when he said of his Father's law, "Whosoever shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven; but whoso SHALL DO, and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven," (Matt. v. 19,) I have been desirous of the opportunity of presenting more generally this testimony to the church of Christ. May it be to the blessing of many souls! And if any who have not hitherto been led to examine the subject, should hereby be convinced, I pray the Lord of the Sabbath to inspire them with full confidence in his own gracious promise of provision for those who truly seek to do his will; and, kept from conferring with flesh and blood, may their souls find strength and quickening in a remembrance of the years of his right hand—when, without the violation of Sabbath sanctity, his people were blessed with abundance in the midst of a desert, and when, without loss of worldly substance, they afterwards sanctified a Sabbath-year as well as a Sabbath day—and may they be encouraged by an observance of the doings of the Lord, in all the wonders he has wrought in every age for those who in faith and love have followed him.

In a consideration of the church's declension, by what means the change of the Sabbath was affected, or under what temptations, ought to be less a question with us than as to the fact itself. The Scriptures are the standard of doctrine as well as of practice; and conformity to these is that to which we are called; and, in whatever we can discover departure from them, it is equally our duty and our privilege to retrace our steps, whether or not it can be made evident what has originally occasioned the aberration. However much a man, by careful inquisition of the facts contained in early ecclesiastical writings, may ascertain the time, or there discover the manner, and trace the progress of that change, yet his knowledge, so acquired, however desirable in itself, can never be made the ground of faith, either to himself or another. And, as the Word of God contains no authority for the change, so neither in its inspired history is the manner in which that change took place at all to be found, Nay, the partial obscurity which rests upon the history of the church, immediately subsequent to the times of the apostles,—felt on this, as on other subjects,—has had a still deeper shade of darkness cast upon it by historians, who, themselves approving of the existing condition of the church in this matter, appear to have been at little trouble to ascertain more fully the truth—if they have not rather been unwilling to tell all they knew. There are, therefore, some interesting facts little insisted on by those to whom we are accustomed to look for such information, and therefore still less known to common readers, which serve to explain, in no inconsiderable degree, how the evil was at first introduced, and by which its increase and maturity are more easily comprehended. To these we may, perhaps, at a future period, if allowed of the Lord, direct attention, in a separate Historical Account of the Origin and Progress of Sunday Sanctification.

35 ARGYLL ARCADE, GLASGOW, October 17th, 1845.

THE SIX-PRINCIPLE BAPTISTS.

Questions are so often asked in regard to the particular location of this people, and their distinguishing tenets, we have thought a brief reply might be satisfactory to many of our readers. They are found principally in Rhode island, where they have some twenty churches or more, four or five of them quite large. Some few of their members are found in this and other States, and occasionally uniting with regular Baptists. They style themselves "Baptists of the ancient order of six principles of the doctrine of Christ and his Apostles." They reject infant baptism and hold nothing to be true baptism but the immersion of believers in the name of the Trinity.

They take the name of Six Principles from the six points of doctrine mentioned in Heb. 6: 1, 2. "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptism, and the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgement." These six points in theology are the great principles of their creed, and essential to be believed by those who would flee from the wrath to come. They held formerly to washing of feet, but this has rather gone into disuse. Laying on of hands after baptism they hold to so rigidly, that it is a bar to communion where omitted.

They also hold to the following points of doctrine, viz: "The supreme divinity of Jesus Christ—the unity of the God-head—original depravity—salvation by faith—the absolute necessity of perseverance after the new birth—the resurrection of the body—the final judgement—the everlasting happiness of the righteous, and the eternal misery of the finally wicked."

SECRET OF SUCCESS IN PREACHING.

Fletcher of Madeley was one of the most earnest and successful of preachers. He was a man of prayer, much prayer, and herein lay the secret of his power.—His biographer tells us, that "his preaching was perpetually preceded, accompanied, and succeeded by prayer. Before he entered upon the performance of his duty, he requested of the great Master of Assemblies a subject adapted to the conditions of his people; earnestly soliciting for himself wisdom, utterance, and power; for them, a serious frame, an unprejudiced mind, and a retentive heart. The necessary preparation for the profitable performance of his ministerial duties was of longer or shorter duration, according to his peculiar state at the time; and frequently he could form an accurate judgement of the effect that would be produced in public, by the languor or enlargement he had experienced in private. The spirit of prayer accompanied him from the closet to the pulpit; and while he was virtually employed in pressing the truth upon his hearers, he was inwardly engaged in pleading that last great promise of his unchangable Lord "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." From the great congregation he again withdrew to his sacred retreat, there requesting in secret that a blessing might accompany his public labors, and that the seed which he had sown, being treasured up in honest and good hearts, might sooner or later become abundantly fruitful.

All good ministers of the Lord Jesus do thus seek the blessing of God before and after their pulpit labor. But there is a great difference in the degree of earnestness and fervor with which they seek, and of course a proportionate difference in the degree of blessing which they gain. Some knock loudly, others faintly; some strike once, twice, thrice, others seven times; some wrestle with tears, others are comparatively formal. There is no gift of Divine Grace more precious to a minister of Christ than a spirit of persevering fervency in prayer, no gift which he ought to seek more earnestly and to cultivate more assiduously. Oftentimes, perhaps, when he is laboring away upon his discourses, and thinks that this and that presentation of truth must be effectual, the good effect upon his hearers is owing more to his prayers than his sermons, A minister's prayers may be compared to the powder, by firing which, the cannon-ball is sent upon its errand; without the prayers, his sermons will be little better than a heap of cannon balls without powder. There must be prayer from a heart on fire.

Some sermons are like a bright artillery-piece for a model; all finished, burnished, shining; every body says, what a splendid piece of ordnance! People stand and look into its mouth, and measure its breech, and lift the ball it can carry, and admire it without fear, for there is no powder in it. It is not meant to shoot any person, but to attract admiration as a finished piece of ordnance. An elaborate model-sermon, without prayer, is a gun that a man might put his ear to the muzzle without fear. And some sermons are like the artillery-pieces, that are wheeled into line in a sham-fight, and fired with blank catriges. There must be both fire and ball, if execution is to be done. Above all things, there must be much prayer. There must be prayer on fire.

GRAVES OF GOOD MEN.

That brotherhood of Christian men who were wont to assemble in old Bedford Chapel, to listen to the preaching of the sainted Cecil, and to pray together round the fireside of Henry Thornton, on Clapham green, have all gone to their rest. Cecil himself is long since gathered to his fathers. Wm. Wilberforce lies by the side of his friend Pitt beneath the pavement of Westminster Abbey; and hard by stands a marble statue in which the hand of the sculptor has cunningly portrayed the same sweet and placed expression which his friends love to remember and before which the friends of philanthrophy love to linger, John Newton—"the good Mr. Newton," as Wilberforce used to call him, sleeps among his flock in the parish church yard of St. Mary's. But the youngest and loveliest of that brotherhood lies two thousand miles away, under a spreading palmtree beside the walls of Tocat, where now and then after many and long intervals, an occasional Christian pilgrim stops, and reads through many tears, on a plain white stone. the name of HENRY MARTIN.

THE HOTTENTOT.

The Dutch farmers, or boors, in Africa, says Mr. Young, utterly despise the Hottentots One of these boors, was riding one day, when he saw a Hottentot, a young man, sitting under a tree. He rode up to him, and seeing he held a book in his hand, asked him what he was doing. "Reading," was the reply. "Reading!" said he: "reading what?" "The Bible!" retorted the other. "Why that is not for you; why there is not the name of 'Hottentot' in all the book!" "But I find my name is there," said the young man. The Dutchman alighted. "I won't believe you," said he,—"show it to me." The young man turned to these words, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." "Sinners," said he, putting his finger to the word; "there is my name."

LAW AND GOSPEL.

That the term Law is used in Scripture in different senses, is evident to every discriminating mind. Nevertheless the Sabbath controversy gives birth to some strange notions—notions, that had never been heard of but for a desire to set aside the authority of the fourth commandment. In their zeal to do this, some affirm, that the term is used in one sense only;—that there is no foundation for the distinctions of moral, ceremonial, and judicial;—that when Paul taught the abrogation of the law and its observances, he meant the whole law, and not the ceremonial in particular;—and that we are now under an entirely different rule of conduct, furnished by the New Testament.

We have asked such objectors, how they would convict men of sin, since the Scripture declares plainly that sin is the transgression of the LAW. 1 John 3: 4. What think you, reader, is the answer we received? Why, that law which convicts of sin, is the law of the New Testament, or that system given by Christ and his apostles, in contradistinction from that contained in the Old Testament. A certain preacher, holding forth in a neighborhood where the Sabbath excitement was running pretty high, remarked, "We hear a great deal about the law being necessary to convince men of sin, as if we must needs go back to the Old Testament. Not so, my brethren. The Apostle does indeed say, that by the law is the knowledge of sin; but it is the law of the gospel." Well, brother, if it is 'the law of the gospel,' then is not the word used in at least two different senses? For you admit, and even insist upon it, that the Apostle teaches the entire repeal of the law, by which you understand the law given by Moses, including the decalogue. Yet you now find the Apostle making mention of a law, which gives the knowledge of sin, (Rom. 3: 20,) and which must not be transgressed even by Christians, (ch. 6: 15, compare 1 John 3: 4,) which law, you say, was not given by Moses, but by Christ. You therefore strangely contradict yourself.

But perhaps you did not mean to be taken rigidly as you said, when you averred that the term was used in one sense only. We allow you to correct yourself then; but if you have a right to affix different senses to the term, so have we; and it shall be our present business to inquire whether your sense is the correct one.

When one says that the gospel is a law, he ought to be very sure that he understands himself. For our part, we understand the gospel to mean good news. It is the good news, or glad tidings, of the pardoning mercy of God through Jesus Christ. We do not apprehend how, in the strict sense of the word, it can be a law. A law is a rule of duty. But the gospel, properly speaking, is no rule at all. It does not consist of injunctions. Injunctions may be founded upon the gospel; but the gospel itself is simply good news.

Now does the mere proclamatinn of this good news serve to convince men of sin? It may do so by implication, but not directly. As it is with chain-shot, so with divine truth; when one part of it goes, all the rest goes along with it. Still we must not confound things, which are in their very nature distinct. When the good news concerning pardon is declared to sinners, that law which they have before violated is brought up to their minds, and they feel guilty before God. But it would be impossible to produce conviction in this way, if they had received no previous knowledge of the law. Good news supposes the sinner already under condemnation by some law. On no other ground could it be good news to him.

Our attention is sometimes directed to those instances, where the 'simple story of the cross' has produced an overwhelming sense of guilt. Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost is cited as an example. But that Peter's hearers were ignorant of the law, it were foolish to pretend. They were Jews, and well understood what was required by the great code of morals God had given them. Hence when Peter preached Christ, they straightway recollected that the law adjudged them to wrath. It was a natural association of ideas. Besides, he must be a very superficial reader, who does not see that in this very sermon the people were charged with having committed murder. (Acts 2: 23.) If this was not preaching the law, we should like to know what would be. (See Exod. 20: 13.)

Again, we are referred to the mode in which certain heathens have been converted. The missionaries, it is said, began by preaching Jesus as the Saviour of sinners; and although their hearers had never enjoyed the light of revelation, still they were struck under conviction. But notwithstanding those pagans had not lived in the light of revelation, and consequently knew nothing of God's law in that way, it does not follow that they had not attained to the knowledge of it in some other way. Indeed they must have had knowledge of it in some way; for it is admitted, that they knew they had done wrong. It matters but little whether the law of God is read in his Book, or whether it is brought into contact with the mind by some other means. The great point is to have knowledge of its principles. If the light of nature be sufficient to make known its principles, it answers the same purpose as a written code. Whether the heathen really do attain to a knowledge of this law without the aid of the written code, let Paul decide. (Rom. 2: 14, 15.) If upon the first hearing of the gospel they are smitten with a sense of guilt, it is no proof that the law had no agency to effect it. It had an agency; not, to be sure, through the intervention of any formal instruction out of the Bible, but in a way that answered the same purpose. The duties, suggested by their own consciences, were the same duties, that are formally embodied in the written code. No wonder then, that the simple proclamation of the good news should, by a very natural association of ideas, spring a deep sense of guilt, and convert them to God.

These instances then, so far from proving that the gospel itself, irrespective of any law operation, convinces of sin, only go to show that there is a principle in the human mind, by which kindred ideas are naturally associated; so that when a Saviour is declared, men are led to inquire whether they are condemned by any law, so as to need him.

THE NAME OF THE INSTITUTION.

A minister of acknowledged abilities, in preaching recently from the text, "What wilt thou do unto thy great name?" (Josh. 7: 9,) remarked, that one of the practical duties arising from the doctrine of the text, was to cherish profound reverence for those institutions to which the Lord has attached his NAME. The Sabbath was instanced as one. It was also remarked, that he who tramples upon the Sabbath, tramples upon the heart-strings of a nation's prosperity. Yet this minister of the gospel, instead of keeping the Sabbath himself, keeps the first day of the week, and, we doubt not, teaches others to do the same. Does he—can he suppose, that in keeping the first day of the week he keeps the Sabbath? The Sabbath is a commemorative institution. It celebrates the fact that God made the world in six days, and rested on the seventh day. It thus becomes a standing monument, attesting against atheism and idolatry. But what is the first day of the week? Does it also commemorate the work of creation, and thus bear witness against atheism and idolatry? Its abettors do not pretend that it does. On the contrary, they make it commemorative of a very different event, namely, the work of redemption. What business, then, have they to call it the Sabbath, as if it were the same institution? Would any sane mind call the celebration of our nation's independence, and the celebration of the landing of the pilgrims, the same? Does not any school-boy know the difference? They are different because they commemorate different facts. Call the first day of the week a Sabbath, if you please, but remember that when you speak of the Sabbath, you are understood to speak definitely of some particular institution called by that name in the Bible. You cannot say that the first day is ever called the Sabbath in the Bible. You know that by the Sabbath, the reference is to the SEVENTH day. To the seventh day the Lord has indeed attached his holy name, and we are therefore bound to reverence it. Isa. 58: 13. Exod. 20: 10. Matt. 12: 8.

But what claim has the first day of the week to be called a Sabbath? Has God ever called it so? "To the law, and to the testimony," and see. The search is vain. The Bible never calls it a Sabbath. Its claim rests merely on the usage of Christians. They are accustomed to observe it as a Sabbath, that is, as a day of rest, and therefore think themselves authorized to apply that name to it. But as God has appropriated that name to another day, and to commemorate a very different fact, we insist upon it, that such ought always to be the application of the term. The popular usage tends to mislead and deceive the people. When they hear their teachers insist upon the necessity of keeping the Sabbath, they naturally suppose the Bible Sabbath is meant. And then, finding that in the popular vocabulary Sunday is called the Sabbath, and that Christians keep it as such, they form the opinion that Sunday is the Bible Sabbath. Thus are the people DECEIVED. And the priests, "whose lips should keep knowledge, and of whom the people should learn the law of God at their mouths," take no pains to undeceive them, but deliberately set themselves at work to keep up the deception!

The distinguished minister, to whom we have alluded in the beginning of this article, may, for aught we know, be as honest in his views, as it is possible for any errorist to be. It is not against him in particular that we level our remarks, but against the entire brotherhood of those who combine together to shut out all inquiry upon a question which lies at the very bottom of Sabbath reform. How long must Sabbath-breaking be perpetuated in the land by the example and teaching of those who are set up as guides to the people?

THE JEWS IN NORWAY.—It is stated in an English paper, that the subject of admitting Israelites into Norway has been referred to a committee of the Storthing, or Parliament, who reported favorably. If this measure should be carried, as we sincerely and confidently hope it may, it will prepare the way for removing all the disabilities under which the Jews are placed in that country. It will also be a practical and very desirable acknowledgment of the injustice which has so long been done to that people by subjecting them to imprisonment for violating the territory of Norway by their presence.

THE JEWS AT BOMBAY.—A recent report of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, develops some interesting facts respecting this people. They are said to have been established in that part of India from time immemorial, and to have had no communication with any of their race in other quarters of the globe. When discovered by European settlers, they possessed none of the prophetic books of the Old Testament, and knew nothing of the history of their people subsequent to the first captivity—never having heard even of the destruction of the temple at Jerusalem. They are called "Beni Israel," and none of them bear any of the names peculiar to the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, which were so common among the Jews after their return from Babylon. They have the features of their race in a very marked degree, and are distinguished for intelligence and integrity. On this account they are not unfrequently promoted to offices of trust and responsibility in the army. Although they repeat their prayers in Hebrew, they have almost entirely lost the knowledge of that language, which very few of them understand. In this respect, however, they have improved within a few years past.

A CHURCH OF SABBATH-KEEPERS IN NEW YORK.

This object, so long desired by our denomination, but against which so many obstacles seemed to be arrayed, has at length been accomplished. A council, consisting of ministers, deacons, and other brethren, from the churches of Plainfield, Piscataway, Berlin, Preston, Pawcatuck, and Waterford, assembled at the house of Bro. Thos. B. Stillman, on the first day of this week, to take into consideration the request of a number of brethren and sisters to be organized as a distinct and independent church of our Lord Jesus Christ. Eld. Wm. B. Maxson was chosen Moderator, and Eld. Samuel Davison, Secretary. An able discourse on the character and order of the church of Christ was delivered by Bro. Maxson, founded on Matt. 16: 18, "And I say unto thee, that thou art Peter; and on this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The devotional exercises were led by Bro. Davison.

The council, having received due satisfaction concerning the circumstances and gifts of these disciples, and finding that they were of one heart and one mind to serve the Lord in the maintenance of his worship, and the discipline of a church; also that they were sound in the faith, and their lives without blame in keeping the commandments of God;—unanimously resolved to recognize them as a sister church of Christ, to be known as the Seventh-day Baptist Church of the city of New York. Upon which, they having entered into a solemn covenant to do those things which devolve upon a Christian Church, Eld. W. B. Gillett gave the right hand of fellowship to Bro. Thos. B. Brown, their representative. A pertinent address was then made to the newly constituted body by Eld. Solomon Carpenter, and prayer for the blessing of the Great Head of the Church was offered by Eld. Alexander Campbell. The hymn and benediction by the Moderator, closed these solemn and delightfully interesting exercises.

Our friends abroad will be interested to know, that this newly-organized band is composed of pious and substantial materials. They are twenty-one in number, nine of whom are males. Others living in the city will, in all probability, soon be added. It is expected that Eld. T. B. Brown will be chosen as their Pastor.

It is hoped, that the prayer of our entire denomination will be fervently offered for this infant church. They have nothing but the promise of God to cheer them. So far as their distinctive creed is concerned, the constituted arrangements of the social system are all against them; hoary headed error frowns upon them; the priesthood of a vitiated theology scorns them; and their own infirmities discourage them. God only can save them.

Their meetings for the present are held at the house of Bro. Stillman, 551 Fourth Street, every seventh day at 11 o'clock; and though a private dwelling, it is hoped that all who desire to behold our order will feel perfectly free to attend. They will at all times be welcome "for the truth's sake which dwelleth in us."

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

To the members and friends of the Seventh-Day Baptist Missionary Association:

DEAR BRETHREN:—At the late meeting of your Board of Managers, they deemed it important to lay before you the following information of their doings, and the affairs of the society.

Br. Lucius Crandall, having completed his term of appointment at Newport, R. I., and vicinity, reported that he had not only supplied the pulpit in Newport on the Sabbath days, but that he had extended his labors to four other preaching stations in adjacent towns, and that he had the satisfaction, in addition to seeing the cause sustained in that ancient church, to know that the subject of the Sabbath is at present awakening more feeling and attention in that region than it has done for many years before.

Br. Crandall having now left that station, the Board have appropriated fifty dollars for one year to the church in Newport, to enable them to maintain the preached Gospel among themselves and others around them who incline to keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus; and we are happy to inform you, that they have, with this encouragement, engaged Br. Libbeus Cotterell, from Pawcatuck, to supply them for the present year.

Br. Thomas E. Babcock continues his labors with the church in Persia, Cattaraugus County, N. Y., and in adjacent parts. From Br. Babcock's reports, it is evident that his labors are productive of much good to the cause in that section of country. He has given a course of lectures on the Sabbath question, and one person has embraced the Sabbath to keep it unto the Lord, since his former report; and the church manifests a growing interest in Sabbath School, Tract, and Missionary efforts.

In addition to the home department, your Board have at length been able to make an appointment for a foreign field. Brother and Sister Carpenter, formerly Principal and Preceptress of the De Ruyter Institute, but late of Shiloh, N. J., having signified their readiness to enter upon a foreign mission, they were both unanimously approved and appointed as candidates for that work. They immediately made an entire consecration of themselves and all they possess to that good cause of the great Redeemer. Br. C. has since asked and obtained a release from his engagements at Shiloh, and is now in N. Y. attending the medical lectures in that city. These will occupy him for the present winter. In the mean time the Board have left the particular field of labor to which they are to be sent, open for further injuries. They have, for the most part, had their attention directed to Eastern Africa; but it has lately been proposed to them to inquire whether China and Palestine have not strong claims upon them as fields for a first missionary effort. Your Board feel, in reference to this matter, that they are sincerely desirous of being guided alone by divine Providence, having no other object to serve than the promotion of the cause of Christ, and the salvation of lost and ruined men; and hence they entertain no doubt but that, by the time our missionaries are ready to go forth, they will be in possession of such information as, with the intimations of divine Providence, will enable them to choose the right field. Br. Carpenter is now to be regarded as in the employ of the Board, and hence there is now no uncertainty about your subscriptions being immediately needed. Your Board have incurred these responsibilities in the fullest confidence that they will be sustained in them by the hearty co-operation of their brethren.

With the desire of carrying forward their present appointments, and still further enlarging their number, the Board have appointed Br. N. V. Hull, an agent in the State of New-York, to stir up our churches to this work, and obtain and collect subscriptions for both home and foreign missions between this time and the next anniversary. Br. Alexander Campbell was appointed to perform a similar service in the States of Rhode Island and Connecticut; and the Corresponding Secretary in New Jersey. The Board bespeak for these appointments the kind and prayerful regards of all their brethren. Let us as a people but be suitably enlarged in our own efforts and affections for the cause of the blessed Saviour, and doubtless we shall find a corresponding, yea exceeding, increase from the Lord.

SAMUEL DAVISON, Cor. Sec.

CIRCULATE THE PETITIONS.

To the Sabbath-keepers in the State of New York:—

DEAR BRETHREN,—We trust that the following remarks will not be deemed out of place, or the result of a spirit of dictation. Matters of vast moment are at stake. Our religious liberties bave been cloven down, and our constitutional rights have been invaded. According to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Maxson vs. Annas, we may be compelled by any unprincipled man to appear before a civil magistrate on the Sabbath to defend ourselves or to submit to a judgment by default. The great question before us is, shall we tamely submit to such flagrant injustice? Or, shall we arouse ourselves, and use all constitutional means for a redress of our grievances? The Central Association, at its last session, appointed a committee to obtain able counsel in the above case, and, if thought advisable, to carry the same to the Court of Errors. Said committee have so far complied with their instructions as to take able counsel, and have become satisfied that there is a radical defect in the law, and that to carry it up to the Court of Errors would only subject us to a bill of cost without any prospect of relief. An appeal therefore to the Legislature to amend the law, is the only means left. The Central and Western Associations have advised to such a resort, and among others have appointed us as agents in carrying the above measure into effect.

We are informed, that a form of petition has been sent to all the churches in this State, which form we approve, with the exception of one clause. It prays the Legislature to pass a law, or to amend the act already passed, so as to exempt the "members of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination" from any liability, &c. Whereas we would suggest the propriety of inserting, in its stead, "all persons who observe the seventh day of the week."

Dear Brethren—Although our civil and religious rights in the article of the Sabbath have been grossly outraged, yet we rejoice that the sacred right of petition is yet respected in New York. Permit us therefore earnestly to urge you to make a business of circulating petitions in every section where there are Sabbath keepers to circulate them. Present them to your first day friends, and obtain as many signatures as you can. Let it be immediately attended to, that when the Legislature meets we may be ready to present such an array of names as shall command attention. Let your petitions be forwarded at the opening of the Legislature, that they may not be neglected through the plea of want of time.

ELI S. BAILEY,
NATHAN V. HULL.

Brookfield, Nov. 5th, 1845.

Religious Anniversaries, similar to those of May in New York and Boston, were recently held for several days in succession, at Plainfield, one of the hill towns of Massachusetts. The occasion is represented in the papers of the county as being one of great interest, and there seems to be no good reason why such Anniversaries, instead of being limited to a few large cities, should not be held in all considerable towns, and thus a more general spirit of Christian enterprize awakened throughout the land.

"THE ORIGINAL SABBATH UNCHANGED."—We this week commence the publication of a series of articles under the above title by JAMES A. BEGG, of Glasgow, North Britain. The reputation of Mr. Begg as a Bible student prepared us to expect that his articles would be candid and thorough. In this expectation we are confirmed by the statement of his plan which we publish to-day. Our readers may settle it in their minds, that the articles will be of very great value, and that those who do not read them and preserve them for future reference, will be the losers.

"THE LIGHT-SHIP."—A semi-monthly paper devoted to sailors and boatmen, has just been commenced in New York. It is edited by Rev Charles W. Dennison, favorably known as a preacher to seamen, and editor of the Sheet Anchor. Published by Myron Finch, 118 Nussau street. The first number contains a variety of racy and interesting articles, and seems well adapted to advance the interests of the class for whom it is designed.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST THE HOME AND HOPE OF THE FREE. By WM. R. WILLIAMS.

We have read this little production with great interest, and would read it again, if we had time, which is more than we can say of most of the publications of the day. Such is the vigor of thought, the fervor of style, and the pungency of truth, which distinguish it throughout, that we advise all others to procure and read it for themselves. It may be had at Colby's, 122 Nassau St.

THE SCOTCH FREE CHURCH.—Several ministers of the Free Church of Scotland have been holding a series of meetings in the Highlands, at which the services were conducted both in English and Gaelic. Among the speeches reported is one by Mr. Begg, in which he is represented as saying:—

"I believe that the disruption has been one of the most valuable events, in reference to the advancement of the cause of Christ, which the world ever saw; and that, had we gained all that we struggled for—had we gained even more than we struggled for, the cause of Christ in this land, and throughout the world, would not have been advanced as it has been by the plan God himself devised. Our enemies meant it for evil, but the Lord meant it for good—and I hope the day will never come, when any of the ministers and members of the Free Church of Scotland will for an instant hesitate or look back to Egypt again."

BAPTISM OF 130 CONVERTED JEWS.—The Bremen Gazette states that the city of Saratoff, on the Volga, has recently been the scene of a spectacle, which, for magnificence, could scarcely be equaled by the cities of Western Europe. One hundred and thirty Jews, recently enrolled in the army, having expressed a desire to embrace the Greek Catholic faith, the 4th of June, (O. S.) was appointed for their reception into the bosom of the church. On that day, early in the morning, the liturgy was said in the Cerkiel, (Cathedral of Saratoff,) the neophytes as not yet being baptized, and therefore unworthy to enter the holy place, standing outside the door which faces to the west. After the service the whole congregation, in procession, with banner and music, followed by the Israelites, two and two, proceeded to the banks of the Volga, where they were baptized in the usual form, after which they joined the congregation, and returned hand in hand to the cathedral, which, as now forming part of the Christian community, they entered, and the whole concluded with an impressive discourse by the priest. The whole place on the banks of the Volga was crowded with people of all nations and religions—Catholics, Lutherans, Mohammedans, and Pagans—who viewed this novel spectacle in amazement.

THANKSGIVINGS.—The following are the times of holding Thanksgiving in several of the States:—

Charleston, S. C.	Nov. 6.	Massachusetts	Nov. 27.
Ohio,	Nov. 20.	Connecticut,	Nov. 27.
Kentucky,	Nov. 20.	N. Hamp.,	Nov. 27.
Maryland,	Nov. 21.	Vermont,	Dec. 4.
Pennsylvania,	Nov. 27.	Maine,	Dec. 4.
New York,	Dec. 7.	New Jersey,	Nov. 27.
Rhode Island,	Nov. 27.

Thus it will be seen that in nearly half the States of the Union this good old custom of the Pilgrims will be honored.

POVERTY A BLESSING.—Rev. Mr. ———, having been on a visit to one of his poor Scotch parishioners, who was taken ill, and being about to take his leave, held out his hand to the object of his visit, who pressed it affectionately, at the same time thanking his pastor for his kind solicitude about his soul's welfare, and in conclusion said, "God grant ye, sir, great abundance of poverty here, and a double portion o't through a' eternity." "What!" said the astonished clergyman, "do you wish me to become poor?" "Wi' a' my heart, sir," answered the old man seriously; "ye ken a hundred times, an' mair, hae ye tauld me that poverty was a blessing, an' I'm sure there's nane I could wish to see better blessed than yoursel'." A solemn pause ensued. At length the minister said, with an air of touching humility, which showed he felt the full force of the cutting reproof—"Well, James, I never thought seriously on that point till this moment; poverty cannot be a blessing, it is at best a misfortune."

The Faculty of Dartmouth College have consented to receive colored students. In their reply they say:—"Our usages, in respect to the admission of students are entirely impartial. We make no distinction in regard to nation or color. The African and Indian are as freely received as the Saxon, if possessed of the requisite literary and moral qualifications."

Mr. Rowley, of Connecticut, with whose robbery on board the steamboat the public are already familiar, is now confined in a Lunatic Asylum at Worcester, and the robber can never be identified. It appears that some creditors of Mr. Rowley in Boston, suspecting his story of the robbery, caused him to be arrested on his going to that city and thrown into prison. This, together with the loss of the money, so preyed upon him that his reason gave way beneath the attack. Truly his fate has been a hard one.

General Intelligence.

STATE OF THINGS IN MEXICO.—The news from Mexico is anything but encouraging as regards that country. The insurrectionary disturbances which recently broke out in the Department of Lenora, but were quelled by the Government, have broken out afresh. A horrible state of affairs has been the consequence. Different families have called in a band of Indians to their aid, and executions are constantly made on both sides, without the formality of a trial. The banishment of Gen. Urrea is said to be the avowed object of the insurrectionists. Tobasco is likewise the seat of internal broils, growing principally out of private dissensions. Texas and Tamaulipas are invaded by Anglo-Americans; the Camanches overrun the Department of Durango, butchering and plundering as usual, and carrying off large numbers of prisoners, as well as cattle and horses. The affrighted inhabitants had called upon the Government for aid, their own appliances and resources being exhausted. The absurd charge has been made by the Mexicans that it is by the instigation of America these attacks are made, and that we have provided the Camanches, Lipans and Tonkaways with arms and ammunitions.

SMOKING A FRESHMAN.—Some of the dignitaries of the Sophomore Class in old Yale, soon after the late assemblage of the students, undertook to initiate a Freshman in some of the mysteries of the school by the ancient process of smoking. For this purpose five of them visited the room of a young Freshman, with pipes in their mouths, smoking lustily, and at the same time anointing the hot stove with asafetida. As no compliments had been passed, Freshy very coolly rose, walked out of the door, turned the key, and left the smokers to enjoy the fragrance which they had created. After an hour or two, Freshy called to inquire how they had spent the evening, when the Sophs cried for quarters and were suffered to depart. They did not like asafetida at all, and thought it rather dangerous to jump out of a two-story window.

TREMENDOUS GALE AT QUEBEC.—A letter to the Editor of the Montreal Times communicates the intelligence that Quebec had been visited (Oct 3d) by a terrible gale, the consequences of which were severely felt for many miles along the lakes. A number of vessels, with their cargoes, were cast away, and it is supposed more than one life has been sacrificed to the fury of the elements. The Quebec "Mercury," gives a detailed account of the occurrence, and anticipates great disasters among the shipping. A man was reported to have been crushed to death between two batteaux. Numerous schooners and smaller vessels in the Cul de Sac and at the Palais suffered much damage—some of them being totally destroyed. The River St. Charles was choked with floating timber, fragments of furniture, &c. &c. Like effects had been observed along the St. Lawrence. Steamboats had great difficulty in effecting a landing—many being compelled to anchor, until the gale had abated. The Mercury describes it as one of the most terrific storms of the season.

MARRIED—NOT HUNG.—A novel occurrence took place on Wednesday last, in a capital trial pending before all the Judges of the Supreme Court, now sitting at Salem. James Powers, who was indicted for rape on Hannah Welsh, was to have been tried on Thursday for his life, and the jurors were summoned, and the Court ready, having assigned a day specially for the trial. In this stage of the case, the prosecuting officer announced to the Court that he had suddenly been deprived of the most material witness for the prosecution, without whose testimony he could not hope for a conviction; that this witness was the girl upon whom the offence had been committed, and that he had lost her testimony by her going to the jail and marrying the prisoner that morning—and now, being his wife, she could not testify against him!

And thereupon the Court looked becomingly grave, and the prosecuting officer entered a nolle prosequi, and Mr. James Powers is a gay bridegroom at large, enjoying his honeymoon, instead of being a prisoner in the dock on his trial, with the prospect of a hempen halter.—[Boston Post.

A COOL ROBBERY.—Robberies are becoming matters of science and study. A short man with a thin face, stepped into the boarding house, located in Front street below Walnut, Phila., and proceeded up stairs. On his way up he helped himself to two sack coats and a valise, and just as he was about to enter a room, the landlady of the house accosted him. He replied, that he wished to see Dr. Cooper at one o'clock. The lady told him that such a person did not board in the house, but the fellow put on the air of obstinacy and declared that he knew very well that he did live there. The lady upon looking at the coat and valise in his hands, thought that he had just arrived from the country, and after a little talk with him, he came to the conclusion that he was mistaken,—and begging the lady's pardon for the intrusion, bid her good morning and took his departure. The robbery was ascertained shortly after, but the impudent fellow was nowhere to be seen.

ERUPTION OF MOUNT HECLA.—The Kjobenhaonsposi, a Danish journal, gives the following account of the new eruption of Mount Hecla:—"Hecla, after reposing 80 years, threatens, according to private letters, to ravage Iceland. In the night of the 1st of September a frightful subterranean groaning filled the inhabitants around it with terror. This continued till mid-day on the 2nd, when the mountain burst in two places with a terrible crash, and vomited masses of fire. In former times these explosions came from the summit, where Hecla has no regular formed crater; but this time torrents of lava flowed down two gorges on the flanks of the mountain. Letters from Reikjavie, of the 13th, state up to that day no great damage had been done in the Syssels of Rangervalla and Arnds, situated close to the mountain, inasmuch as the opening whence the ignited masses issue are fortunately on the North and North-West side, and, consequently, took that direction in which there is nothing but barren hearts. Besides, the wind having continually blown from the South and South-west has driven the ashes and dust towards the opposite point. From the clouds of smoke and vapor, the top of the volcano could not be seen. The sheep on the hearts were driven down to the plains, but not till several of them were burnt. The waters of the neighboring rivers, near the eruption, became so hot that the fish were killed, and it was impossible for any one to ford them even on horseback. Although the lava and ashes took a Northern direction, the eruption was not known on that side of the island till after the 11th, and even as late as the 15th the people at the Syssels of Mule, in the North-east, were ignorant of it. In the Western parts, the noise accompanying the eruption was distinctly heard like the rolling of distant thunder. Nothing was heard at Reikjavik."

HINTS FOR THOSE WHO NEED THEM.—A celebrated pickpocket, who was lately sent to the State Prison for his misdeeds, being noted for his marvelous adroitness in pocket-lifting, was requested to reveal the secret of his success, when the following, among other disclosures, were made; we publish them as like to be useful to those who are willing to take a hint.

"I never," said the pickpocket, "attempt the pocket of any old resident of a city, but uniformly strangers and countrymen." But on being asked how he distinguished them, he replied, "very easily," and gave the following list of persons who were the regular victims of the "craft."

"Persons in an omnibus who take out their pocket-books after the stage stops, are sure to be countrymen. Those who stop to converse on the side-walks or in thoroughfares; or who take out pocket-books at the box or pit offices of Theatres or Steamboat offices. All those who stop to gaze at shop windows, or count money, or show pocket-books in the street, or call in at the Funk Auction rooms. All these," said he, "are our common victims."

"If I find a man eating oysters or fruit, or carrying an open knife in the street, in nine cases out of ten he is green, and we victimize him. Persons who stand up in Theatres, or stand on cross-walks, are generally country folks, and we make sure of them."

DISCOVERY OF A MINE OF DIAMONDS.—The French consul at Bahia has addressed a report to the Minister of Foreign Affairs at home announcing the discovery, at the distance of 80 leagues from that capital, of an abundant mine of diamonds—a source of incalculable wealth to the province. It lies in a desert place, uninhabited, and scarcely accessible, and was discovered by mere accident. The head of a rich English company has already exported, it is said, nearly £200,000 worth of its produce; and, as the working of the mine is left to any one who will, there is a race at present for its treasures. Eight or nine thousand emigrants, from all parts of Brazil, have already pitched their tents on the savage and unwholesome spot, and to the inhabitants of a crowded European state, the very thought of a jewel mine to be ransacked at pleasure—diamonds to be had for the fetching—is a temptation likely, we should think, to attract adventurers, even if the Upas tree stood in the way.—Athenæum.

THE LOSS OF THE PLYMOUTH.—The Shawneetown Gazette states that all the persons who were lost by the recent collision of the steamboats Lady Madison and Plymouth, on the Ohio River, were German emigrants. The Plymouth and her cargo are a total loss. The boat was cut "clear through," and sunk almost immediately, causing such a panic amongst the deck passengers as led many of them to jump overboard in their fright. It is supposed that twenty-five or thirty are missing. One whole family is gone. One poor woman saved two other women and a child, but lost her own husband and one child. Another lost all her family. The deck passengers who were saved (some thirty or forty in number) lost all their property.

BOYS' PLOWING MATCH.—At the Newcastle County (Delaware) Agricultural exhibition, last month, there was a spirited plowing match for boys under sixteen years of age. It is thus described: Now followed the second match, being entries for boys under sixteen years of age; eight of whom entered. Their performance was indeed surprising. The first premium was won by a lad by the name of Janvier; the son, as I understood, of a poor widow woman; and when asked whether he would have a piece of plate or its value in money, replied, he would take the money: "he wanted it for his mother." The second was won by master George Jackson, a boy of ten years old, (a son of Mr. Bryan Jackson, a large farmer,) and thought small of his age. The clearing up furrow of this lad exceeded any effort I ever saw of the kind by a boy. In addition to the second premium, Mr. Pedder presented to him through a member of the committee, as coming from the Messrs. Prouty, whose plow he held, a beautiful little watch, with chain, key, &c., and the possession seemed to gratify the little fellow much; nor was it scarcely less gratifying, apparently, to the numerous spectators, who all voted him the General Tom Thumb of the plowing ground.

PROTECTION FOR THE POCKET.—Mr. Joseph Colter, a tailor, of Amherst, Mass. has invented an article of defence against pickpockets, which is thus described:

"It consists of two curved plates united by hinges at the extremities, and which, by means of holes in the plates, are sowed to the lid of the pocket, constituting its opening. While the plates are being shut, a slide to which a string is attached, is forced up, which immediately resumes its place as they close and fastens them together. Not only is the pocket fastened by the slide, whenever it is shut, but it may also be locked, if the owner desires it, by pressing a knob, of which there are three upon the plate, all of which must be moved to unlock the pocket, and the use of both hands is necessary to do it. The pocket is also surrounded with a net-work of wire, so that whatever it contained in it can neither be taken or cut out without the knowledge or consent of the owner. The invention is applicable both to watch pockets and others."

SUFFRAGE IN CONNECTICUT.—The following provision having been adopted in the prescribed way, has been declared by special proclamation of the Governor to be a part of the Constitution of Connecticut:

"Every white male citizen of the United States, who shall have attained the age of twenty-one years, who shall have resided in this State for a term of one year next preceding, and in the town in which he may offer himself to be admitted to the privileges of an elector at least six months next preceding the time he may so offer himself, and shall sustain a good moral character, shall, on his taking such an oath as may be prescribed by law, be an elector."

In one of the large towns of the West, there is a man who keeps an eating house on his own hook, and edits a newspaper for an association of printers. He feeds both the minds and bodies of his customers.

SUMMARY.

We learn from the Port Tobacco Times that Mark Ceasar, the colored man, against whom thirty-six indictments had been found by the grand jury of Charles county court, in this State, for insurrection, was tried last week upon ten of them and found guilty. He was then sentenced to the Penitentiary for four years upon each, making the whole term of his imprisonment forty years. He is about thirty-seven years old, and should he serve out his term he will then be seventy-seven years of age.

Human happiness has no perfect security, but freedom; freedom none but virtue; virtue none but knowledge; and neither freedom, nor virtue, nor knowledge, has any vigor, or immortal hope, except in the principles of the Christian faith and in the sanctions of the Christian religion.

The building in Philadelphia, used as the office of the "Secretary for Foreign Affairs," during the Revolutionary War, being part of the estate of the late M. Du Ponceau, was sold last week to a prominent bookseller, and is about to be demolished.

The two negroes, John, the property of Mrs. McDowell, and George, the slave of Mr. C. Garber, have been tried and found guilty of an outrage on the person of a young white female, near Staunton, Va., and are to be hung on the third Friday in December. We also learn from the Spectator, that Wm. B. Johnson, the white man charged as an accomplice with the negroes, has been tried and sentenced to 42 years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.

We learn from the Hagerstown Torch Light, that on Wednesday morning, David G. Yost, Esq. one of the oldest and most worthy citizens of Hagerstown, committed suicide by shooting himself with a pistol through the temple. Owing to great pecuniary embarrassments, in which he had recently become involved, says the Torch Light, he had been for several days laboring under a great depression of spirits, and those who observed closely his actions, discovered that his reason had been materially impaired.

On Friday evening, as the agent and workmen on the Winchester and Potomac Railroad attempted to remove some coal cars from the lower to the upper depot at Harper's Ferry, the trusseling gave way, and buried beneath the huge mass of timber, cars, &c. Mr. Henry Brown, agent of the road; Mr. Henry F. Gasker, William, son of Mr. Brown, and negro man, Beverly, the porter of the cars, &c. Mr. Casker and the son of Mr. Brown were taken from under the pile with life perfectly extinct. Mr. Brown's injuries are very great. Beverly is less injured.

There was snow at Washington on Sunday morning.

The Pittsburgh Journal says: "It is nearly seven months since the occurrence of the great calamity which made ruin of one third of this city. The vast burnt district is nearly covered with new and handsome structures, and yet the fire is not wholly extinguished. Yesterday our attention was called to burning embers in a vault in Third street, directly opposite our office, perhaps the last remnant of the memorable kindling of the 10th of April."

John A Junes of Salem, Mass., who was lately imprisoned in Baltimore on suspicion of aiding the escape of a slave, made a report of the circumstances connected with his arrest to a meeting of 1000 of his fellow townsmen on Saturday evening last. The story is said to be quite amusing.

A gentleman from the Upper Mississipi informs us, that a few days ago the Sheriff of Rock Island came to Nauvoo with a writ for one of the Reddings, charged to have been concerned in the murder of Col. Davenport. After Redding had been arrested and was about going on board a boat for Rock Island, a body of Mormons collected round the Sheriff for the purpose of rescuing the prisoner, and in the attempt Redding received a shot in the leg and the Sheriff a wound from a pistol shot. The prisoner escaped.

A fire broke out Friday morning at Rahway, N. J. which destroyed the large factory known as the Essex Print Works. Loss estimated at from $50,000 $60,000.

One lady, a Directress in the Society for the Relief of Respectable Aged Females, has, within a month or two, collected in donations for that interesting charity over $4,000, of which $3,000 were given by John Jacob Astor. The money has been already expended in the erection of a wing to the Asylum, which very much increases the accommodations of the old ladies, who before had to totter up stairs.

Rev. Dr. Judson, Missionary from Burmah, will be present—so says the Christian Reflector—at the special meeting of the Baptist Convention in this City the last of the present month. He is now on a visit to the Western part of this State. There are many here besides the Baptists who would be glad to take him by the hand.

The Norfolk New Era says that on Monday evening the steamer Osceola, brought down, and put on board the ship Roanoke, one hundred and forty-seven blacks, men, women and children, designed to be transported to Liberia, by the Colonization Society. These persons were liberated by will by two estates in Virginia, that of Beckus and Hooe. They were well provided with clothing and agricultural implements.

The Washington papers announce the decease, on the morning of the 1st, of the venerable Mr. Smith, in the 74th year of his age. Mr. Smith was the founder and during many years the sole editor of the National Intelligencer; an intimate and confidential friend of Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and their associates.

The first Monday in December will witness the assemblage in Washington of a new Congress, for a Session which will doubtless be a long one, and probably make its mark on our Country's annals.

The Cherokee Advocate of the 18th ult. states that between 3 000 and 4,000 Choctaws would remove from Mississipi to the West the last of October.

John Van Steenberg and Edward O'Conner, two of the young men present in disguise at Andes when Osman N. Steel was shot dead, now lie under sentence of death at Delhi for their participation in that tragedy. We believe that there is no pretence that either of them killed Steele, and no proof that they fired at him. But, admitting the distress to have been a legal process, they were engaged in criminal resistance to the officers of justice, which resulted in the death of a human being, and this by the laws of New York, is Murder. They must be executed unless Governor Wright shall be induced to grant them a commutation of sentence.

The beauty of the credit system in the publishing business, is strikingly exhibited in the case of the Democratic Review, which has now subscription dues to the amount of $40,000 outstanding!

American hemp is now exported to Scotland, where it is used instead of flax in the manufacture of certain kinds of goods, and where a new process has been discovered for softening the article prior to its being spun. Very fine and white goods are made of it, as well as bonnets and paper.

Dr. Chilton, the celebrated chemist, opposite the Park in Broadway, has a living Chameleon, just arrived from Borneo. It changes its color almost momentarily, at times. It has the appearance of a lizard, is about sixteen inches in length, and perhaps three or four in circumference. It feeds on flies and other insects, which it catches with its tongue, darting it out with the velocity of lightning, and with unerring accuracy, a distance of at least a foot.

Vermont is becoming very rich in minerals. An immense mass of solid iron has just been discovered along the base of the Green Mountains, between Monking and Bennington. Hitherto iron has been obtained there only in detached fragments; now it is blasted out in large quantities by the miners. It is found in regular solid beds interstratified with rock, and generally reposing on limestone rock, and inexhaustable. This is a valuble discovery; and in the hands of the enterprising and industrious Vermonters, will soon render Vermont a large iron manufacturing State.

We are informed, (says the Dahlonega Watchman of the 30th ult.) by Col. Samuel Jones, of Gilmer county, that on one day last week, a solid lump of pure virgin gold was found in the Ferrill mine in that county, weighing 322 qwts. and 12 grains, for which he himself had offered and was refused, the sum of $300.

The town of Collins, Erie Co. made 554,000 pounds of Cheese during the last year. The town of Fairfield, Herkimer Co. made 1,355,967 pounds during the same period. Herkimer Co. turns out annually 8,208,796 pounds of cheese. This at 8 cents per pound—the present price of the article—would give the dairy-men of old Herkimer $657,730 68.

There will shortly be a struggle to determine which State makes the most, as well as the best silk. The best silk in the country is from cocoons spun in Vermont. It is larger and stronger than silk raised in any of the Southern or Western States. The Vermont silk brings a higher price at Patterson, New Jersey, (say $5 25 per lb.) than silk from any other State.

One of the very last propositions in operative surgery, is to transplant the transparent conea from animals to the eyes of the blind men and women, who previously have their own clouded ones dissected out. It has actually been done, partially, by Dr. Plouveiz, of Lille. He took one from a young dog, for a girl who had lost her sight by smallpox; but she could not perceive light, and not objects. Proclamation.

BY SILAS WRIGHT, GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

A usage, which has the approbation of a quarter of a century, calls upon me, at this period of the year, to name a day to be observed by the people of this State, as a day of public Thanksgiving. The uniformity in the time heretofore designated, throughout the period referred to, induces me to name Thursday the fourth day of December next, as the Thanksgiving day for this State, for the present year.

Life and health are enduring causes for thankfulness to the Father of life and the Fountain of health, from all the living.

Free civil institutions, based upon the true principle of popular sovereignty, and extending to every individual equal personal liberty, and to all the largest measure of that liberty consistent with peace and order and personal security, present a cause for devout thankfulness to the Ruler of Nations, from every people who enjoy these blessings.

The plentiful fruits of the earth, which in our State and country furnish an abundance for the wants of all, call for daily thankfulness, and render it peculiarly appropriate that, annually, as these fruits are yielded, a christian people should unite in a tribute of thanksgiving to Him, who tempers the seasons, and blesses the earth and makes it fruitful.

In addition to these universal causes for thankfulness, if each individual will summon up the recollection of the almost innumerable personal and social blessings, which the year has brought with it, all the people of this State will be willing, with one heart, to set apart one day, for the united expression of their thanks for the many and signal blessings of this year, abundantly bestowed upon them and their country by the Great Author of every temporal and spiritual blessing.

I respectfully recommend the day I have named, to be thus set apart for this grateful service and duty, and that the people of the State suspend their business avocations, and assemble in their usual places of religious worship, that the Temples, which have resounded with supplications for the year, may echo back thanksgiving to Him who has so bountifully responded to our petitions, and so paternally provided for our necessities.

Exercises such as these, entered into in the spirit and with the feelings which these considerations should excite, cannot fail to turn the mind to the lively remembrance of the immeasurably greater blessings of the redemption through a Saviour, and the Revelation to fallen man of the way of salvation; blessings for which the human heart can never be sufficiently thankful.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto affixed the privy seal of the State. Witness my hand, at the city of (L. S.) Albany, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-five. SILAS WRIGHT.

HORACE MOODY, Private Secretary.

AUTUMN SONG.

BY MRS. V. G. RAMSEY.

"Sing mournfully—sing mournfully"—
The summer birds have flown!
No more amid the naked trees,
We hear their joyous tone—
No more they cheer the early dawn,
Nor wake the evening lay;
Sing mournfully—sing mournfully—
The birds have flown away.

Awake, my lyre, a mournful strain—
The summer flowers are dead!
From garden bowers and naked plain
Their fragrant breath has fled.
Alas! alas! No wreath remains,
For Autumn's naked brow!
Sing mournfully—sing mournfully,
The flowers are withered now.

And yet a graver, sadder lay,
My sickening heart would pour,
For faithful friends have past away
Who will return no more;
And hearts which once were glad and free
Have cold and careless grown:
And some have quite forgotten me,
Which erst were all my own.

But Spring will wake the blushing flowers
When Winter's reign is o'er:
And birds will seek the woodland bowers
Where they have sung before—
But who shall give me back the friends
For whom I vainly pine!
Sing mournfully—sing mournfully—
An aching heart is mine.

Buy some Matches?

"Will you buy some matches, sir?" said the voice of a boy, as we were seated in our sanctum, in a mood contemplative, about eight o'clock, a few nights ago.

"No!" we answered, in a tone that might not have been altogether courteous or good-natured, because the same question had been often asked us before twenty times a day.

This answer we gave without looking at the child, or giving a second thought to the matter.

"Please, sir, buy some matches," said the youth; "I'll give you five boxes for a bit."

"But we have no use for them, or we would purchase of you."

"Yet you will have use for them by-and-by, sir; and you don't know how much good even a picayune would do my poor mother and little sister at home, just now. Please sir, will you give me a dime for six boxes?"

The tones of the child's voice were so plaintive; his manner of speaking, and his pale, haggard countenance, bore such evident marks of truth and honesty, and his bearing was so manly, that we could not, if we had tried, do otherwise than listen to his tale.

"How many sisters have you?" we asked.

"Three, sir."

"Are they either of them able to assist your mother?"

"O, bless you, no sir! Mary is but seven years old, Pauline only four, and little Kate can barely toddle across the floor. Mary, though, takes care of Kate some of the time, and that saves poor mother some trouble.

"And what," we asked, "does your mother do for your support?"

"She binds shoes, sir. Ma sends me to the shop with them every morning, and the boss is cross sometimes, and says things that makes me mad. And then I go home and tell mother, and she says I should'nt get angry, for it is perhaps her fault that he is ill-tempered; but I don't think so, sir; do you? Poor mother! never in the world said or did any thing in the world that wasn't right and proper."

We bought of the boy matches enough to last us for a year, and stopped his voice of gratitude, by promising soon to call at the home of his mother, and see to the welfare of Mary, Pauline, and little Kate.

Poor match-boy! would that every heart was as pure as thine. The storm of adversity may rage around thee; its chilling breath may penetrate through the thin covering poverty has left thee, but it can never take from thee that invaluable honesty a good mother has instilled into thy youthful heart. Cheer up, then, boy! Be patient, be virtuous, frank, manly, and honest, as now, and a time will come, though it may be afar off, when you need not ask, "Buy some matches, sir?" [N. O. Tropic.

A LONG FAST.—The Censeur de Lyons gives the following remarkable fact in the physiology of animals. Recently a boy in the employ of the miller at the village of Tarcieux, lost one of the flock of turkeys under his charge, and it was not found till one month after, having remained the whole of the thirty days without food. The poor bird was discovered in a hole in the wall of part of the mill, into which it had got, and from which it could not afterwards emerge. It was lying with its head under its wing, in a sort of stupor. At the commencement of its fast, the turkey weighed between ten and twelve pounds, but when found it was reduced to little more than feathers, skin and bone, weighing not more than two pounds. It was not dead, and the miller, following the prescription of the Medicine malgre lui for mute girls and paroquets, administered to his bird small quantities of bread sopped in wine. After an hour, the attenuated animal opened its eyes, and assumed an energy of motion like one in a state of intoxication, but has since become gradually better, and there is every appearance that it will soon be restored to perfect health.

It is much better for a man to accomplish his purpose by persuasion than by force, and reason is much better than physical strength.

The Border War.

DOINGS AT MAYSVILLE, KY.

It is perhaps generally known that the Maysville station had some difficulty in settling the question of adherence south or north. In accordance with the Plan of Separation and the instructions of the Bishops, the members convened, by public notice, on the first of September—appointed a chairman and secretaries and proceeded regularly to take the vote. The result as officially certified was 109 South, 97 North. This was was regarded as setting the relation of that station with the South finally, and it was so regarded both by the Kentucky and Ohio Conferences, for though the minority applied to the latter Conference for a pastor, the request was refused because in violation of the Plan of Separation and instructions of the Bishops. The Kentucky Conference, however, appointed a minister to that station, who immediately went on to take charge of his work. In the mean time it appears, Mr. Armstrong—the leader of the minority—had engaged the services of Dr. Tomlinson as their pastor. Dr. T. had joined the Ohio Conference, which Conference had refused to send a minister to Maysville, and the Dr. could only take such an appointment in plain violation of the rules of the discipline—north and south.—When the regular pastor, Mr. Grubbs, came, an appointment to preach was announced for him in the papers of the city, and on the same day and hour an appointment was announced for Dr. Tomlinson in the same house. The minority took possession of the church—locked the doors and nailed down the windows against the regular pastor, but the trustees—four out of the five having adhered to the south—opened the house and went on with the regular services.

Mr. Armstrong, as a trustee, in behalf of the minority filed a bill in Chancery, praying an injunction restraining the majority from the use of the church, and asking the undisturbed control of and possession of it himself for the use of the minority. To this bill the defendants, (representatives of the majority) put in a most lucid and powerful answer. The Chancellor ordered that the parties respectively should occupy the house on alternate weeks until the final hearing of the cause in November.

Mr. Armstrong in his bill claims that the northern party constitute a majority of the whole church, on the ground that since the regular official action of the church, other names have been gotten privately sufficient to overbalance the official vote of the southern party, while the defendants in their answer state, that if the names taken in this way are to be reckoned, they have such a number as to give them still a clear majority of twenty-seven.

Address to Sunday School Children.

DUTY OF CHILDREN TO THEIR PARENTS.

"Children, obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right. Honor thy father and mother—which is the first commandment with promise—that it may be well with thee."—Ephesians vi. 1—3.

Is it necessary, children, to exhort you to love your father and mother? Who is there that does not most highly esteem them from whom they derive their life? You were very feeble and small at your birth, and would soon have died, if your father and mother had not compassioned you, and if your mother had not nourished and taken all care of you. How many cares they had on your account! How often did your pains and tears deprive them of sleep! How many times did they wait upon you in sickness, and have saved you from the stroke of death! Even now they give you food, clothing, a residence, and instruction, with every other comfort that is good. Is there any thing upon earth for which you should feel equal love, consideration, respect and gratitude as to your parents?

How unjust therefore is it to offend your kind parents by improper language, and by disobedience, or wilfully to disturb them by your rude behaviour. They deserve very different from you. If any person made you a present, however small, you would thank him for it; but how many presents do your parents give you every day. All your food and drink are a donation from them. What great acknowlegment and thankfulness you owe to them. Would you be pleased, if a poor child to whom you had shown every kindness you could, instead of being sensible of your benefits, should be ill-tempered, morose and proud towards you? Would you continue your kindness to a child of such a bad disposition? Therefore, take care that by such conduct you do not render yourselves unworthy of the benefits which your parents shall continue to grant you. An ungrateful person is the worst of all creatures. He is not deserving of the smallest kindness. On the contrary, fathers and mothers, and every body, without exception, will do good to a child who is obliging and dutiful. Good is hoped and sought for him. Friends love him. He is the joy of his parents. O, how delightful is it to a child to be the comfort of his parents, and to prove himself worthy of their smiles and tenderness!

Remember also, children, that God has promised very particularly to bless obedient children who fulfil there duty. Therefore, children who respect their father and mother, who love them, and who by their obedience and other good qualities, please their parents, certainly shall be blessed. God will not deceive you; for he has always fulfilled his promise towards wise and virtuous children. He has blessed them with temporal goodness, health, a good reputation, comfort, competence of riches, and a peaceful old age. What a delight it is thus to be able to look for the precious favors of God! What a consolation to hope for the blessing of our parents when they are called to leave the world. Therefore, children, obey your parents, which is right; and honor your father and mother, that it may be well with you; and that, like the "holy child Jesus," you may increase in wisdom, as you do in stature, "and in favor with God and man." The Lord grant you that mercy for Christ's sake! Amen.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

THANKSGIVING:

A FITTING TIME FOR THE OCCASION.

The piety of our forefathers has bequeathed to us this favorite festival of gratitude to God; and, as the past year has been signalized to us by the unexpected preservation of peace amidst many rumors and fears of war, we would invite the public attention to this fact as a special call for individual and national thanksgiving, and would suggest to Christian ministers of every name, the propriety of expediency of selecting the subject of PEACE, in one or another of its manifold aspects, for their theme of discourse on that occasion.

It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of this theme, or the urgency of its claims upon good men in an age like the present. Peace is obviously the great want of the world, as well as one of the chief glories of our religion and we can hardly suppose any argument necessary to enlist every true-hearted ambassador of the Prince of peace in the cordial, zealous advocacy of an object so strictly evangelical, and so vastly important to the temporal and the spiritual welfare of mankind.

We have no wish to dictate; but, accustomed to solicit from preachers of the gospel an annual plea for this cause, relying mainly on them as its heaven-selected advocates, and believing that the good providence which has thus far averted the horrors of threatened war, calls for our warmest gratitude, and demands very special notice from the pulpit at the approaching anniversary of public thanksgiving to the God of all our mercies, we earnestly hope, that his ministers throughout the country will seize upon the occasion to urge the claims of peace with zeal and power. We ask them to ponder the prophecies of peace recorded in the Bible; to examine the principles of peace taught in the gospel; to dwell on the countless, unutterable evils of war; to consider how many blessings to our land, to christendom and the world, are included in a single year of general peace, and how essential its continuance is to our temporal and spiritual prosperity, to commerce and every secular pursuit, to the revival of pure religion, and the success of every enterprise now in progress for the spread of Christianity, and the ultimate recovery of our world from sin and its woes.

God grant that his ministers may soon learn more fully their duty, privilege and power on this subject! Let the twenty-five or thirty thousand in our own country unite with the still larger number in the land of our fathers and brethren, to enforce aright the pacific principles of the gospel in their application to nations as well as to individuals; and how easy for them under God to insure the perpetual peace of these two countries, and eventually of christendom and the world.

In behalf of the American Peace Society,

GEO. C. BECKWITH, Cor. Sec.

Boston, 60 1-2 Cornhill, Oct. 24, 1845.

P. S.—If ministers or others wish for helps in the examination of this subject, we shall be happy to furnish them at very small expense, and if they will take up a collection after preaching, we will gladly send their people in return our tracts or periodicals for general circulation.

CHAIN BRIDGES.

The Liverpool Albion reports as follows, of a scheme so gigantic, that it needs all our modern faith in miracles of science to believe in its success:

We have heard that the practicability of connecting the opposite shores of the Mersey by a stupendous chain bridge, is under consideration. It is said that by the formation of a viaduct, on the principle of an inclined plane, or arches, commencing at the top of James-street, to the margin of the river, a sufficient elevation may be obtained. A similar erection on the Woodside bank of the river would of course be requisite. Our active and enterprising Cheshire neighbors would no doubt readily assist in promoting a project so magnificent. Such a work would throw all other suspension bridges into the shade and be a 'world's wonder.' To this notice, we may add, that an iron bridge is about to be thrown over the Neva at St. Petersburgh, to replace the bridge of boats, the Isaac's bridge—the iron work for which has been contracted for by a Liverpool house, and the piles to be of the granite of Finland. The Bridge will be 2078 feet in length, and will have seven arches, the centre of 156 English feet, and the other on each side respectively 143, 125, and 107 feet. This great work will supply the means of communication, in the very centre of the Russian capital, which the tides from the gulf, with a west wind, and the ice from up the river, have long been supposed to render impossible. The modern application of iron to bridges has lessened the difficulty; and the Emperor, with his characteristic impetuosity, has ordered that the bridge shall be completed within a time impossible any where but in St. Petersburgh, and greatly in favor of the future operations of the gulf-tide and the floating ice.

NEW MOWING MACHINE.—Captain Wilson, of Buffalo, has just been engaged in bringing to perfection an article of this kind, which deserves the attention of all who are in any way interested in agricultural pursuits. The Buffalo Advertiser thus describes Captain Wilson's invention:

"The machine consists of a carriage on four wheels drawn by one or two horses, oxen, or other beasts of burden, in like manner as a common wagon. In the centre, at the bottom, is a horizontal wheel upon an upright shaft, which shaft and shaft wheel receive a rotary motion, communicated by gear from the main axle, which revolves with its wheels, as the machine goes forward. The diameter of this horizontal wheel, with the addition of the knives projecting from its edge, measures the width of the swarth, which is cut with the knives as the wheel goes forward, revolving rapidly and lying as close to the ground as the nature of the case may require. The apparatus which sustains the cutting wheel is so constructed as to accommodate its height to any inequalities in the ground, and to give it any inclination required. The knives are sharpened by their own operation, without stopping the machine. There is also attached to the cutting wheel or tub, wings, which gather the grass as it is cut, and lay it in a swath regularly and in a most perfect manner for curing—it is most simple in its construction, and by no means li. ble to be put out of order."

The Lowell Journal says that Mr. J. G. Locke, of Lowell, has raised this year a Passe Colmar pear, which measures twelve inches one way and ten inches and a half the other.

THE BLIND BOY.

The day was bright and beautiful—
The boys to play had gone,
Save one who sat beside the door,
Dejected and alone;
And as the tones of merry sport
Came faintly to his ear,
He sighed, and from his swelling lids
He brushed the falling tear.

His little heart was rent with pain—
He could not join the play;
He could not run about the fields,
Nor by the brook-side stay;
The rolling hoop, the bounding ball,
The kite borne by the wind—
The acorn hunt was nought to him,
For he, alas! was blind.

He could not see the setting sun,
And watch the glowing skies—
The beauty of the moon and stars
Fell not upon his eyes—
The rainbow, when it spanned the clouds,
Was lost unto his sight—
And waving woods, and sparkling streams—
For ALL to him was NIGHT!

These truths came fresh into his mind,
While sitting thus apart—
No wonder that the tear-drops fell,
And heavy was his heart.
Ah! little did the youthful throng,
Whose hearts were full of joy,
Reflect upon the lonely state
Of that poor sightless boy!

DANGERS OF INDULGING A FONDNESS FOR DRESS.

"Almira, bring down your muslin frock. The weather is getting warm, and it is time to have a thin dress fitted up for the season."

"Fitted up, mother! You are not going to make me wear that old dress this summer, I hope. I thought I was to have a new frock, and a splendid one too, like Ann Maria's."

"I am more anxious that you should have a splendid mind than a splendid dress, my daughter. Let your outward adorning be neat and simple, and you have no farther occasion for any anxiety for it. A fondness for dress has to many been the cause of great temptation, and finally has resulted in the loss of character, of health and life. I could mention many who have brought ruin upon themselves in this way. One, in particular, I now have in my mind. When quite young, like many other foolish girls, she was very fond of dress, and became acquainted with a wicked man who flattered her, gave her a great deal of money, brought her into Boston, supported her very genteelly, gave her a carriage to ride in, and money enough to dress as extravagantly and as elegantly as she pleased. This man was a member of Congress, and when he went to Washington he took this girl with him, indulged her in all the extravagancies of that metropolis, had her attend the balls and levees, and, at one time, she said she had a dress that cost one hundred and fifty dollars."

"Did he do all that for her, mother? O how happy she must have been."

"Happy, away from all her friends, indulging in vain amusements, extravagance and idleness, destroying her health, her mind and her morals! Suppose she had died then, what would have become of her?"

"I should not want to die in the midst of so much pleasure. I should hope to live a great while."

"But you know, full well, that many are cut off in the midst of their days. This girl, however, lived a number of years, but found, in the end, that the way of transgressors was a hard way. The man who thus indulged her, had a wife, and was a very wicked man. By and by he got tired of this girl and left her. Next, she was supported by another man. But ere long he died, and then the poor girl was left pennyless, homeless, and friendless, a worthless outcast. Probably her friends knew not where she was. She was ashamed to return to them. She despised herself, and every one that knew her despised her too. Destitute of the comforts of life, she went from one degree of vice to another, until she was found among the vilest of the vile."

"Why did not somebody try to reform her?"

"Very few are willing to go into those dens of infamy where such miserable beings congregate. However, this girl was found, and some good ladies gave her employment and good instruction, and for a time she did well. When they spoke to her about her mother, she would weep bitterly."

"I hope she went to see her mother."

"No, she never met her again in this world. For a short time, however, she did pretty well, but she had become so in love with vice, that satan, a wicked world, and her own wicked heart, soon drew her again into the vortex of ruin. In her bad conduct she was taken up, carried to the House of Correction, there died suddenly, and went to render up her final account. Now, only think how much is lost in consequence of the love of dress. She lost her character, the enjoyment of her friends, her health, the life of the body, and, as we have reason to believe, the life of the soul."

"Well, mother, I am sure I will be satisfied with my old frock, for if the love of dress causes so much suffering and loss, I am sure I will not indulge in it."

"That is right, my daughter. Only think what you ought to do; yield your heart to the Saviour, seek to please him, and you need fear no evil."

THE GASP OF DEATH.

"Stolen waters are sweet, but he knoweth not that the dead are there."

"Blessed are the pure in heart."

Do the public know, generally, that a few modest, virtuous and devotedly pious females, in New York and other cities, were struggling for life, snatching fire-brands from the bursing flame?* There is a fountain whose streams are death. This fountain, to speak without a figure, is LICENTIOUSNESS.

There may be those, so extremely sensitive as to turn aside with disgust at the term, "adultery, or fornication." Very well, modest reader, lay aside the Golden Rule, close your eyes and your ears; but know thou, assuredly, that even your ears may yet be made to tingle! Are you a parent, having an only daughter, dearly beloved, the pride of her sex, whom you have reared with the tenderest solicitude? Is she seduced by some vile monster in human shape? ruined—her character and her virtue lost! Will you then hold your peace? Are you a brother? and have you a sister kind, affectionate, whom you love as your own soul? Is she betrayed by the satanic influence of a libertine infidel? Will not your indignation then rise? And can you not feel for others' woe? Have you no benevolence, no spirit of the golden rule? Were our daughters polished, trained for God; disciplined, guided in life's golden path, seldom if ever would our ears be pained with the heart-rending recitlas of fallen virtue. Destruction's path, the broad way to the chambers of death, would cease to be thronged. But it is, as it is; and we must stretch forth the hand, in consideration of things as they exist.

Shall we be silent? Are we not silent, as editors, as ministers, as a people? How seldom is it, that ministers speak out, portray in vivid colors the heinousness, the damnable guilt and awful consequences of illicit intercourse, as the violation of the seventh commandment! Why is it so? Has God, any where, made a distinction? On the flaming mount the voice was uttered, written indelibly, "Thou shalt not commit Adultery."

How does the Son of God elucidate this holy precept? "Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." Glorious and fearful exposition. Is the Bible any where silent on this delicate subject? Is not every page marked? Has not God placed his finger on the very spot of the leprosy?

Editors, ministers of light, permit your humble servant to say, Take heed, lest ye be weighed in the balance and found wanting? We have pledged ourselves, and dare we recede?

"Modesty of deportment, purity of thought and action," are among the prominent items on our list. Shall we slumber! cease to raise our voice against this crying polluting, damnable sin? God forbid. If report speaks truth, we have licentiousness in our very midst; and such licentiousness as is not so much as named among the gentiles. "Be sure your sin will find you out."—Golden Rule—Covington, Ky.

* We allude especially to the conductors of the "Friend of Virtue," and the "Advocate of Moral Reform." We see nothing in the manner, style, or spirit of these periodicals calculated to offend the most fastidious ear. If the opposers will devise a more speedy and judicious way of exterminating this evil, and of restoring purity and virtue, most gladly, we doubt not, our beloved sisters in the Lord will yield implicitly. Till then, opposer, if you refuse to aid, cease to raise the opposing arm.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
IRA SAYLES, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics
GURDON EVANS, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. HARTSHORN, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. STILLMAN, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. MAXSON, Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

JEALOUSY FOR THE LORD OF HOSTS.

Extracts from a Sermon by John Sutcliff.

The author of this sermon was a very eminent Baptist minister, but on account of a dislocation of his shoulder at an early period of life, he was disabled for much writing. Hence, although he bore a large part in the organization of the Baptist Missions, the world has heard but little of him in comparison with his compeers in that work. He had a largeness of heart that led him to expect much from the promises of God to the church in the latter days. It was on his motion, that the Northamptonshire Baptist Association, while in session at Nothingham, in the spring of 1784, agreed to set apart an hour on the evening of the first Monday in every month, for social prayer for the success of the gospel, and to invite Christians of other denominations to unite with them in it.

The sermon from which the following extracts are taken, was one of two preached before the Ministerial Conference at Clipstone, Northamptonshire, April, 1791. The other was by Andrew Fuller, on the danger of delay in matters of religion. Dr. Carey, then pastor of the Church at Leicester, perceiving that the two sermons had made a powerful impression, entreated that something might be resolved on before they parted. Nothing more was then done, however, than to advise the printing of the sermons, and Mr. Carey's "Enquiry into the obligations of Christians to use means for the conversion of the heathen." In the fall of 1792, the Baptist Missionary Society was formed.

I believe there has never been a reprint of Mr. Sutcliff's sermon. Whether there is another copy on this side of the Atlantic, I know not. Besides the interest imparted by circumstances, it has intrinsic merits sufficient to make it worthy of a republication; as the following extracts will show.

— S. D.

"I have been very jealous for the Lord of Hosts."
1 Kings 9: 10.

Having explained what we understand by jealousy for God, we add a few general observations on the subject.

Jealousy for God will be regulated by an implicit regard to the word of God. The inspired volume is the divine directory, the infallible guide, to which you do well to take heed, as to a light that shineth in a dark place. This is the code of royal laws, the book of unalterable statutes in the kingdom of Christ. Influenced by jealousy for God, you will consider Jesus as a teacher sent from above, you will sit at his feet, and receive the law from his mouth. The Bible you will consider as the word of Christ, attachment to him, as the prophet, the great prophet of your profession, the founder and lawgiver of your holy religion, will engage you to hear him in all things. To the Bible you will adhere, as the sacred chest, containing the oracles of God, attending to which you may separate truth from error, and so receive the former, as the most salutary food, but reject the latter, as the most deadly poison; as the measuring-reed, by which every thing in the house and worship of God is to be exactly adjusted, that so Zion's fair building may rise, according to the pattern seen in the mount, while all the goings out, and comings in of her highly favored inhabitants are divinely approved; as the test by which every part of your experience is to be examined, that so the pure gold, and the worthless dross, may be distinguished; and as the unerring rule, by which your conduct, as it respects God, your neighbor, and yourselves, in things civil or sacred, may be regulated, that so a conscience void of offence towards God and man, may be in some happy degree enjoyed.

This divine directory, this infallible guide, is complete; it stands in no need of any addition. To introduce articles of faith, or modes of worship, unauthorized by the sacred word, is one character of the son of perdition, and one branch of the mystery of iniquity. Human innovations in matters of religion have kindled the fire of divine jealousy, the flames of which have burst forth, and consumed the ringleaders of such impious deeds. Witness the awful case of Nadab and Abihu. This event was designed to inculcate upon the minds of spectators, and of succeeding generations to the close of time, an implicit attention, in all matters of religion, to God's revealed will.

As this divine rule has no defect, so it contains nothing superfluous or improper. Undoubtedly some things here enjoined, comparatively viewed, are of greater importance than others; yet nothing that bears the stamp of royal authority; no edict that is issued out under the broad seal of Jehovah, should ever be considered as a trifling article, or represented as a matter of indifference. While the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith, are regarded according to their native importance, even paying tithe of mint, anise and cummin, so long as God enjoined them, must not be omitted. If, when some articles of faith, some modes of worship, are represented as indifferent, no more is intended, than that comparatively viewed, they are not of equal importance with some others, in certain cases, the fact will be allowed. But if this phrase means that such doctrines or parts of worship are of no importance; that the former may be believed, or disbelieved; the latter practiced or neglected, without any offence in the sight of God,—this is denied. Neutrality in religion, is by Christ himself eternally excluded. He that is not with me, is against me; and he that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad.

This holy jealousy is accompanied with a spirit of universal benevolence. Here love to God, is always attended with the same towards our neighbor. Descending angels celebrated with rapturous songs, the good-will of heaven towards men. Saints feel a similar temper; and so far as this divine principle prevails, they exemplify it in all their actions. He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit with him. Inspired, brethren, with this benevolent disposition, you will readily deny yourselves for a neighbor's good, and so copy his example who pleased not himself; but, although he was rich, became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. You will tenderly sympathize with the afflicted, and according to your ability, as occasion may require, manifest the compassionate heart, employ the consoling tongue, and stretch out the relieving hand. Cordially you will rejoice in the prosperity of a friend, nor envy his lot, though more favored than your own. Earnestly will you pray for the welfare of an enemy, nor meanly exult, though he may fall. In a word, cheerfully you will assist in promoting where you can the temporal, but especially the eternal interests of those around you. And as the temporal concerns of men, contrasted with those that are eternal, are infinitely lighter than a feather weighed in one scale, against the ponderous globe we inhabit, in the other, so your attention will be principally engaged by what relates to their immortal felicity. This will exercise your warmest feelings, and alternately excite your most painful fears, or most pleasing hopes.

Nor will this benevolent temper merely regard such as are of your own society, or those enclosed in the small circle of your personal acquaintance. The heart of a true Christian exhibits a commentary on the second table of the moral law. The question was once asked, Who is my neighbor? By your neighbor, brethren, you do not simply mean the man who lives at the next door; you mean a fellow creature, a member of ths human race, let him be found wherever he may. Let him be an ignorant negro, dwelling in the unexplored regions of Africa; or an untutored savage, wandering in the inhospitable forests of America; he is your fellow creature; he is your neighbor; he is your brother. He has a soul—a soul that will exist forever—a soul that has interests equally important with those of your own. And though the ability of your hands may be very limited; not so, that of your heart. This possesses a power that approaches to a kind of infinity. Who can fix the bounds of those benevolent wishes, that such a heart can breathe? It is enlarged, it expands, it heaves, it swells, it grows warmer and warmer. It can embrace a globe. It can stretch its arms like seas and grasp in all the habitable shores. And what is its language? What are the sentiments it utters? Listen, listen to the enchanting sound; "Let the earth be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." . . . . .

It includes in it a reigning, a superlative regard to the interest of Christ. He has a kingdom in this world. True believers are members of it; subjects of Jesus as king of Zion. These are loyal subjects. They have the interest of their prince, and the prosperity of his kingdom at heart. Like the Psalmist, they will be ready to say, If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning; if I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I prefer not Jerusalem to my chief joy. . . . . .

Now while this temper is evidently essential to the Christian character, it is equally so to a holy jealousy for God's honor. Those who are jealous for the Lord of hosts will feel a tender concern for his interest, and watch with keen attention every effort to injure his cause. Devoted to the service of the Redeemer, they will habitually study how they may promote the prosperity of his kingdom.

This leads us to point out some of the methods in which this temper will discover itself.

It will be seen in a serious attention to the interests of personal Christianity. Jealousy for God will be attended with jealousy over yourselves. You will seriously endeavor to prove all things, that you may hold fast that, and only that which is good. You will examine the reality of your religion. You will be ready to ask yourselves, "While I have a name to live, am I not dead? Am I a possessor of a new heart? Am I born again? Am I translated from under the power of darkness, into the kingdom of God's dear Son? Do I positively bear those good fruits without which, like an unprofitable tree, I must be hewn down, and cast into the fire? Are my evidences of personal Christianity carefully collected from, and compared with the Scriptures? Have I the authority of God to rank myself among the number of his children?"

Farther, you will examine the purity of your religion; 'tis an unhappiness, when wood, hay and stubble, are mingled with gold, silver and precious stones. Convinced of this, you will look to the purity of your faith. Viewing the pernicious effects of error, you will inquire, "Are my ideas of truth conformable to those exhibited in the Sacred Volume? Do I in no instance receive for doctrines the commandments of men? Did I take up my religious creed as I received a name from my ancestors; or did I search the Scriptures, determined to buy the truth, whatever it cost me, and never to sell it, whatever price any might offer for it? Have I adopted no mistakes which ought to be renounced? Are there no farther views than what I have already attained, which ought to be embraced? Let me search the Scriptures, knowing they are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and instruction in righteousness, in order that, like the man of God, I way be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work." . . . .

You will look into the purity of your worship. With profound reverence you will regard the divine precept, What thing soever I command you, observe to do it; thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it. With sacred awe you will consider how God has manifested on various occasions, his most tremendous jealousy over positive institutions, and punished in the most alarming manner, deviations from his revealed will; deviations which in themselves appeared very small, but which acquired a magnitude beyond all conception, because they were departures from the express injunctions of the Most High. Affectionately desirous of approving yourselves as obedient children, whose fear towards God is not taught by the precepts of men, you will ask your consciences, "What authority have I for the manner in which I worship God, and observe his ordinances? Do I copy the example of the adorable Jesus, or have I in any instance departed from that blessed pattern? Have I studied with impartiality the instructions he has given me in his divine word, or am I governed by the opinion and practice of those around me?" You should remember, brethren, that every thing in religion is personal; that your conscience is accountable to no master but Christ; that nothing can be performed in faith, but what he has enjoined; and that nothing will be accepted by him, but what he has commanded.

THE METHODIST PREACHER.

The following sketch is worth reading. It is exceedingly natural and graphic. It teaches poor ministers to trust in the Lord, and affluent brethren to act as the Lord's stewards.

LOOKING TO MY NEW APPOINTMENT.

Up to the close of Conference, I have kept faithfully the forty dollars reserved for the purpose of a horse as soon as I should reach my new circuit. But over and above that, I have not five dollars, and my wife and children all want new shoes, and my boots have given way at the side. They have been twice half-soled, and the uppers won't stand it any longer. My only coat is all thread-bare, and white at the seams. That, however is no matter, it will look well enough back in the woods, although it has rather a shabby appearance here among so many shining new black coats. But, besides the absolute want of shoes and boots, it will cost us all of thirty dollars to get to our new home. Where then is the horse to come from? Be still, disponding heart! The Lord will provide. You go forth in his cause, and he will take care to supply his armor, if you will always keep it bright and whole! Yes, yes—weak, timid, trembling soldier of the cross! The Captain of your salvation will go before you, and lead you on to certain victory. Only be faithful; look not back for a moment; but press forward.

I have just had a talk with brother T——. He called in very kindly to give me all the advice, encouragement and instruction he could, in regard to my new appointment; and also to furnish me with a list of names of some of the prominent brethren. There is no parsonage provided for the preacher's family. Nor do the people pay the rent for one. But a log cottage, he says, with a little patch of ground for a garden and pasturage, can be had for about twenty dollars a year. A cow will cost as much more. But where is the money to buy her to come from? Ah, me! if I had just about as much as it costs three or four sisters here for ribbons and laces, how rich I should be! The elegant dinner-set, upon which our food is served here every day, the good sister told my wife, cost eighty dollars. There was a plainer set for sixty; but the first set had a gold band, and she liked it best, and so gave twenty dollars more, for the sake of the gold band. Now, just the price of that gold band on the dinner-set would buy me a cow. Ah me! These thoughts trouble me. But hush! hush! poor, doubting, murmuring heart! Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbor's. If the good Master has prospered our brother and sister in their basket and store, I ought to be thankful to him on their account, that he has given them the good things of life with a liberal hand.

I met old father P—— this morning, with his cowhide shoes and leather strings, wool hat, coarse coat, and shirt collar unbound with a neck-cloth. It is two years since I last saw him. We talked for half an hour about matters and things. [We will omit the remainder of this paragraph, as it is not important, for the sake of brevity.]

I had written thus far in my journal, when wife came in, and holding a stout bundle in her hand, said, with a pleasant, cheerful smile—

'What do you think this contains, dear?'

'I don't know, I'm sure,' I said. 'What does it contain?'

'You shall see,' was her reply, as she unrolled it. There were three pairs of shoes apiece for the children, and three pairs for wife, enough to last them all the next year. Then there were four new frocks apiece for the little ones, and four new gowns for wife, besides various other matters, such as muslin for underclothes, and nice warm Canton flannel, and stockings!

'Not all for us?' I exclaimed, in astonishment, as Mary displayed all these before my eyes.

'Yes, all for us. May the Lord reward sister A—— for her goodness, we cannot.' Tears of thankfulness were in her eyes.

'Amen!' I responded fervently. In the next moment my heart smote me for what I had thought and written about the gold bands on the dinner-set. Several times since I have turned to the page of my journal where it lies recorded, and taken up my pen to erase it. But I have as often determined to let it remain. It presents a true history of my feelings, and I cannot blot it out.

After supper that evening,—the last we were to spend in the kind family of brother and sister A——, brother A—— began to ask about my new circuit, and how I expected to get along on it. I felt a little delicacy about replying to his questions,—for I could not speak very encouragingly, and I never like to make a poor mouth. But he was in earnest, and cornered me so closely that I had to tell the truth about the means the circuit afforded, and my poor condition.

'And so you still have your "horse money" safe?' said he, smiling, after he had got all out of me.

'Yes, that still remains untouched. But a part will have to go for stage hire. That can't be helped. Though I doubt not something will turn up, and that I shall get a horse after I get there easily enough. Horses don't cost much in that section of the country, and then add to what is left after paying our fare, I hope to receive about ten dollars for the sale of some things at the old place, left in the care of a good brother. It will all come right, I know, brother A——. It always has come right.'

'No doubt,' he said. 'The Lord will provide.'

Brother A—— seemed thoughtful after he had said this. After sitting for a while, he said, rising,

'Come, brother B.'

I followed him up stairs into his chamber. He closed the door, and then opened a large mahogany wardroab, well stocked with clothes.

'You and I are near about the same size,' he said, taking down a black frock coat, that was very little worn. 'Try on this and see how near it will come to fitting you. I have not worn it for some months, and it is a pity to let the moths get into it. There!' he continued, as I drew on the coat, 'it fits you just as well as if it had been made for you, and scarcely shows the wear it has had.' 'Let me see,' he added, turning again to the wardrobe, 'what else we have here. Ah! this is just the thing for you,' bringing out an overcoat made of stout beaver cloth. 'You will want just such a thing as this next winter. It will keep you as warm as toast while riding among them snowy hills. I found it most too heavy for me last winter. But to ride in, it will be the dandy.'

He did not stop here. Two good pairs of pantaloons, as many vests, and a pair of excellent boots were added to these. I tried to thank him, but my voice was so husky that I could not articulate distinctly. The remembrance, too, of what I had thought and written down about the gold bands on the dinner-set, with other reflections not clothed in words, choked me. He did not stop here. Next morning as I shook hands with him, and bade him farewell, he left two pieces of coin in my hands saying as he did so, with a smile:

Excellent man! May the Lord reward him! As for me, I felt humbled before my Master, for my want of faith. So many—many times has he brought me safely out of the wilderness into a clear place, and yet I am unwilling to trust him.

THE SUM OF RELIGION.

He that fears the Lord of heaven and earth, walks humbly before him, thankfully lays hold of the message of redemption by Jesus Christ, and strives to express his thankfulness by the sincerity of his obedience. He is sorry with all his soul, when he comes short of his duty. He walks watchfully, in the denial of himself, and holds no confederacy with any lust, or known sin; if he falls in the least measure, he is restless till he has made his peace by true repentance. He is true to his promises, just in his dealings, charitable to the poor, sincere in his devotion. He will not deliberately dishonor God, although secure of impunity. He has his hopes and his conversation in heaven, and dares not do any thing unjustly, be it ever so much to his advantage; and all this, because he fears him that is invisible, and fears him because he loves him, fears him as well for his goodness as his greatness; such a man, whether he be an Episcopalian or a Presbyterian, an Independent or an Anabaptist—whether he wears a surplice or wears none; whether he hears organs or hears none; whether he kneels at the communion or for conscience's sake stands or sits, he hath the life of religion in him; and that life acts in him, and will conform his soul to the image of his Saviour, and go along with him to eternity, notwithstanding his practice, or non-practice, of things indifferent. On the other side, if a man fears not the eternal God, he can commit sin with presumption; drink excessively, swear vainly, or commit adultery, lie, cozen, cheat, break his promise, live loosely, though at the same time he may be studious to practice every ceremony, even to a scrupulous exactness, or may perhaps as stubbornly oppose them. Though such an one should cry down bishops or presbyters; though he should be rebaptized every day, or declaim against it as heresy; and though he fast all the lent, or feast, out of pretence of avoiding superstition, yet, notwithstanding these, and a thousand external conformities, or zealous oppositions of them, he wants the life of religion. [Sir Matthew Hale.

"KILLING THE OLD MAN!"

The Rev. Dr. D'Aubigne, in an address in England, describing the state of religion in France, where, though popery is making alarming progress, the efforts of humble colporteurs and evangelical preachers are greatly blessed, related the following anecdote:

"One of the evangelists entered a Roman Catholic community and began to preach the Gospel. He opened a house for prayer, and many people came to hear him, because the word of God had been taken there before by colporteurs. There was living in that village an old couple. The woman said to the husband, 'I have heard many persons speak about that man—I will go and hear him.' She went to the meeting—heard the sermon, and became very much troubled. On her return, her husband asked what she had heard. She answered, 'Horrible! I may not tell you what that man has said.' 'What has he told you?' 'He has told me that I must kill the old man!' 'Not possible!' 'Yes—yes.' 'Not possible! we will go together and see what is the matter.' They went together, heard the minister, and then went and spoke to him. He explained to them what he called 'the old man,' and, by the grace of God, they have killed the old man, and they are both now members of that congregation. Such is the work which is going on in France and on the Continent."

COUNSELS FOR THE YOUNG.

Never be cast down by trifles. If a spider breaks his thread twenty times, twenty times will he mend it again. Make up your minds to do a thing, and you will do it. Fear not, if a trouble comes upon you; keep up your spirits, though the day be a dark one.

"Troubles never stop forever,
The darkest day will pass away!"

If the sun is going down, look up to the stars; if the earth is dark, keep your eyes on heaven! With God's presence and God's promises, a man or a child may be cheerful.

"Never despair when fog's in the air,
A sunshiny morning will come without warning."

Mind what you run after! Never be content with a bubble that will burst, or a fire-work that will end in smoke and darkness. Get that which you can keep, and which is worth keeping.

"Something sterling that will stay
When gold and silver fly away."

Fight hard against a hasty temper. Anger will come, but resist it strongly. A spark may set a house on fire. A fit of passion may give you cause to mourn all the days of your life. Never revenge an injury.

"He that revenges knows no rest;
The meek posses a peaceful breast."

If you have an enemy, act kindly to him and make him your friend. You may not win him over at once, but try again. Let one kindness be followed by another, till you have compassed your end. By little and little, great things are completed.

"Water falling day by day,
Wears the hardest rock away."

And so repeated kindness will soften a heart of stone.

Whatever you do, do it willingly. A boy that is whipped to school, never learns his lesson well. A man that is compelled to work, cares not how badly it is performed. The man that pulls off his coat cheerfully, strips up his sleeves in earnest, and sings while he works, is the man for me.

"A cheerful spirit gets on quick;
A grumbler in the mud will stick."

Evil thoughts are worse enemies than lions and tigers, for we can keep out of the way of wild beasts, but bad thoughts win their way every where. The cup that is full will hold no more; keep your heads and your hearts full of good thoughts, that bad thoughts may find no room to enter.

"Be on your guard, and strive, and pray,
To drive all evil thoughts away."

TRACT DISTRIBUTION.

About nine months ago, a Tract visitor, who had been a seaman, was in a store, when two of his former messmates came in, and the following conversation ensued:—

"Well, Jim," said one of them, "I am going away."

"Where, Jack?"

"Up the Straits, to Genoa."

"Well, I've a bundle of tracts here, that I've just got from the Tract missionary; you'll take a few, won't you?"

"No, that I shan't; I don't want them."

"Why, they'll do no harm, any way."

"I don't care; I don't want them, I tell you."

"Well, Jim," said the other sailor, "if he won't take them, give them to me;" and to him they were accordingly given.

Wednesday, July 2d, as the visitor was in the street, he was hailed by the former of these two men, who, when they stopped to converse, thus addressed him:—

"I'm just going away again, Jim, I haven't seen you before, since I came to New York. I wish you would give me some religious tracts and books. Perhaps you forgot how roughly I refused, when you offered me some before I went up the Straits. But though I refused the tracts then, I read them when I got out to sea, and I trust I read them to profit. At first they made me very unhappy, but after a time I found the Saviour very precious to my soul, and my only hope. I trust I have found forgiveness through his blood, and now I am an unworthy member of a church. Jim, the tracts proved a blessing to my poor soul. God bless you, Jim! Give tracts to every sailor. I want to have some to give away myself. Yes, Jim, give 'em tracts; and be sure and pray for me, and for all poor sailors." [Christian Int.

THINK ON ETERNITY!—I have frequently, after going from house to house where spiritual deadness seemed to reign, been cheered and exhilarated by a poor negro on the way-side. "Think on eternity!" said I to a poor black woman the other day, just after I had visited the families in C. and was almost prostrated in body and mind. I could only say as I passed in sorrow, "Think on eternity!" She looked up; a gleam of intelligence and a smile of spiritnal beauty illumined her dark features, as the poor African exclaimed, "Yes, master, bless God I do." I caught the inspiration and went on comforted and strengthened. [I. H. Bate.

MRS. ELIZABETH FRY.—The death of this eminent philanthropist is announced in the London papers. For many years she was in the habit of visiting weekly the Newgate prison, reading the Scriptures to the numerous convicts, and addressing them in such a manner as to gain their confidence, love and admiration, and lead many of them, it is believed, to genuine repentance. In these visits of philanthropy she was sometimes accompanied by personages, (on one occasion the King of Prussia,) desirous of witnessing the result of her unaffected eloquence. Our own countryman, John Randolph, when asked whether he was present at a pageant of the royal family, replied, No, but he had witnessed a much sublimer spectacle—Mrs. Fry at Newgate Prison.

LAW AND GOSPEL.

NUMBER TWO.

According to the distinction we have drawn, just so much of scripture, as is occupied with the publication of the good news of pardon for sinners, is gospel; and just so much as is taken up with rules of duty, is law. The gospel, therefore, is not limited to the New Testament, nor the law to the Old; but both are intermingled throughout each division of the Sacred Volume. Indeed we find an intermingling of both in the same chapter. Some persons call the Old Testament the Book of the Law, and the New Testament the Book of the Gospel. But if they speak understandingly, they call the former the Book of the Law—not because it consists entirely of law, but—because law is the predominant part of it; and the latter, the Book of the Gospel—not because it consists of nothing else than gospel, but—because gospel is its prominent feature. For certainly the Old Testament contains a vast number of predictions concerning a Messiah to come, and the glories of his kingdom; all of which were good news—gospel—to the ancients. While the New Testament, besides the abundance of its good news, contains many injunctions, which are binding upon the people of God as so much law.

But although in a strict sense the gospel does not consist of injunctions, yet injunctions are founded upon it. The good news and the injunctions together, may be taken collectively as one entire system, to which the term gospel is applied. The word is often used in this sense. This is manifestly its use in all those passages, which speak of obedience to the gospel. (See 2 Thess. 1: 8. Acts 6: 7. Rom. 10: 16. 2 Cor. 10: 5.) But this is an extended application of the term, and not its original import.

There is a similar departure from rigidness in the use of the word law. It is often used in reference to the typical ceremonies of the former ministration. (See Heb. 9: 22, 7: 19, 10: 8. Gal. 3: 24.) Yet certain it is, that these typical ceremonies imported wondrous things to those whose eyes were open, (Ps. 119: 18,) even the redemption of the soul by Jesus Christ. Emblematical of the great atonement, they preached the gospel to the ancients, and in strictness of language can hardly be denominated law. Nevertheless, as the observance of them was enforced by the civil law of the Hebrew commonwealth—the Jews being organized into a nation for this purpose—and the neglect of them punished by the civil magistrate, this term is applied to them. When we remember that there was a strict union of church and state, all the ceremonial service being performed under the immediate sanction of the civil law, and that the gospel import of this service was in a measure veiled by that circumstance, we are furnished with a reason why the term law is extended in its application to that which really preached the glad tidings. Had there been no such union, some other term would doubtless have been found to designate this figurative presentation of gospel grace. We have another varied use of the word in John 12: 34, (see also ch. 10: 34, and 15: 25,) where it is extended from its original meaning, to denote the entire system of religion, which God gave to his people. In other words, the law of God denotes the whole Book of Divine Revelation. (See Ps. 19: 7, 1: 2, 119: 72, 92.)

One great fault in the investigation of this question lies in the failure to discriminate between the original import of terms, and their extended application. If one should undertake to settle the distinction between law and gospel by an examination of those passages only, where their extended meaning obtains, he would never arrive at satisfactory results. Confusion would attend all his reasoning.

But even after the original import of these terms is settled, there is still another source of confusion. There is a fixed principle of classification, according to which laws are distributed into different kinds. Failing to discover this principle, some persons are never able to settle, definitely and distinctly, what that law is which is violated by sin. Such is the confusion on this question, that many are able to refer to no other law than that of conscience. But conscience is either fallible or infallible. Were it infallible, its decisions would be uniform, and all would come to the same result;—which is contrary to fact. It is therefore fallible; and its decisions are just, or unjust, as they agree, or disagree, with some standard which is sure, fixed, and uniform. In a religious community, like ours, its decisions are in the main according to truth; yet as in many particular instances they are not so, the consequence is, that some cherish a sense of guilt where God does not condemn, while others fancy themselves blessed in the performance of what he forbids.

Let us see then if we can free this subject from ambiguity. What is the law, the transgression of which is sin? What particular code has man violated, that he should need a Saviour? It would be absurd to say, the law founded on the gospel; for until man has violated some law, there is no room for the gospel. Our apparently precipitate generalization, by which we made the rules of duty scattered over the Bible to be the law, and the good news the gospel, is therefore somewhat restrained. We must discriminate with closer acumen.

We remark then, that law grows out of the relation existing between those that are affected by it. For example, a certain law binds me to honor my parents. This law grows out of the peculiar relation which exists between them and me—a relation which cannot be better described, than by saying, is is that of parent and child—and affects both the honor of the parent and the welfare of the child. But if there were no such relation, it is self-evident, there could be no such law. Again, a certain law obliges husband and wife to cherish love for one another. The honor and welfare of each is effected by this law. But if the conjugal relation did not exist, there could be no such law. Once more; the law, which binds the subjects of an empire to honor their king, grows out of the relation between them and their king. But if there were no such relation, it is clear, there could be no such law. Thus it is evident, that there can be no law without relation of some kind.

It is also evident, from these examples, that the character of the law depends on the nature of the relation, in which it originates. Where the relation is that of king to his subjects, the law has the character of royalism;—not that of democracy, or republicanism, for the relation will not admit of it. Where the relation is that of parent to child, the character of the law is paternal;—not that of bond-service. It is true, where the law is made by fallible man, there may be a great want of adaptation to the relation which it recognizes. But where the law-giver is infinitely wise, and infinitely good, the adaptation will be perfect; the law will be exactly what it ought to be, growing naturally and obviously out of the relation which it acknowledges, and not the offspring of the arbitrary will of the Legislator because he is the strongest.

The solution of the question, What is the law which gives the knowledge of sin? is reserved for our next number.

CHRISTIAN UNION—WORLD'S CONVENTION.

The subject of Christian Union has received considerable attention for a time past from some of the leading ministers of the different religious denominations in Great Britain. As a means of promoting it, a Convention of representatives from all the various denominations of Protestants in the world, has been proposed. Preparatory to calling such a convention, a General Conference was held in Liverpool on the 1st, 2d, and 3d days of October, for prayer and conversation upon the subject. Between two and three hundred ministers and laymen were present, including persons from each of the leading denominations. The first session was devoted principally to reading the Scriptures and prayer, and was a season of great interest and solemnity. The second session was taken up with a consideration of the sacred importance of union, which was urged by several eminent speakers. The basis of union was discussed during the third and fourth sessions. Papers were drawn up on the terms of the proposed union, which were adopted with great unanimity. The doctrines of the Atonement, the divinity of Christ, the existence and influence of the Holy Spirit, Justification by Faith, and the right of private judgment, were recognized as the basis of organization. The Union is to be called the Evangelical Alliance, and is to have for its object a more real and visible union of all evangelical Christians throughout the world—the extension of Christian sympathy to suffering Protestants—and the resistance of the aggressions of Popery.

The last and most important measure of the Conference was to resolve upon calling a World's Convention, to be held in London in June next, for the purpose of enlisting all evangelical Protestants in this movement. Those who unite to form the Convention will not be required to compromise their views, but will be expected to maintain them in the spirit of forbearance and love, and to allow the great cardinal truths of the gospel to bind them together. If the Convention shall indeed be conducted strictly upon the plan proposed, we are confident that it will be one of the most important ever held since the Christian era. Believing that it will be what it is professedly designed to be, we rejoice heartily in its appointment, and sincerely hope that some of our brethren may be present to participate in its deliberations.

EDUCATION AT THE WEST.—The Society for the Promotion of Collegiate and Theological Education at the West, held its second anniversary recently at Newark, N. J. The Society was established for the express purpose of assisting several colleges at the West, which had suffered much loss, and were in danger of failing, in consequence of the commercial reverses and disasters which swept over our country a few years ago. Within two years it has raised for the aid of five young colleges at the west between twenty and thirty thousand dollars, besides being indirectly the means of raising a still larger sum on the western field. This timely aid is said to have saved property to the value of $400,000 from devastation and ruin. In its future labors the Society designs to assist new institutions as they rise, just as Harvard, Yale, and Dartmouth Colleges were formerly assisted by foreign munificence. In this way it hopes to call forth new Harvards, Yales, and Dartmouths, at the West.

THE NEW YORK BIBLE SOCIETY held its 22d Anniversary Meeting at the Tabernacle on Monday evening last. Interesting addresses were made by several individuals, and the Annual Report was read. From the Report it appears that 14,352 Bibles and Testaments have been distributed during the past twelvemonths—exceeding the number of those which were circulated during the previous year by 471—being a proportionate increase on former editions. Funds to the amount of $7,722 have been collected within the same interval, which has been used in forwarding the purposes of the Society. It is computed that there are 206 churches in this city, which will accommodate on an average 900 persons each—leaving an aggregate of 180,000 who cannot obtain seats.

THE ROMISH AND ENGLISH CHURCHES.—The frequency of changes from one of these churches to the other, indicates, one would think, that the transition is rather easy. The Rev. Mr. Newman, about whom so much has been said, with several of his Oxford friends, has recently gone over from the English to the Romish communion. On the other hand, the Rev. Mr. Sibthorpe, who embraced the Romish faith not long since, has returned to the bosom of the English Church. It is also stated that the Rev. Charles Seager and Mr. Caper are unhappy in their new association with Rome, and are about to return to the church from which they went out.

WHY IS SUNDAY PREFERRED TO THE SABBATH?

No solution to this query will or can be acceptable to those it most concerns. He who rejects God's commandment for a human tradition, does not choose to analyze his feelings, and would prefer his being allowed to continue his practice without questions being asked which disturb him. Yet would we take leave to ask, whether his preference of the Sunday is not the result of want or weakness of love to God, and of trust in him? Where there is true love in lively exercise, it will prompt to make sacrifices, when these are required for the glory of him to whom we owe our all, and with whom we hold most blessed fellowship; and where there is real trust in corresponding vigor, it will overcome all apprehension of actual loss through obedience to the living God. He who makes substance of things unseen, who regards the blessing of the Eternal as the greatest good, and who knows the care of the Lord of all,—even sending forth all his angels as ministering spirits in behalf of the heirs of salvation,—will not submit to known evil to escape the frown or procure the favor of his fellow men. With loyal heart, and in calmness, if not in confidence of present deliverance, he will enter the lion's den, to which unrighteous decrees may consign him for refusing to follow a multitude to do evil; and he will often, like Daniel, be enabled to say in joy of heart and holy triumph, "My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me, forasmuch as before him innocency was found in me." And in the experience of divine help and blessing, he will often be enabled to sing with the Psalmist,

> "The angel of the Lord encamps,
> And round encompasseth,
> All those about that do him fear:
> And them delivereth."

Let us, therefore, seek to encourage men to that trust which it is God's design, by the Sabbath, to promote in all; and as the fruit of our own experience of his grace and care, let our practice confirm our exhortation, while in the language of the same saint, we say to our neighbors and to all,

> "O taste and see that God is good,
> Who trusts in him is bless'd;
> Fear God, his saints; none that him fear
> Shall be with want oppress'd."

CHRISTIAN CONSISTENCY.

In the Baptist Record, No. 359, there is a racy article on "The Scriptural Use of the Term Bishop," from the pen of our esteemed brother I. L. B., Bishop of the Broad Street Baptist Church, Philadelphia. At the late session of the Philadelphia Baptist Association, the clerk was "instructed to affix the scriptural designation, Bishop, to the names of the pastors of the churches, in all the official documents of this body." As this practice was rather demurred at by some, brother I. L. B. wrote to justify its use, and says:—

"We would use this term as a public and continual protest against the corruptions of an ecclesiastical hierarchy, ... and restore an abused scriptural term to its legitimate signification."

"Christianity has been fearfully corrupted by a misappropriation of scriptural terms. For example, deipnon kurion, Lord's supper, is understood by multitudes as a physical and spiritual sacrifice, —metanoeite, repent, signifies to many, do penance, —ekkleesia, an assembly of the saints, conveys to thousands the idea of a mass of believers scattered over a continent or a world, yet bound together in one organization—baptidzein is understood as meaning to christen or to sprinkle; diakonos, deacon, means to many, an inferior order of preachers, and episkopos, bishop, is thought to mean a ruler of the clergy, and official superintendant of all the churches in a given diocese.

"Who can gauge the corruption which now afflicts Christianity in consequence of the misappropriation and abuse of these simple terms. The simplicity of Christ's ordinances has been deformed, their beauty marred, their spiritual signification lost, and their power for good miserably weakened. As Baptists, we are sedulously striving to restore one of these abused institutions; moved by similar arguments and a similar spirit, we should seek to restore and defend all."

In all this we most heartily concur, and to carry out this last remark, we would recommend to him to append to his list of misappropriations of scriptural terms by which christianity has been fearfully corrupted, the following, viz:—

Mia toon Sabbatoon, translated "the first day of the week," conveys to thousands the idea of a holy day substituted for that day specified in the fourth commandment, which says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God."

En tee kuriakee eemera, translated "the Lord's day," is understood as meaning a Sabbath day, or the first day of the week, instead of the seventh.

Ton Sabbaton, the Sabbath day, the day on which Jehovah rested from all his works, and blessed and hallowed, being used interchangeably with Sunday, the day the heathens appropriated to the worship of the sun, is understood by multitudes to mean one and the same day, and that day the Christian Sabbath.

Our good brother seems to feel sensibly that this teaching our children to speak half in the language of Ashdod, and half in the language of Canaan, is an evil thing, and fosters the corruptions of Christianity. So we think, at least, and eschew all such terms stolen from popery, and misapplied to sacred things, and all such misappropriations of Bible terms as are applied to the corruptions of Christianity to give them countenance among men.

We commend to our brother I. L. B. these few additions to the article in question, because the Great Teacher has said, (Matt. 7: 3, 5,) "Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye? . . . . . First cast the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote that is in thy brother's eye." When our brother has complied with this direction of our blessed Lord, he may with more effect say, "He who can be deterred from maintaining truth by the dread of ridicule and scorn, is not worthy a place as a bishop of a Christian Church." JOHN QUINCY ADAMS ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.—Hon. John Quincy Adams has written a letter declining, on account of feeble health, to attend the General Meeting of the Friends of the Abolition of Capital Punishment in Pennsylvania. He acknowledges that if there be any case which, in the intercourse of human society, can possibly justify the taking of human life by man, it is that sanctioned by the community for the punishment of enormous crimes. He closes his letter, however, by saying, "I do heartily wish and pray for the success of your efforts to promote the abolition of capital punishment, and if you can shape the laws of the land to a disclaimer of the right of Government itself to take from any human being the life granted him by his Creator, I would welcome it as the harbinger of a brighter day, when no individual of the race of man shall ever loes his life by the act of another."

DR. JUDSON.—It is announced through the Baptist papers, that this venerable and beloved pioneer of American missionaries will remain in the United States until next spring, spending most of the winter at the South for the security of his health. This is as it should be. There are thousands who would not be satisfied without seeing him, and his presence may do incalculable good in exciting and giving direction to a missionary spirit.

PENNSYLVANIA LITERARY INSTITUTION.—The Baptists of Pennsylvania have on foot a project for establishing at Lewisburg, Union Co., a literary institution of high order, to embrace a male and female department, with the powers and course of studies of a college. An important design of the undertaking is to educate young men called to the ministry, who shall supply the destitute portions of the State. It is estimated that at least one hundred thousand dollars will be needed to carry out the plan.

THE HEBREW MESSENGER.—The American Baptist Society for Evangelizing the Jews, propose to commence, on the first of January next, a monthly publication with this title. It will contain articles on the following subjects in successive numbers: History of the present efforts to promote Christianity among the Jews; Narratives of converted Jews; the temporal and spiritual restoration of the Jews; the proceedings of the American Baptist Society for Evangelizing the Jews; miscellaneous intelligence. Each number will contain 24 pages. Terms $1 per annum, to be paid on the receipt of the first number. Address the editor, Rev. C. F. Frey, No. 169 Bleecker-st., corner of Sullivan, New York.

RETURN OF MISSIONARIES.—The Baptist Missionary Magazine for November contains information, that the Rev. Mr. Van Husen and family have just returned from Madras by way of Calcutta. The reason of their return was the protracted illness of Mr. Van Husen, from which recovery seemed impossible while he remained in India. The prospect of his recovery has become more favorable within a few weeks. We learn, likewise, that Mr. Davenport, with his family, is on his way to this country from Siam, by the way of Singapore and London.

DEATH OF MRS. ONCHEN.—Mrs. Onchen, wife of the Raptist Missionary in Germany, died on the 8th of July, of a cancer from which she had suffered greatly for nearly two years. Mr. Onchen's health was much impaired by the long affliction, having continued with the sufferer almost constantly for eighteen months. The prospects of the mission are said to be encouraging. About forty new converts have been added to the church since the opening of the year, new enquirers are constantly presenting themselves, and the place of worship is crowed to excess.

REVIVALS OF RELIGION.—From the New Orleans Protestant, we rejoice to learn, that God is graciously visiting his people in Mobile, Ala., and Columbus, Miss. We have also noticed statements in some of the papers concerning the same things in other parts of the country. We trust that these are but the harbingers of richer blessings, soon to be realized. We know that God's arm is not shortened that he cannot save, nor his ear heavy that he cannot hear. And if his people will only bring ALL their tithes into the storehouse of the Lord, and prove him therewith, he will doubtless open the windows of heaven, and pour them out a blessing so abundant, that there shall scarcely be room to contain it.

A Siamese newspaper is now printed in Bangkok, under the control of the American Missionaries.

SUSPENSION OF A CLERGYMAN FOR HERESY.—After a series of trials before the different ecclesiastical bodies of the Presbyterian Church in the State of Ohio, Rev. Wm. Graham has been suspended from the exercise of the ministry until he retracts certain errors on the subject of slavery charged against him, and gives satisfactory evidence of repentance. These errors were first set forth in a speech before the Synod of Cincinnati in the autumn of 1843, and were published in a pamphlet form about six months afterwards. The following is a summary of them:—

1. He teaches that according to the Jewish law, the slave was not reckoned as a man or woman, but as property.

2. He teaches that the master had the right to beat the slave, and that hardly.

3. He teaches that the master had the right to sell the slave.

4. He teaches that the Head of the Church has authorized the relation between master and slave, involving the right of property not only in the charter, but in all the laws that he has given for the government of the church.

SEVENTH DAY BAPTISTS.—A church of this denomination was organized in this city on the 9th inst. with appropriate exercises. After a sermon by Eld. Wm. B. Maxson, the right hand of fellowship was given by Eld. W. B. Gillett; Address to the church by Solomon Carpenter; Prayer by Eld. Alex. Campbell. A mission has been determined upon by this people to the Abyssinians, in Eastern Africa, and it is expected that the missionaries will depart soon for that country.

STRONG TESTIMONY.—In a recent communication to the Baptist Register, Rev. E. C. Eager, a graduate of Hamilton Seminary, says:

"As to the value of ministerial education, it is above price. I have no words to express my sense of the importance of a thorough classical and theological education to a minister of the gospel. If I were fifteen years of age, and felt that God had called me to preach the gospel, and knew I had but twenty years to live, I would spend ten of those in preparatory studies."

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.—The Georgia Index reports baptisms in various parts of that State. At Hamilton 35—at Buck Spring 12. In Stewart County, in several different places, 95 have been baptized—at Mount Olive church 8, and others are expected. At Union, in Harris County, M. F. Moseley says, "It seemed that here was the Father building up his children in the most holy faith, while the Son was delivering over to the Father the new-born babes in Christ, and the Holy Ghost baptizing the whole church with fire from heaven." Added by immersion in water in the name of the Sacred Three 19. In Floyd County 15 have been added by experience. At Shilo 40—at Pineville 20; there were baptized at Bear Creek about 30; at Union, 35; Atherville, 35; and at Cedar Grove, 20; all during the latter part of the summer and this fall.

THANKSGIVING.—Blessings on the word! honest Saxon, genuine as ever uttered, full of glad thoughts and good things! Home, the house of God, fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, uncles, aunts, cousins,—turkeys, chickens, puddings,—who does not think of these and a thousand other things at the sound of that word, Thanksgiving! Blessings on our fathers for such a legacy! May our rulers be faithful executors of their will.

AFRICAN MISSION.—The Methodist Missionary Society have sent out in the Roanoke, bound from Norfolk for Liberia, a reinforcement to their mission in Africa—Rev. Mr. Benham and lady, Rev. Mr. Hoyt and lady, and Rev. Mr. Williams and lady. Mr. Benham is the Superintendent of the Mission, in the place of Rev. Mr. Seys, who has returned home. Mr. Hoyt goes to Cape Palmas, and Mr. Williams will take charge of the Seminary at Monrovia.

THE BIBLE IN FRANCE.—The Evangelical Society at Geneva, distributed the last year more than 17,000 copies of the Scriptures, and 100,000 Tracts. By other societies, in the same period, about 200,000 copies, or portions of the Bible, were distributed in France, chiefly among Roman Catholics.

AFRICA.—A meeting was held last week at the Hall of the Lyceum of Natural History, New York, at which it was resolved to form a National Society to promote the civilization of Africa by means of missionaries, religious and literary, chosen from among the descendants of Africa in this country, and educated with express reference to the field of labor assigned them. These laborers are expected to make Africa their permanent residence, and devote their lives to her regeneration.

A very splendid copy of the Holy Bible has been got up by Lippincott & Co. as a present to Ole Bull. A beautifully designed inscription on the fly leaf, executed in Dickson's finest style, shows who were the donors, and the object of the presentation. It is as follows: "To Mr. Ole Bull, a tribute of gratitude for his valuable aid in behalf of the Poor. Presented by the managers of the Home Mission Society. Philadelphia, Nov. 14, '45."—Phila. Ledger.

The Northern Advocate states that an interesting work of grace is now in progress in the Methodist Church at Auburn. More than 20 have joined the society, and 40 or 50 are found at the altar at a time. Rev. Mr. Maffit is laboring there.

The subject of Foreign Missions was recently presented to the Duane street church, New York, by their pastor, Rev. Dr. J. W. Alexander, after which a collection was taken, amounting to one thousand dollars.

The New Orleans Protestant states that there are about 140,000 souls in that city, while all the Protestant houses of worship in the place will not accommodate more than 10,000; hence 130,000 are without the gospel.

The Secretary of State, to whom Dr. Reese, late Superintendent of County Schools, appealed to set aside the decision of the Board of Supervisors of this County, has dismissed the appeal on the ground that the law, as it stands at present, confers no authority upon him in the premises.

PRACTICAL RECIPES.

CURING HAMS.—For every one hundred pounds of meat, take five pints of good molasses, (or 5 pounds brown sugar,) 5 ounces saltpetre, and 8 pounds of rock salt, and 3 gallons of water, and boil the ingredients over a gentle fire, skimming off the froth or scum as it rises. Continue the boiling till the salt, &c., is dissolved. Have the hams nicely cut and trimmed, packed in casks with the shank end down, as the pickle will thus strike in better. When the pickle prepared as above is sufficiently cool, pour it over the hams. They may lie in pickle, from two to six weeks, according to the size of the pieces, or the state of the weather—more time being required in cold than in warm weather. Beef or mutton hams, or tongues intended for smoking and drying, may be cured according to this mode, and will be found excellent. [Cultivator.

REMEDY FOR THE BOTTS.—A correspondent of the Albany Cultivator says: Having seen many horses die with the botts, and many remedies given without effect, I was induced by a merchant in Cambridge to try the following for a horse of my own, after I had tried most of the remedies in common use without effect, and given him up for lost:—Half pint of vinegar, half pint of soft soap, half pint gin, and half pint molasses, well shaken together, and poured down while foaming. To my great surprise, the horse was in five minutes free from pain, and ate freely; the next morning I was on my journey. I have since recommended and given the same in perhaps fifty cases, with the same good effect; not in one instance has it failed to effect a perfect cure.

TO PRESERVE CUCUMBERS GOOD FOR YEARS.—Pick and lay them in the sun to wilt, then pack them in a cask, first a layer of salt, and then a layer of cucumbers, until your cask is full, and as the cucumbers wilt and settle down in the cask, you may add more, always adding salt to each layer. Add no water as the juice of the cucumber will be sufficient; be careful to keep a cover on the top of the cucumbers to keep them under the brine—when wanted for use freshen and put into vinegar, will become hard at once—have seen them four or five years old, good as ever.

SAG HARBOR IN RUINS.—We have information of a most disastrous fire at Sag Harbor, equal in extent, in comparison with the size of the town, to the fire at Pittsburg, Quebec, or the New York conflagration. Mr. Tucker, the conductor of the Long Island road, who obtained all the information practicable in the confusion, states that the fire broke out on Thursday night, about 9 o'clock, at which time the wind was blowing a gale. The fire originated in a wooden building, and soon extended to over one hundred houses, (one account says one hundred and seventy,) which were entirely consumed. Among the buildings burned was the Suffolk County Bank, and both of the Hotels. The loss in buildings is stated at $100,000 or $150,000, while the loss in merchandize cannot yet be estimated, but must be very large. The portion burned was the best business part of the town, and has cast a shade over its prospects that will not, we fear, soon be removed.

REGULATIONS OF THE MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH.—A general meeting of the Magnetic Telegraph Company was held in Washington. Amos Kendall was elected President. The following was reported as the rate of charges between New York and Philadelphia, this line being nearly finished:

"For the transmission, writing out, and delivery of every communication, not exceeding ten words, every figure being counted a word, exclusive of the signature and address, and the directions of the writer as to the disposition of the communication:

50 miles and under	10 cents.
Over 50 and not over 100 miles	20 "
From New York to Philadelphia	25 "
From Philadelphia to New York	25 "
For all distances over 100 miles	25 "

For every addition not exceeding ten words the same rate of charge will be made as on the first ten."

Regulations.—Payment in advance communications to be sent to the managers in writing; first come first served—no one to occupy more than 15 minutes, while others are waiting. Foreign arrivals, with prices of cotton and other American produce, telegraphed and posted at each station gratis. No favoritism; facilities to be afforded for the apprehension of fugitives.

SLAVERY IN OREGON.—P. H. Burnett, a citizen of Oregon, in a letter which we see in the last Platte (Mo.) Argus, says:—"The Legislature passed an act declaring that slavery shall not exist in Oregon, and the owners of slaves who bring them here are allowed two years to take them out of the country, and in default the slaves are to be free. The act also prohibits free negroes or mulattoes from settling or remaining in this country, and requires them to leave the country in two years, and in default, to be hired out to the lowest bidder, who will bind himself to remove them from the country for the shortest time of service, and within six months after the expiration thereof. The object was to keep clear from this most troublesome class of population."

THE SCHOOLMASTER ABROAD—i. e. NOT AT HOME.—The following letter was received at the Missionary Rooms, and it is inserted verbatim et literatim:

——, Georgia, October 7th, 1845.

Gentlemen the followin Periodicals which is sent to John Daily I wish them stoped as I Doe not wish them sent to as I see in the Last No Too Strong Abilitionast Piecis the. SOULS ON BOARD.—A vessel was once sailing in a rough sea near a reef of rocks, when the passengers overheard the sailors and the man at the helm debating the question whether they would be able to keep clear of the rocks without making another tack. The captain came along and settled the question at once, by ordering the vessel put off so as to avoid all risk.

The passengers expressed their gratification in having so careful a commander. "Careful," replied the captain, "it is necessary I should be careful, for I have souls on board."

The Big Gun cast in England as the successor to Capt. Stockton's Peace Maker, arrived at New York, on board the Packet Ship John R. Skiddy.

SUMMARY.

Short sentences sometimes do more than long discourses. We can remember the one, while we can scarcely find time to read the other. One is like a guide-post, distinctly pointing out our way; the other like a general map, in which we are often puzzled, after a long search, to find out where we are.

At a temperance meeting in Boston last week, it was stated that the health of Mr. Gough was so far improved as to warrant the hope that he may be able to resume his labors in the cause during the ensuing winter. May this hope not be disappointed. "Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy; when I fall, I shall arise."

Newton said, "Endeavor to be first in your trade or profession, whatever it may be." And this, by the way, is the secret of success and excellence. It matters comparativcly little what that trade, or occupation, or profession may be, provided it is useful.

Call upon a business man in business hours, on business only; transact the business, and then go about your business, that he may have time to finish his.

The Eastport Sentinel states that it has been estimated there were shipped from that port last season 19,620 barrels of white-blue-nose potatoes, and that the quantity shipped direct from Calais, Robbinston, Perry, Lubec, and Pembroke, would make the number of barrels exported at rising 40,000. It is now supposed that the quantity to be sent to market will not exceed 5,000 barrels, as very few farmers in the neighborhood will have more than will answer for seed, and their own consumption.

A great bureau knob, composed of 1209 pieces of wood, was exhibited at the Fair of the American Institute. The maker's name is Mr. A. McBurth.

The Republic of Texas has, by law, appropriated 13,284 acres of land in each county for the support of primary schools, and 221,400 acres for the endowment of two Colleges.

The Magnetic Telegraph between this city and Philadelphia is now nearly completed. The wires extend up to Fort Washington, and across the North River under water—passing through New Jersey to New Hope, and down the other side of the Delaware River, to Philadelphia.

The line between New York and Washington will probably be completed by the first of December.

The Detroit Journal says, We regret to hear that Bishop McCoskry is about to leave our city, for a season at least, to discharge the Episcopal functions in the diocese of New York, in consequence of the suspension of Bishop Onderdonk.

There are five newspapers now published at Honolulu; four in English, and one in the Hawaian language; a striking illustration of the power of Christian instruction, which in the course of 25 years, has raised these islands from the lowest state of degradation to a respectable rank among civilized nations.

The Antiquarian Society of Copenhagen has received intelligence from Brasil, that 900 calcerous caverns have lately been discovered and explored in that country, all of which contain fossil remains. Six of these contain human bones, besides those of animals, some of which, it is said, now exist.

The Cincinnati Chronicle thinks that the wool produced in Ohio, amounts to about 2,000,000 lbs. per annum.

Mr. M. Hudson, of Hartford, Ct., has manufactured a single sheet of paper for the Hartford and Danbury Railroad, 25 feet in length and 9 feet wide, for which he receives $25.

Mr. E. R. Robbins, of Cornwell, has presented a beet to the Vermont Observer, weighing fifteen pounds.

Mr. Samuel Higgins, of Scarboro, Me., raised 119 bushels of wheat from six acres—the value of which was $131.

At the late Circuit Court, held at Whiteplains, Westchester Co., Miss Conklin, a lady rising forty years of age, obtained a verdict of four thousand dollars against Mr. Addison Hill, of about the same age, for breach of promise of marriage.

Wire fences are now made and highly approved of in Scotland. Five wires are used, with oak posts, costing only about 12 1-2 cents per yard. The top wire is No. 8, and the others No 5. This fence is said to be cheaper than one of boards, or of posts and rails.

It is estimated that $20,000 are spent in the city of New York every week for theatrical amusements. This would furnish every destitute family in the city with the common necessaries of life.

Some of the papers are venting their patriotism in articles upon the Broad street Hotel, "where Washington bade a last farewell to his army." We know of at least three different houses in that neighborhood where the same event is said to have taken place, and it would be a puzzling job for an antiquary to decide which of these three is the real one.

An English writer, speaking of the prejudice against deep plowing, says, "It would puzzle a conjuror to tell why a farmer always digs his garden 20 inches (where he always gets good crops,) and plows for his field crops only five inches."

There are eight silk factories in Mansfield, Conn., the greatest silk manufacturing town in the country.

We perceive by a notice in the Little Rock Gazette, that a party to be styled the "Arkansas Californians," are to rendezvous at Fort Smith, on the first Monday in April next, preparatory to taking up their line of march for the Pacific coast. Every person starting is expected to be well armed with a rifle or heavy shot-gun, sixteen pounds of shot or lead, four pounds of powder, caps, &c., two horses or mules for each person, or a wagon and eight cattle for every five persons, tents, &c.

Only about one half of the population of New York were born here. 95,373, or more than a fourth of the whole, are natives of Great Britain; remainder of Germany, France and other countries of Europe. The Sixteenth Ward has most from Great Britain; the French are mostly in the Fifteenth. There are in the city 64,233 persons entitled to vote. The number of aliens is 71,961. Of colored people not taxed there are 11,576, and of taxed, 225. Of them all there are but 108 voters.

The rest of the Indians have conducted themselves very well and perform their work cheerfully.

James Arlington Bennett writes from Nauvoo, Oct. 23d, that he had met by invitation, and was introduced to all the Apostles by their President, Mr. Young. The subject of discussion was their exodus to California. The place of destination fixed upon at present is the Bay of St. Francisco, on the Pacific Ocean. Every thing is settled, and the whole Mormon people, or the great majority of them, will take their departure from Nauvoo about the 10th of May next, leaving all their property, sold or unsold, behind them.

Two laborers (Irishmen) in the employ of the Suncook Company, at Pembrook, N. H. and a son of Dr. Potter, aged about 10 years, were killed at that place on Saturday last, by the caving in of a bank in the side of which they were digging.

The ship Cotton Planter arrived at Mobile Thursday evening, in nine days from New York. She was just "neck and neck" with the mail.

Between May, 1840 and May, 1845, between 900 and 1000 persons have taken the benefit of the insolvent law in Jamaica, leaving debts nearly to the amount of $1,200,000. There are very little above 350,000 inhabitants on the island.

Mr. Joseph Merrill, who keeps a hotel at Sherburn Falls, Franklin Co. Mass., recently made a present of his entire stock of liquors to a committee of the Temperance Society at that place, and declared his intention of selling no more rum. The example is worthy of being imitated.

Margaret Napier, the "modest young lady," who fainted in one of the streets of Cincinnati a few nights since, with her hand in a gentleman's pocket, (from which he afterwards found that his pocket book had been abstracted,) was bound over on Saturday last in the sum of $100 to appear on trial at the Criminal Court of that city in January next.

A wretch named Kline, living about six miles from Peoria, Illinois, recently beat his wife so severely that she died three days afterwards, from the effects.

The Court House of Marion County, at Tazewell, Ga., was, with all its records, books and papers, destroyed by fire on the 4th inst. It was the work of an incendiary.

A band of gamblers has been discovered and broken up at Pottsville, Pa.

George Monday, the hatless Prophet, has been giving a lecture at New Haven.

The New-York Tribune says there is very little gossip of interest just now. This is the universal shopping season, when the ladies are laying in their silks and satins for the first dash of the fashionable season, which will now speedily be upon us. Broadway, for the last few days, looks as if an October prairie had been turned into it in full bloom. There seems to be a perfect mania among the women for gaudy colors and meretricious finery. The fashions are as changeable as an autumn forest dressed for company—and in truth we see in the street everything in profusion but good taste.

Hon. J. P. B. MAXWELL, late Whig member of Congress, died at the residence of Judge Robeson, (his brother-in-law,) at Belvidere, N. J. on Friday evening. He was elected to Congress in 1836, and re-elected in 1838 and 1840.

The Black River Journal says, "Snow, to the depth of 12 inches, fell in this vicinity on the 8th and 9th insts. The ground was very wet, or it would have been much deeper."

LEGISLATION ON LICENTIOUSNESS.

Again, upon the approach of another session of our State Legislatures, we ask the attention of the lovers of virtue to the importance of further legislation to restrain the progress of licentiousness. The vice is flagrant, deadly to individual and social happiness, offensive to God and all decent men, acknowledged on all hands to be a proper subject of legislation, yet hitherto it has passed scot-free, or only so lightly hedged about with law as to have the appearance of being protected, not punished.

How to get at it with the arm of law has indeed been a problem. It is a secret vice, yet not so secret as murder. Is murder so private that law cannot reach it?

Not only is it less secret than murder, it is also more destructive to the peace of society! The SIN involved may not exceed that of blood guiltiness, but the misery caused by the assassin, is not to be compared for magnitude and extent with that which is the fruit of licentiousness; yet the former is justly punished with death, and the latter is not touched.

The PREVAILING argument against rigid legislative enactments to restrain the vice is, that it is impossible to prevent it. That is, society is so corrupt, there no is use in making laws to punish its vices. If it should ever become fashionable to steal or kill, it would be proper, on this principle to repeal all laws forbidding theft and murder. The same class of moralists who wish licentiousness to go unpunished, would doubtless wish all other crimes, in which they indulge, to enjoy the same impunity. Shall they be gratified?

We do not deny that some virtuous men may think it inexpedient to attempt the suppression of licentiousness by penal enactments, but beyond a cavil the secret of much opposition to wholesome laws arises from a secret love of sin. We make this remark apparently severe and uncharitable, in full persuasion of its truth, and with special reference to candidates for legislative office. We would have no man of doubtful virtue elected to make our laws. Both of the great political parties have, in their turn, denounced us as opposed to their candidates, when we have raised a feeble but honest voice to put down bad men whom party policy has set up for office. But there are higher interests at stake than the temporary ascendancy of a party. Parties change with the times. Principles never change. The morals of a people are to be guarded with sleepless care, and when was a free people known to be better than those they choose as their rulers? A corrupt constituency will be likely to choose corrupt rulers. A man's private opinions of moral questions may sometimes be gathered from the character of the men he would choose to make his laws. In the selection, therefore, of men to legislate for us, let us see to it that they are at least decently moral men. It is of even higher importance that a legislator be a man of sound moral character than he, who is simply to execute a law. An oath and the fear of consequences, may compel the latter to do his duty, however disagreeable, but the former defeats the passage of laws that are good, and thus prevents the possibility of punishing vice, whether the Executive officer be a pure man or not. The very first step towards the reform of our laws on the subject of those vices to which we allude, must be the selection of virtuous men for the legislature.

There is then another point toward which we would turn public attention, not so much for the purpose of expressing a decided opinion, as to invite the reflection of wiser men upon the question. We want a law that shall adequately punish SEDUCTION. It is one of the foulest crimes in the catalogue of human depravity. It should be punished severely and surely. But the moment a law for such an end is proposed, it is contended that where an injury is done to another by consent of parties, the law has no claim upon the wrong-doer. He who makes an assault upon innocence may be punished, but he who tempts innocence to its ruin may go unwhipt. There is a difficulty here, more imaginary, perhaps, than real, but an objection that proves fatal to the passage of any stringent law to punish the seducer. But let it be borne in mind that the crime is committed against society as well as against an individual; that to yield to temptation is criminal as well as to tempt, and that law is designed to restrain as well as to punish, and we are ready to ask why it is not desirable to make both parties liable to punishment! It was no excuse for Eve that she was seduced by the devil. The law took its course in her case.—It should have restrained, but failing it punished. Now, what would be the moral effect of a law pronouncing licentiousness a crime to be punished with imprisonment? Would it not operate far more powerfully as a restraint upon the weaker sex than on the other? Would not the fact that such a law holds its rod over the head, be the very restraint that is necessary to save the tempted from falling, when perhaps almost every other hold on virtue had given way? Let it be known through society that this crime by whomsoever committed, is a State Prison offence, and can we doubt that it will be so odious and fearful that many who now fall into it will shrink from it with fear, though no higher motive operates to save them?

Last winter, in the N. Y. Legislature, the proposition to make both parties liable to punishment was submitted as an amendment to the law which had been introduced. The friends of the original law opposed it, and we believe it was chiefly owing to a division of sentiment on this point that the bill was defeated. We hope this matter will be weighed this winter, and that a law judiciously constructed and uniting all the friends of virtue in its support, will be introduced and carried through. We have in our possession a mass of fearful statistics on the general subject, which we will lay before the public if it be necessary to rouse the people to demand a wholesome law. Let us have petitions prepared early, distributed widely, signed universally, and entrusted to the hands of determined members of the Legislature, that the cause of virtue may not suffer through the apathy of its friends. N. Y. Obs.

Proclamation.

BY SILAS WRIGHT, GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

A usage, which has the approbation of a quarter of a century, calls upon me, at this period of the year, to name a day to be observed by the people of this State, as a day of public Thanksgiving. The uniformity in the time heretofore designated, throughout the period referred to, induces me to name Thursday the fourth day of December next, as the Thanksgiving day for this State, for the present year.

Life and health are enduring causes for thankfulness to the Father of life and the Fountain of health, from all the living.

Free civil institutions, based upon the true principle of popular sovereignty, and extending to every individual equal personal liberty, and to all the largest measure of that liberty consistent with peace and order and personal security, present a cause for devout thankfulness to the Ruler of Nations, from every people who enjoy these blessings.

The plentiful fruits of the earth, which in our State and country furnish an abundance for the wants of all, call for daily thankfulness, and render it peculiarly appropriate that, annually, as these fruits are yielded, a christian people should unite in a tribute of thanksgiving to Him, who tempers the seasons, and blesses the earth and makes it fruitful.

In addition to these universal causes for thankfulness, if each individual will summon up the recollection of the almost innumerable personal and social blessings, which the year has brought with it, all the people of this State will be willing, with one heart, to set apart one day, for the united expression of their thanks for the many and signal blessings of this year, abundantly bestowed upon them and their country by the Great Author of every temporal and spiritual blessing.

I respectfully recommend the day I have named, to be thus set apart for this grateful service and duty, and that the people of the State suspend their business avocations, and assemble in their usual places of religious worship, that the Temples, which have resounded with supplications for the year, may echo back thanksgiving to Him who has so bountifully responded to our petitions, and so paternally provided for our necessities.

Exercises such as these, entered into in the spirit and with the feelings which these considerations should excite, cannot fail to turn the mind to the lively remembrance of the immeasurably greater blessings of the redemption through a Saviour, and the Revelation to fallen man of the way of salvation; blessings for which the human heart can never be sufficiently thankful.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto affixed the privy seal of the State. Witness my hand, at the city of (L. S.) Albany, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-five. SILAS WRIGHT.

HORACE MOODY, Private Secretary.

PLAINFIELD FAMILY SCHOOL.

THIS Institution will commence its Winter Session on Monday the 27th of November. The course of instruction embraces all the solid branches of education, and is designed to prepare boys for college or mercantile pursuits. The French and Spanish languages, both written and spoken, are also taught on the most approved principle. References and other particulars will be given on application to J. O. MAURIAC, Principal.

Plainfield, N. J., Oct. 20, 1845.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
IRA SAYLES, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics
GURDON EVANS, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. HARTSHORN, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. STILLMAN, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. MAXSON, Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences. The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense. SAMUEL RUSSELL,

President of the Board of Trustees

POOR MAN'S EVENING PRAYER.

God of the poor man! hear us,
Thou giver of all good!
At this our meal be near us—
Bless, bless our humble food.
We have been toiling through the day,
Sleep hangs upon each brow,
But through the dim night hear us pray,
Look down, and bless us now!

God of the poor man! heed us,
As thus on bended knee,
For all thou hast decreed us,
We praise and glory thee.
The hands that make the wealthy,
Unmake them at thy will;
They make us strong and healthy,
May we remain so still!

God of the poor man! shining,
Amidst his little cot,
Though fortune be declining,
With thee how bright his lot!
Guard now the night before us;
Let quiet slumber come;
Spread, spread thy mantle o'er us,
And bless the poor man's home.

Story of a Sister's Love.

A few days ago I was at the State Prison at Sing Sing, where I heard the facts I am about to relate. They furnish as touching an instance of devotion as I have lately met, and they show us that in the humblest walks, even in the atmosphere of vice and crime, there may flourish some of the purest passions, that ought to win our charities and make us respect the poor.

A young man in Nova Scotia came to the city of New York and fell among thieves. He became the companion of criminals, perhaps a criminal himself. Certainly he was arrested on a charge of crime, was tried, convicted, and sent to the prison at Sing Sing.

His sister in Nova Scotia heard of the fate of her brother, and resolved to secure his deliverance from prison. She was only a servant girl, and her scanty purse was barely sufficient to defray her expenses through the long journey to the city. When she reached New York, she learned that the only way to get her brother out of prison, was by pardon from the governor of the state, and he was at Albany. She had no means to employ counsel to aid her in making the application, nor even the little that was necessary to pay her own way to the feet of the governor. She went to service in the city, and worked faithfully till she had earned money enough to defray her expenses to Albany, and was soon there, a stranger, a young, unprotected woman, with no other recommendation than that of having a brother in the State Prison. She inquired the way to the house of the governor, obtained an audience, and then with all the eloquence of love so long pent in her own bosom, she made known her request. The governor said that he must have some reason for granting the pardon, or he could not interfere!

"But my brother is an innocent man," said the girl, who had never for a moment indulged the thought that he could have been guilty of crime. The governor wanted something more than her word for it, and giving her the small comfort of words of sympathy and kindness, sent her away to devise ways and means to prove the innocence of her imprisoned brother.

She returned to New York, and finding a place, again resumed her domestic service, and indefatigably labored, as time and opportunity allowed, to accomplish what was now the great end of her life. And what will not perseverance and love achieve! Hopeless as the attempt might appear, she found the men who composed the jury that convicted her brother, and obtained the names of every one of them to a petition setting forth mitigating circumstances in his case, and asking the interpotition of executive clemency in his behalf. With this petition the devoted sister hurried to Albany, and full of hope, she presented it to the governor. He was moved by the intensity of her purpose, and the ardent strength of her affection. But he still hesitated.

"Why," said she, "you must pardon my brother. I shall never leave you until you do. I shall stay just here and pray for ever, and if you wish me to go away you must pardon him, and I will bless you, and God will bless you the longest day you live." Her prayers and tears so far prevailed as to extort a promise that he would make immediate inquiries into the case, and if they were satisfactory he would transmit the pardon by a certain day, which he named, through the mail, to the prison at Sing Sing.

Once more the noble-hearted girl returns to her work, and waits for the slow weeks to wear away. But they flew faster when she thought that the time of her brother's liberty drew near. This was to be the reward of her toil, and suffering.

On the very day which the governor had named, the constant sister makes her appearance at the door of the prison at Sing Sing, and informs the keeper that she had come for her brother, who on that day was to be pardoned by the governor. She was told that no pardon had been received.—Her heart sank within her. Was she, after all, to be disappointed? "But the governor said he would send it by the post, and it would be here to day. He will keep his promise, I know he will." The keeper was struck with her appearance and deeply interested in her manner. He told her to come in and he would send to the post office. While the messenger was gone she walked the room in great agitation, trembling between hope and fear, and when the word was brought that there was no pardon, she protested that it would come, and she should not leave the prison until it did. The kind-hearted keeper took her to his house and permitted her to stay there waiting the arrival of the governor's letter. The next day it came—the pardon came—and she embraced her brother free, and freed by his sister's sacrifice and love.

The pardon was accompanied by a letter from the governor to the prisoner, urging him in strong and impressive language to conduct himself hereafter in a manner worthy of the noble sister of whom he had reason to be proud, and to whose self-denying and persevering efforts he was indebted for his liberty. The brother and sister, rejoicing in their re-union and the boon of freedom so toilfully won, took their way from the prison-house, and are doubtless now in some retirement, earning an honest livelihood.

I dwell with peculiar interest upon this instance of sisterly attachment. It teaches me not to look only to the refined and elevated circles of humanity, for examples of pure and constant love. It tells me the poor and neglected have hearts, and that they are as keenly alive to pleasure and pain, as those in the more highly favored walks of life. [Mother's Magazine.

Eloquent and Truthful sentiments.

The ark of God was never taken till it was surrounded by the arms of earthly defenders. In captivity, its sanctity was sufficient to vindicate it from insult, and to lay the hostile fiend prostrate on the threshold of his own temple. The real security of Christianity is to be found in its benevolent morality, in its exquisite adaptation to the human heart, in the facility with which its scheme accommodates itself to the capacity of every human intellect, in the consolation which it bears to those who mourn, in the light with which it brightens the great mystery of the grave. To such a system it can bring no addition of dignity or of strength, that it is part and parcel of the common law. It is not now for the first time left to rely on the force of its own evidences, and the attractions of its own beauty. Its sublime theology confounded the Grecian schools in the fair conflicts of reason with reason. The bravest and wisest of the Cæsars found their arms and their policy unavailing when opposed to the weapons that were not carnal, and the kingdom that was not of this world. The victory which Porphyry and Dioclesian failed to gain, is not, to all appearance, reserved for any of those who have in this age directed their attacks against the last restraint of the powerful, and the last hope of the wretched. The whole history of the Christian religion shows, that she is in far greater danger of being corrupted by the alliance of power, than of being crushed by its opposition. Those who thrust temporal sovereignty upon her, treat her as their prototypes treated her author. They bow the knee, and spit upon her; they cry, 'Hail!' and smite her on the cheek; they put a sceptre into her hand, but it is a fragile reed; they crown her, but it is with thorns, they cover with purple the wounds which their own hands have inflicted on her; and inscribe magnificent titles over the cross on which they have fixed her to perish in ignominy and pain.

THE CHRISTIAN IN RETIREMENT—AND IN THE WORLD.

What a great difference exists between the ardour of youth, and the cool sobriety of old age! What a great difference also between the prose or thoughful, and the poetical or fanciful hours of human life! Again, what a great difference exists between a Christian in retirement, and that same Christian in the world! Uniformity is desirable in the Christian character; for without it, where is consistency?

But view the Christian in retirement.—All is tranquility and silence, he meditates on sacred subjects; and his thoughts are solemn, dignified and splendid. He regards the world as nothing but vanity. He sees and feels that religion is the great subject, and the true Christian the great character. He forms his plans, makes his resolves, and thinks of going out into the world redolent of piety.

Let me transport this individual from his closet into the busy and clamorous walks of society. Is he any longer the same being? What are his thoughts, words, feeling, and actions? He has business to transact, and is disturbed. Men are perverse, and he is irritated; or they are frivolous, and he imbibes their frivolity. Is he prosperous, then he is elated. Do things proceed unfavorably? Then he is perplexed and dispirited. Is this the man who was such a noble being in retirement?

I approach him: I ask him, where are the thoughts, feelings, and purposes of his lonely hours? He is confused at the question—pauses a few moments—and then says in a touching manner: I lament the difference between retired and public hours. In those we are almost angels; but in these we are only men. I am grieved and ashamed."

Such is the fact. We are not sufficiently in the world what we are in the closet. Not sufficiently I say; for the hour that is given to religion will be more calm, spiritual and sublime, than in the hours in which we are engaged with the materialism of a mortal existence. But surely it is the point of excellence to bring as much as possible, the thoughts and feelings of our best hours into our common hours.

Religion is not like a robe, to be put on and off as we please. It is not a subject for one hour, one place, or one circumstance only. It is not an act, but a habit. It is not a casual profession, but an abiding principle. It is a yoke which is to be always sustained. Shall I be as a glowing seraph in the closet, and as a grovelling reptile in common life? Shall I in retirement soar to the third heavens, and associate with men as if no heaven existed?

To be "spiritually minded" is the essential point; but it is difficult to maintain this frame of soul. My natural taste is worldly, and I am strongly inclined to mind worldly things. I cannot be spiritually minded unless I gain the victory of self; unless I vanquish corruption, and keep an abiding sense of divine things in my heart.

I would delight in retirement. I would remember Isaac who "went out to meditate in the field at eventide." But the best proof of rightly using solitude is, to show greater excellence in the common course of life. If I be religious, I shall carry religion with me, and it will give a tone, direction, and color, all to my behavior in the world.

O my soul! I do not say to thee, be always talking about religion; but I say to thee keep thyself always under its holy influence. Thus thou wilt avoid what is foolish, vain, useless, and perverse; and thou wilt be enabled to do something for the honor of God and of his truth, in thy ordinary walk. Thou wilt enjoy more of the energy and consolation of piety, thou wilt be freed from the accusations of conscience; and many of the moments now spent in sorrow and complaint will be spent in joy and praise. [Book of the Heart.

PARENTAL EXAMPLE.

A mother related the following seemingly trifling incident, which forcibly illustrates the importance and power of parental example:

As I was about to enter my nursery, to look after my little ones, I observed the youngest, a boy three years of age, over a book which he had taken from a shelf, resembling a family Bible used before morning and evening prayer.

Struck with the unusual solemnity of his manner, I watched, unobserved, his movements.

With great precision, and apparent devotion, he went through the exercise of reading, singing, and then kneeling for prayer, in imitation of his father's daily example. And never was manner, voice, or gesture, more perfectly copied. Trifling as was this circumstance, so deep and solemn was the impression made upon my mind, that to this time I find myself mentally exclaiming, "What manner of persons ought parents to be, in all holy conversation and godliness!" Never, till this occurrence, had my mind dwelt upon the momentous fact, though so oft repeated, that the future characters and the eternal destinies of children are usually, at a very early period, stamped by parental example; and I now felt what an amazing influence must be exerted upon young children by the manner of performing family prayer.

If this be true, what filial confidence, what holy obedience to the commands of God, should mark the conduct of parents in all family transactions! that there may be a holy consistency between their conduct and conversation, and their morning and evening devotions. A parent who feels and humbly acknowledges his dependence for daily bread, his own need of divine teaching and divine forgiveness, may hope to see his children, one after another, become "trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord." Some of our children may need much pruning, much correction; yet God will never disannul his covenant promise to faithful, praying parents—"I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed after thee."—Mother's Magazine.

SHIP OHIO.

In crossing the East Boston Ferry, a short time since, as we swept by the fighting-Ship Ohio, a fellow passenger asked in a somewhat loud tone of voice, "What is the use of that big ship there? It seems to obstruct the navigation as much as if there was a sand bank there, just in the middle of the channel?"

"There is plenty of room to go round her," said another. "I cant think she is very much in the way, considering how much she cost."

"A thousand dollars a day is not very much for Uncle Sam, as it don't cost him anything to receive the money," exclaimed another.

"It don't come out of the people's property? nobody has to earn it, I suppose?" said a hard-working lookng man!

"What good does she do?" asked the first: whereupon an old sailor entered upon the ship's defence as follows:

"You don't seem to like such ships, gentlemen. I do. I have smelt some powder in my day, and should not care if I smelt it again. I tell you the ship is of use. When men are listed they put them in that ship, and keep them there till they are wanted. She is a receiving ship, gentlemen, a Receiving Ship."

"A sort of coop for men," exclaimed the first.

"A coop!" no such thing sir: "I said a receiving ship. You don't come over me with your new fangled notions. Now listen to common sense. How could we fight without fighting ships?"

"That is the very reason," said the first, "I don't want any fighting ships."—"Don't want to fight, sir! I am a patriot, sir, I love my country, sir, and I am ready to fight for my country. Do without ships of war! you may as well do without your prisons and gallows, and all that sort of things!"

Up starts a new speaker,—a man with naval buttons, and in a rage asks, "Do you mean to insult me, sir? Don't you dare to class together in my hearing fighting ships and prisons and gallows!"

Here the boat touched the landing place and saved us from witnessing a fight between the two champions for fighting ships.

FILIAL LOVE.—Filial love should be cherished. It has, especially, a softening and ennobling effect on the masculine heart. It has been remarked that almost all illustrious men have been distinguished by love for their mother. It is mentioned by Miss Pardoe, that a "beautiful feature in the character of the Turks, is reverence for their mother. Their wives may advise or reprimand unheeded, but their mother is an oracle, consulted, confided in, listened to with respect and deference, honored to the latest hour, and remembered with affection even beyond the grave." "Wives may die," say they, "and we can replace them; children perish, and others may be born to us; but who shall restore the mother when she passeth away and is seen no more?"

CHILDREN AT PLAY.

BY J. A. BEVERBRIDGE.

O, blame them not for their joyous strain,
For this is their hour of glee;
And soon the pall of manhood's care
Will cover their gayety.
Then let their laugh be loud and clear,—
Chide not that little band,
Whose mirth must soon, alas, give way
To Time's unsparing hand.

I love to hear their wild, clear notes
Ring out on the wintry air,—
They tell the joys which once were ours,
Ere we knew this world of care;
And the lively scenes of the school-boy sport
In Memory's glass are shown,
And a thousand scenes are remembered now,
Which we thought forever flown.

Give them their fleeting hour of mirth,
For the clouds are gathering now,
Which will burst in fury on their heads,
And furrow each gentle brow.
And care will be where joy now sits,
And thorns where flowers appear;
O, chide them not, O, chide them not!
For soon will come life's care.

The Merchant's Son.

During three days a furious gale prevailed, through most of which all hands were kept busy. It was the first severe storm the merchant's son had seen at sea, and his motions when aloft were awkward and dangerous.—While fixing a rope he lost his foothold, and swung loose, holding on by his right hand.—He was suspended in this manner a minute or two, crying for help. The sea rolled high, and by the motion of the vessel, he was at one moment suspended over the deck, and the next over the raging billows. Several seamen immediately mounted the mast for his relief, but before they could reach him, the ship lurched, he was swung far into the air over the threatening waves, lost his grasp of the rope, and fell into the sea.

A shriek passed over the deck; he himself cried in agony for help. A rope was cast over, but it did not reach him, and every moment the waves were bearing him farther and farther from the ship. The small boat was lowered, but the sea was so high that it filled with water. All stood in suspense, not knowing what to do, when a plunge was heard, and in a moment John Dawson rose to the surface, grasping with one hand the rope which had been thrown over, and swimming with all his strength towards the lost boy. The old tars waved their hats, some shouting their applause to John, others encouragement to the struggling sailor. John reached him with the rope; they were both drawn safely to the ship, by three of the men, while the officers and the remainder of the crew hung over the bulwarks in intense anxiety, encouraging and congratulating the two boys. When they reached the vessel, the merchant's son, struggled, and fainted and fell on the deck. He was carried to his hammock, and for several days was dangerously sick.—N. England Sabbath Union.

DEATH AND IMMORTALITY.

The sentence of death is already passed on every one of us, and God only knows when the sentence shall be put into execution. We say every day one to another, how suddenly this man died! how is this other taken off in the midst of his sins! how young this other has been called away! But who takes warning, who says to himself, that which is said of this man to day, may to-morrow be said of me? I will not say when I die, then there is an end of me—so far from that, then begins my happiness or misery. I will remember the judgment passed on the unfruitful tree: "Cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground?" The same sentence may be passed on me when I least think of it. It is now a question with us, as it was among the heathen,—What will become of men when they die? Our Lord Jesus Christ has told us, and we must believe him, for he came from God, no man can have the true pleasure of life, but he that is prepared for death. If I spend my life as I should do, I shall be able to say with St. Paul, "To me to die is gain."—Wilson.

POLITENESS RECIPROCATED.—A criminal was in the county jail awaiting his trial for murder, with a reasonable prospect of conviction. The candidate for sherifality called one day to see him, when the prisoner, wishing to compliment his visitor, said to him; "If I should be condemned to be hanged, I know of no one by whom I would rather be hanged than by you." The visitor, with one of his blandest smiles replied:—"And should I be elected sheriff, I know of no one I would rather hang than you."

DIFFERENT FORMS.—An old lady said her husband was very fond of peaches, and that was his only fault.

"Fault, madam!" said one, "how can you call that a fault?"

"Why, because there are different ways of eating them, sir. My husband takes them in the form of brandy!"

Some years ago a gentleman had a large dog that he had learned to send from the field to the house for any thing he might want. It happened one day that he was at work about half a mile from home, and wanted an axe; he told Caro, (the name of the dog,) to go home and get the axe; the dog started off, and after being gone a considerable time, came sneaking back, but without the axe. My father bid him go back and get the axe. The dog went the second time, and after being gone as long as before, returned bringing a heavy beetle. My father now became satisfied that the dog could not find the axe, and went himself, and found it sticking firmly in a large log and the helve gnawed from one end to the other, by the faithful animal, in trying to extricate it from the log, and being unable, he had taken the beetle as a substitute!

THE AUTUMNAL LEAF.

Thou faded leaf, it seems to be
But as of yesterday,
When thou didst flourish on that tree
In all the pride of May.
Then 'twas the merry hour of spring,
Of nature's fairest blossoming,
On field, on flower, and spray:
It promised fair—how changed the scene,
To what is now from what has been.

So fares it with life's early spring;
Hope gilds each coming day,
And sweetly does the syren sing
Her fond delusive lay;
When the young fervent heart beats high,
Whilst passion kindles in the eye,
With bright, unceasing lay;
Fair are thy tints, thou genial hour,
Yet transient as the autumn flower.

"They that Seek me Early Shall Find Me."

Come, while the blossoms of thy years are brightest
Thou youthful wanderer in a flowery maze;
Come, while tho restless heart is bounding lightest,
And Joy's pure sunbeam trembles in thy ways.
Come, while sweet thoughts like summer buds unfolding,
Waken rich feelings in the careless breast—
While yet thy hand the ephemreal wreath is holding,
Come, and secure interminable rest!

Soon will the freshness of thy days be over,
And thy free buoyancy of soul be flown;
Pleasure will fold her wing, and friend and lover
Will to the embraces of the worm have gone.
Those who now love thee, will have passed forever;
Their looks of kindneas will be lost to thee;
Thou wilt need balm to heal thy spirit's fever,
As thy sick heart broods over years to be!

Come, while the morning of thy life is glowing;
Ere the dim phantoms thou art chasing die;
Ere the gay spell which earth is round thee throwing,
Fade like the crimson from a sunset sky!
Life hath but shadows, save a promise given,
Which lights up sorrow with a fadeless ray;
Come, touch the sceptre—with a hope in heaven—
Come, turn thy spirit from the world away.

Then will the shadows of this brief existence
Seem airy nothings to thine ardent soul;
And shining brightly in the forward distance,
Will, of thy patient race, appear the goal!
Home of the weary! where in peace reposing,
The spirit lingers in unclouded bliss;
While o'er their dust the curtained grave is closing,
Who would not, EARLY, choose a lot like this?

From the New York Evangelist.

Taste not, Touch not, Handle not.

Touch not the deadly, pois'nous thing
That sparklea in the jovial bowl;
For it contains the serpent's sting
Which kills the body and the soul.

Taste not the liquid, dreadful fire
Which drinks th' immortal spirit up;
Repress the strong, the strange desire—
For Death lies coiled within the cup.

Oh! handle not the cup of woe!
Its glitt'ring drops oft change to spears
Which pierce, and lay their victims low,
Regardless of their cries and tears.

To 'touch,' to 'taste,' to 'handle' death
Distill'd—in alcoholic form—
Is madness! for its Upas breath
Instills 'the never-dying worm!"

H. S. C.

How few can calmly and joyfully contemplate the day of their dissolution! The following lines speak an admonition almost as electric as the sound of the passing bell:—

"O the sad day
When men shall shake their heads and say
Of miserable me,
Hark how he groans, look how he pants for breath,
See how he struggles in the pangs of death!
When they shall say of these mine eyes,
How hollow and how dim they be!
Look how his breast doth swell and rise
Against his potent enemy!
When some old friend shall step to my bedside,
Touch my chill face, and thence shall gently slide,
And when his next companions say,
How does he do? what hopes? shall turn away
Answering only with a lift-up hand.
Who can his fate withstand?
Then shall a gasp or two do more,
Than all my rhetoric could before,
Persuade the world to trouble me no more!"

SENSIBLE.—A shrewd farmer in the Vermont Legislature declined answering the speech of a member who was remarkable for nothing but his frothy and pugnacious impudence and self conceit, thus:—"Mr. Speaker, I can't reply to that ere speech, for it always wrenches me terribly to kick at nothing."

KNOWLEDGE FOR THE PEOPLE.

RE-ISSUE OF THE

PENNY MAGAZINE,

AT ONE HALF THE ORIGINAL PRICE!

4000 IMPERIAL OCTAVO PAGES,

2000 ENGRAVINGS!!

A COMPLETE LIBRARY WITHIN ITSELF.

THE London Penny Magazine, issued under the direction of the Society for the "Diffusion of Useful Knowledge," is, unquestionably, one of the most entertaining and useful of all the popular works which has ever appeared in any age, or in any language. Its pages embrace every subject in the wide field of human knowledge, and as every article, whether on

SCIENCE, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, LITERATURE, OR THE ARTS,

passed the careful scrutiny and critical ordeal of an able committee of learned men, the work may be placed in the hands of the youth of the country without danger or distrust. The popularity of the work in England may be judged of from the fact that during the first year of its publication of the monthly parts were disposed of. In the United States too, the work has acquired no inconsiderable popularity.

The undersigned having purchased the Stereotype plates, with the Engravings, of the London edition of the above-named work, has commenced its republication in the city of New York. The whole work consists of about 4000 large imperial octavo pages, and is Illustrated with 2000 Engravings. The American Re-issue will be printed on good paper, and well done up in handsome paper covers, and issued in

24 PARTS AT 25 CENTS EACH.

The Parts average 170 pages each, and will be published every other Saturday, till completed, commencing SATURDAY, MAY 3d, 1845. It is an exact reprint of the London edition, without alteration or abridgment.

☞ The work is sold by all dealers in Books and cheap Literature, throughout the United States. Persons wishing to obtain it regularly on its issue, will do well to hand in their names to some Bookseller in their neighborhood, at as early a day as possible. Postmasters will be entitled to ten numbers for Two Dollars.

The Sabbath Recorder.

NO "LORD'S DAY" IN THE FOURTH COMMANDMENT.

From a Phamphlet written by RICHARD WHATELY, D. D., Archbishop of Dublin.

In saying that there is no mention of the Lord's day in the Mosaic Law, I mean, that there is not only no mention of that specific festival which Christians observe, on the first day of the week, in memory of our Lord's resurrection on the morning following the Jewish Sabbath, but there is not (as has sometimes been incautiously stated) any injunction to sanctify one day in seven. Throughout the whole of the Old Testament, we never hear of keeping holy some one day in every seven, but the seventh day, as the day on which "God rested from all his work." The difference, accordingly, between the Jews and the Christians, is not a difference of reckoning; which would be a matter of no importance. Our computation is the same as theirs. They, as well as we, reckon Saturday as the seventh day of the week; and they keep it holy as the seventh day, in memory of God's resting from the work of creation; we keep holy the first day of the week, as the first, in memory of our Master's rising from the dead on the day after the Sabbath.

Now, surely it is presumptuous to say, that we are at liberty to alter a divine command, whose authority we admit to be binding on us, on the ground that it matters not whether this day or that be set apart as a Sabbath, provided we obey the divine injunction to observe a Sabbath. One of the recorded offences, we should remember, of "Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin," was his instituting a feast unto the Lord on the fifteenth day of the tenth month, "even the day that he had devised of his own heart." The Samaritans, who "worshiped they knew not what," perhaps acted on a similar principle when they built a temple on Mount Gerizim; though that was not "the place which the Lord had chosen to put his name there;" and so perhaps did Naaman the Syrian, when he proposed to "wash in the rivers of Damascus, and be clean," instead of Jordan. One river is as good as another; one mountain as good as another; one day as good as another; except when there is a divine command which specifies one; and then, it is our part not to alter, or to question, a divine command, but to consider whether it extends to us, and, if it does, to obey it.

I cannot, therefore, but think that the error was less, of those early Christians, who, conceiving the injunction relative to the Sabbath to be binding on them, obeyed it just as it was given, (provided they did not, contrary to the Apostle's injunction, Rom. xiv. 2—6, presume to judge their brethren who thought differently,) than of those who, admitting the eternal obligation of the precept, yet presume to alter it on the authority of tradition. Surely if we allow that the "Tradition of the Church" is competent to change the express commands of God, we are falling into one of the most dangerous errors of the Romanists; and this, while we loudly censure them for presuming to refuse the cup to the laity at the Lord's supper, on the authority of their Church, though Christ said to his disciples, "Drink ye all of this;" and for pleading tradition in behalf of saint-worship, &c.

But in the present case there is not even any tradition to the purpose. It is not merely that the apostles left us no command perpetuating the observance of the Sabbath, and transferring the seventh to the first; such a change certainly would have been authorized by their express injunction; and by nothing short of that; since an express divine command can be abrogated or altered only by the same power, and by the same distinct revelation, by which it was delivered. But not only is there no such apostolic injunction, than which nothing less would be sufficient; there is not even any tradition of their having made such a change; nay, more, it is even abundantly plain that they made no such change. There are, indeed, sufficiently plain marks of the Christians having observed the Lord's day as a religious festival, even from the very resurrection, John xx. 19, 26; Acts xx. 7; 1 Cor. xvi. 2; Rev. i. 10; but so far were they from substituting this for the Jewish Sabbath, that all of them who were Jews, actually continued, themselves, to observe not only the Mosaic Sabbath, but the whole of the Levitical Law; while to the Gentile converts they said, "Let no man judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath day; which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is Christ."

And if we come down to later ages of the Church, we not only find no allusion to any such tradition, but we find the contrary distinctly implied, both in the writings of the early fathers, and in those of the most eminent of the founders of our Reformation. For instance, in Cranmer's Catechism, published in 1548, viz. the first year of Edward VI., we find the following passage:—"And here note, good children, that the Jewes in the Old Testament were commanded to keep the Sabbath day, and they observed it every seventh day, called the Sabbat or Satterday. But we Christian men in the New Testament are not bound to such commandments of Moses' Law concerning difference of times, days, and meats, but have liberty and freedom to use other days for our Sabbath dayes, therein to hear the word of God, and keep an holy rest. And, therefore, that this Christian liberty may be kept and maintained, we now keep no more Sabbath on Saturday as the Jews do; but we observe the Sundays, and certain other days, as the magistrates do judge convenient, whom in this thing we ought to obey."

By the authority of the Magistrate, Cranmer evidently meant that of the Church; the government of which would, of course, be in the hands of the civil magistrate, in such a church as our Reformers contemplated; viz. a strictly National Church in which each subject of the State is necessarily, as such, a member of the Church, also. In fact, the notion I am contending against, seems, as far as I can collect, to have originated with the Puritans not much more than 200 years ago; and to have been for a considerable time confined to them; though it was subsequently adopted by several members of our Church.

INTERVIEW BETWEEN A CONVERTED JEW AND HIS FATHER.

There is something very touching in the following narrative of an interview between a converted Israelite and his father, which took place during a fair at Frankfurt-on-the-Oder. Mr. Neander, the writer of it, is now engaged in a mission in this country. Mr. Bellson, whose name is mentioned in it, was a missionary of one of the London Societies. The narrative was originally taken from the Jewish Intelligence. It will be read with interest by both Jews and Christians.

July 11. This evening I was informed that my father had arrived. Several Jews collected in front of our lodgings, but remained quiet. A Jew of my acquaintance requested me to visit my father, but I was to go quite alone, and without the knowledge of my friends. I mentioned, however, the matter to Bro. Bellson, who dissuaded me from going there alone at night, as it might occasion a tumult among the Jews. I wrote accordingly a letter to my father, in which I briefly expressed my feelings, and asked, whether he would not permit me to bring a friend with me; but received no answer.

July 12. Mr. Bellson and myself went out to call on my father. We found the door of his room locked. We then went towards a street where we hoped to find the Jew I knew, above alluded to. I looked around, and my heart was moved on seeing my old father leaning against a house, and looking fixedly and mournfully at me. I trembled, and said to Brother Bellson, "Look, there is my father!" My father changed his posture, and went towards the back of the house. I followed alone; and as soon as he was aware of my presence, he stood still, supporting his feeble body on a chest. I took hold of his hand, and exclaimed, "Father!" He was silent; his look assumed more of tenderness. At last he said, "If your mother saw you now, it would be the death of her. From the time of our receiving the distressing news, her eyes have seldom been without tears. Our outward circumstances are very good, but our heart is broken. Alas, what a child we have lost in you!" My heart sunk within me under a weight of sadness, and, after a long interval of silence, I exclaimed nearly as follows:—"Oh, how painful it is to me to find you, my parents, incapable of comprehending that I have only now learnt to know and to love the true living God, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the God who is my Creator Preserver, and Redeemer."

He.—"Do not speak to me of this subject at this time and in this place, and listen to what I now command you; I will only devote one hour to private conversation with you; you may fix a time when you can come. But I will not go to your lodging. I dare not do so on account of my large family, many members of which are here."

Our meeting was fixed for five o'clock in the afternoon, I awrited the hour in prayer and supplication to the Lord. I entered his room; he locked the door. He looked very sad, but still there were traces of paternal love visble in his face. Having taken a seat at my side, I expressed my sorrow for his conduct towards me hitherto—that he considered me as a dead and lost son—but told him that, under the weight of that distress, I found my consolation in the sure belief that God is my father. On this, my father asked why I had embraced the Christian faith.

I.—"Because in this faith I have life, peace, and true, eternal salvation."

He.—"But what is your belief! Do you not believe in more than one God?"

I now acquainted him with the principles of my faith, which was the faith of Abraham, David, and all the patriarchs of the Old Teetament. The Lord enabled me to do it with cheerfulness; blessed be his holy name!

After I had been speaking about ten minutes, he seemed to sink into a deep reverie; we were both silent for a while, and I looked up to him who is great and mighty.

At last he spoke in an impressive and earnest manner: "The Hebrew letter you sent me fifteen months ago, and which I still preserve, continues to be a marvel to me. I showed it also to Rabbi I——, in S——. But beside us and your mother, your letter has not been read by any one. You quote so many beautiful scripture passages, and assure us that you believe in the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob."

I.—"Oh, father! If you would only become acquainted with some dear pious Christians, you would learn, to your astonishment, that such are indeed children of God. These souls have a very great love for our Thorah, and are also children of Abraham."

I then communicated to him something of my own experience, which appeared very remarkable to him. I cannot describe my feelings on sitting thus close to my old dear father, and I exclaimed, "Tell me, father, do you hate me? Oh tell me, that neither yourself nor my mother will curse me any more!"

He.—"We have been very much irritated against you; and if, two years ago, you had come near me, I could have stabbed you in cold blood; but I console myself with thinking that there are more parents who must make the same experience; and after all you remain our child, and our heart is moved whenever we think of you. But your mother must not yet see you, without having been prepared for it; she would not be able to bear the sight of you; but write frequently, and I will then also answer your letters."

I could have exclaimed Hallelujah; this was more than I had expected.

Somebody knocked; my father went and opened the door, and some Jews of his acquaintance entered. They remained silent, but looked at me with astonishment. I was much agitated; I therefore asked my father's leave to visit him again, to which he answered in a kind tone, "Yes;" and I left the room with praise and thanks.

July 13.—After having preached the Gospel to several descendants of Abraham, I went to my father. There were some other Jews present, and my father was busy packing goods which he had bought. On my saluting him, he shook hands with me, and sighed, but did not speak. I asked whether I should leave, as he was so occupied, to which he replied, "If you have nothing particular to do, you may as well remain here, I shall soon have done." I then assisted him in packing, and noted down several things for him.

This business having been finished, he sat down to supper, and began to speak with me of the wisdom of the rabbies. He then asked me why I did not believe in those things. And on my discussing the subject with him, and drawing his attention to the doctrines of the Scriptures, both the Old and New, in their holiness and heavenly wisdom, he did not speak for some time, until at last he exclaimed, "I cannot comprehend your faith."

Our conversatioa then turned on sundry family matters, and he soon began again to lament the heavy blow my conversion had caused my family, &c., &c. I expressed my sorrow at their grief, but felt that they had no cause for it, it being my full conviction that I shall be saved through the grace and tender mercy of God, as manifested in the atoning death of the Messiah our Redeemer.

While he now sat in deep meditation, leaning his head on his hand, the Jews present began inveighing against me with much bitterness and blasphemy. My father then rose, took my hand and said, "Come, let us speak a few words with each other alone."

I followed him to a large open space at the back of the house. When there, he took my hand and said, with great emotion, "Marc! for I will still call you by that name, Marc! I had taken the resolution never to see you any more. Myself and your mother said in public, 'We have no more a son called Marc—he is dead!' But I cannot repress the feelings of my heart; for although deeply wounded, it still tells me you are my child; and believe me, I cannot bear to hear you scoffed at. I now tell you, that our heart still clings to you, our first-born son, who has cost us so much. Go, therefore, now, and come again to-morrow evening, that we may take leave of each other, but give me a letter to take with me to your mother, and say only that you believe in the God of our fathers." He ceased, and his eyes filled with tears. I could have sunk down, I was so agitated; I could only exclaim, "Father! my father!" and fell into his arms.

At last he began again in a low voice, "But tell me candidly, do you feel happy in your faith! I know that I cannot induce you to become a Jew again. If that were possible, my letter and my paternal promises would have effected it two years and a half ago."

I again declared to him my happiness in Christ Jesus our Lord, and we then parted cheerfully.

The 14th, in the afternoon, I met my father alone. He took the letters for my relations. He was very much occupied, and seemed rather reserved. I felt very much depressed. After some conversation, we embraced each other and parted with tears. My last words to him were, "I will remember you, dear father, before the throne of God!"

MAHOMETAN CREED.

A catechism has been printed at Constantinople, for the instruction of children edueated in the Mahometan religion. It forms a curious commentary on the tenets of Islamism. The pricipal articles to which the young Mussulman is required to give his assent, are comprised in the following declarations:—"I believe in the books which have been delivered from heaven to the prophets. In this manner was the kornn given to Mahomet, the pentateuch to Moses, the psalter to David, and the gospel to Jesus. I believe in the prophets, and the miracles which they performed. Adam was the first prophet, and Mahomet the last. I believe that for the space of fifty thousand years, the righteous shall repose under the shade of the terrestial paradise, and the wicked shall be exposed naked to the burning rays of the sun. I believe in the bridge Sirat, which passes over the bottomless pit of Hell. It is as fine as a hair, and as sharp as a sabre. All must pass over it, and the wicked shall be thrown off. I believe in the water pools of Paradise. Each of the prophets has, in Paradise, a basin for his own use; the water is whiter than milk, and sweeter than honey. On the ridges of the pools are vessels to drink out of, and they are bordered with stars. I believe in Heaven and Hell. The inhabitants of the former, know no want, and the Houris who attend them are never afflicted with sickness. The floor of Paradise is musk, the stones are silver, and the cement gold. The damned are, on the contrary, tormented with fire, and by voracious and poisonous animals."

THANKSGIVING DAY.

The following thoughts were prepared for a Vermont paper in view of this approach of the time-honored festival in that State. They are equally appropriate to all the States, and we trust will be read with special profit just at this present time.

"Thanksgiving! 'tis a day of joy—
The absent child has come;
The mother clasps her darling boy,
And bids him welcome home."

This interesting Festival is again approaching. It revives a thousand interesting recollections in the mind of the sons and daughters of New England. Wherever they wander, they remember the day, and recall a thousand scenes with which its enjoyment has been connected.

The manner in which this Festival is kept, is not always conducive to piety or good morals. To many, the return of the day is hailed as the signal for all kinds of levity and sinful indulgence. In such cases it becomes exceedingly injurious. For where a religious festival is made to sanction sinful indulgence of any kind, it becomes a powerful agent of corruption. Christian parents and ministers should look to this matter in season, and endeavor to turn the attention of the young to the great moral and religious principles which the appointment of such a day is designed to recognize and illustrate.

Ministers may do much towards securing a right observance of this day, by efforts to make the services of the day attractive to the children and youth of their congregations. The subject should be so chosen as to engage the minds of the youth in the moral and religious history of New England. Facts and reasonings should be brought forward to show how "righteousness exalteth a nation," and how sin becomes the reproach and ruin of nations who indulge in it. A little effort and preparation, might render the public service on Thanksgiving day as attractive to the children, as any Sunday School Anniversary.

The music of the sanctuary might be prepared with special reference to this object, and the effect of the service might be to impress principles of duty and action upon the minds of the young, which, in after years, would be with them as safeguards from vice, and motives to virtue, amid all their wanderings, and every temptation.

"WHAT WILL OTHER PEOPLE SAY?"

Mrs. Child, in one of her letters, makes the following observations, which we think are well worth heeding:—

"There is a false necessity with which we industriously surround ourselves; a circle that never expands; whose iron never changes to ductile gold. This is the presence of public opinion; the intolerable restraint of conventional forms. Under this despotic influence, women check their best influence, suppress their noblest feelings, conceal their highest thoughts. Each longs for full communion with other souls, but dares not give utterance to its yearnings. What hinders? The fear of what Mrs. Clark or the Sheltons will say; or the anathema of some Synod; or the fashion of some clique; or the laugh of some club; or the misrepresentation of some political party. Thou art afraid of thy neighbor, and knowest not that he is equally afraid of thee. He has bound thy hands, and thou hast fettered his feet. It were wise for both to snap the imaginary bonds, and walk onward unshackled. If thy heart yearns to love, be loving; if thou wouldst free mankind, be free; if thou wouldst have a brother frank to you, be frank to him.

"'But what will people say?'

"What does it concern thee what they say?—Thy life is not in their hands. They can give nothing of real value, nor take from thee any thing that is worth the having. Satan may promise thee all the kingdoms of the earth, but he has not an acre of it to give. He may offer much as the price of his worship, bus there is a flaw in all his title-deeds.

"'But I shall be misunderstood, misrepresented.'

"What if thou art? They will throw stones at what is above them, receive the missiles back again by the law of gravity, and lucky are they if they bruise not their own faces. Would that I could persuade all who read this to be truthful and free; to cast off like ropes of sand, all fear of sects and parties, of clans and classes.

"What is there of joyful freedom in our social intercourse? We meet to see each other; and not a peep do we get under the thick, stifling veil which each carries about him. We visit, to employ ourselves; and our host takes away all our freedom, while we destroy his own. If the host wishes to ride or walk, he dares not, lest it seem impolite to the guest. If the guest wishes to read or sleep, he dares not, lest it seem impolite to the host; so they both remain slaves, and feel it a relief to part company. A few individuals, mostly in foreign lands, arrange this matter with wiser freedom. If a visitor arrive, they say, 'I am busy to-day. If you wish to ride, there are horses and saddles in the stable; if you wish to read, there are books in the parlor; if you want to work, the men are raking in the field; if you want to romp, the children are at play in the court; if you want to talk to me, I can be with you at such an hour. Go where you please, and while you stay, do as you please.'"

A FREE RELIGIOUS PRESS.—Awhile since the Turks established a Censorship, which they extended to even religious books, and all such had to be examined by the Armenian and Greek Patriarchs; but recently they have declared that it only applies to political books, and the Censor has just given free admission to forty different religious works.

THE YOUNG STUDENT.

In the early life of P., while he was studying at R., it happened that, owing to the disturbance of the country, his parents, who were living at a distance, fell at one time into such painful difficulties that they were not able to send their son his usual means of support; and at the same time death deprived him of his chief friend in the place where he was. He was now without money, or the means of obtaining any: he did not know even how to provide himself with the greatest necessaries. One day early in the morning, with a very sad heart, he was passing through a church in the town, which stood always open. He found it empty; and throwing himself on his knees before the altar, he prayed God would show him some way out of his distress, so that his pressing need might be supplied.

As he rose and went towards the door, which led to the principal street, a poor old infirm woman leaning on crutches, came into the church, and asked him for alms. P. had only one shilling left, which which he had thought to provide himself with food for that day; but he gave it to the poor woman, with these silent words of prayer: "O Lord, I have besought thee for help, and thou causest even the last shilling I have to be asked of me: yet thou knowest a way to help. I know not any." With tearful eyes he passed on; and just as he went out of the church-door, a noble looking man rode by, who, at the same moment dropped his glove. P. took it up, and modestly gave it to its owner. The gentleman, surprised at this attention from a school boy, asked his name. He told it; and the stranger inquired if he were a son or a relation of a famous surgeon of that name. He answered that he was his son; and the gentleman immediately asked him to dine at his lodgings, saying, "Your father safely performed a dangerous operation for me, and next to God, I owe my life to him."

My friend bowed, and the stranger rode on. At the appointed time he went as he had been invited to do, and was most kindly and hosptiably received. When he took leave, the stranger took his hand, and put into it 6 pieces of gold, saying, "Students often have little expenses for which they do not like to apply to their kind parents. Take this trifle from me, as a token of gratitude towards your father."

Surely in his after-life P. would never forget his early walk that morning, and his prayer in the church, nor would ever think of it without thankfully rejoicing that when the poor woman asked for his last shilling, he had believed that it was God who required it of him; and had trusted that God was able to help him, though he himself could see no way out of his distress.

TRAVELING OVER THE ANDES.

L. C. Picket, Esq., United States Charge d'Affairs at Lima, in a letter to the National Institute, remarks:

"I have traveled five days at a time among the Andes, without seeing a human creature, except those with me, and along a track (not a road) which for the most part serpentized over almost perpendicular precipices, or through a forest literally impervious, by cutting one's way at every step. Provisions, luggage, and everything, was carried on men's backs; and my saddle horse was a stout mulatto, (part Indian,) whom I occasionally mounted, when tired of walking. I felt at first a decided repugnance to this kind of equitation, and could not think of using a fellow man for a beast of burthen; but the necessity of the case and the custom of the country, got the better of my scruples, as they had of more conscientious men, no doubt; and as the sillero, (chairman,) as he was called, told me it was his occupation to carry Christians over the mountains, and solicited the job, I struck a bargain with him, and the price was ten dollars through, I riding about half the time. This quadrupedal biped, if so he may be called, turned out to be a very sure-footed and trusty animal, and carried me in perfect safety to the end of my route. The modus equitandi is this: instead of a saddle, a very light chair is used, which the chairman slings upon his back, and the traveler's face when seated in it, is to the north, should he be going to the south, and vice versa. It is necessary that when mounted he should himself be very accurately balanced, for there are many places in passing which a false step on the part of the sillero might cause a tumble down a precipice, which would be fatal both to him, and to his rider."

WHERE SHALL I SPEND ETERNITY?—A lady had written on a card, and placed it on the top of an hour glass in her garden house, the following simple verse from the poems of J. Clare. It was when the flowers were in their highest glory:—

To think of summers yet to come,
That I am not to see!
To think a weed is yet to bloom
From dust that I shall be!

The next morning she found the following lines, in pencil, on the back of the same card. Well would it be if all would ponder upon the question, act in view of, and make preparations for an unknown state of existence:—

"To think when heaven and earth are fled,
And times and seasons o'er,
When all that CAN die shall be dead,
That I must die no more!
Oh, where will then my portion be?
Where shall I spend ETERNITY?"

HISTORICAL RICHES.—The library of David B. Warden, formerly American Consul at Paris, which was bought by the New York Legislature, has reached Albany. The Journal says the collection embraces the full histories of the early Jesuite missionaries, of the first settlement of our north-western Territories, now States, by the French adventurers, and, in fact, that of nearly every State and Territory in the Union, from its discovery.

LAW AND GOSPEL.

NUMBER THREE.

We have seen that Law grows out of the relation existing between those that are affected by it. Now as ALL have sinned, and the WHOLE WORLD become guilty before God, (Rom. 3: 9—19,) it follows, that the law which is violated by sin must grow out of that relation, which God holds—not to a part, but—to the whole world of mankind. That particular law, or code of duty, which is founded on the gospel, may, in some modified sense, be considered as having reference to all mankind. Nevertheless, as there could be no room for the gospel until men were already sinners, there must be some antecedent law which they have broken.

The relation, which God established with the Israelites at Mount Sinai, will not furnish the law we are in quest of; for that relation was with but a single nation. In it originated a certain service, which was the symbolic designation of the gospel, or the mere illustration of it by pictures to those who were yet children, Gal. 4: 3; this service can therefore no more be the law which gives the knowledge of sin, than the gospel itself is. Besides, the Apostle expressly teaches, that sin was in the world before its introduction. Rom. 5: 13.

But there is a relation which men hold to God, of which creation itself is the foundation. This relation cannot be better described, than by saying, it is that of creature to Creator. No other can be antecedent to it, for it is coeval with our very existence. It is one which cannot be destroyed except by annihilation. Whatever other relations may be established, whether here or hereafter, this remains the same. Other relations may cease, they may vanish away, but this is as abiding as our existence. This is a relation, which every human being sustains to his Maker.

Out of this relation grows the law, which is violated by sin. This law obviously consists of two parts;—one, prescribing our duties to God as the creatures of his hand;—the other, prescribing our duties to one another as fellow creatures. These latter duties, however, are to be performed out of deference to God's authority; so that when they are neglected, we do as truly sin against him, as when we disregard the other part of the law. Sin is therefore a contempt offered to that relation which we sustain to God as his creatures, by violating the duties which grow out of it.

It seems then that the law which gives the knowledge of sin, is founded in the natural relation we sustain to our Creator. The religion which it enjoins may therefore be called Natural Religion; but the more common designation is Moral Law.

It is proper here to pass some strictures upon certain definitions, which have been given of the Moral Law. By some it has been defined to be "that law which is founded in the nature and fitness of things." Whether those who employ this definition, attach any precise meaning to the terms of which it consists, may be questioned. But be that as it may, we conceive that when the terms are analyzed, they will be found to convey about the same meaning, as that furnished by our own definition. For what is the nature of things, unless that nature which God gave them in creation? And what do we mean by the fitness of things, except that just adaptation they have to one another, by reason of the relation in which God originally placed them? If such be not the import of the terms, we know not what it is; and we are left as much in the dark, as if no definition had been given.

Others have said, that the moral law is "that which is founded in the eternal and unalterable relations of things." But how there can be eternal and unalterable relations of things, that have not eternally and unalterably existed, we do not comprehend. Men sustain a relation to one another as fellow creatures; but this relation has not existed from eternity. Man sustains a relation to God as his creature. But though God is eternal, man is not; therefore the relation they hold to each other is not. Besides, the definition is vague, because it does not specify what kind of relation is meant. The moral law is founded in a particular kind of relation.

Others again have said, that the moral law is "eternal truth." But what idea can one form of truth apart from the subject in which it resides? Truth is eternal, if the subject in which it resides is eternal. God is eternal, and the truth concerning him is eternal. But the moral law takes cognizance of man, as well as of God. Is man eternal? Indeed this definition is extremely vague; we hardly know what it means.

A more common definition of the moral law is, that it is "that law which is ascertained by reason." That the moral law is reasonable, there can be no question. But it is one thing for a duty to appear reasonable, after it is once discovered, and another thing for reason to make the discovery of it. A reference to the heathen nations shows, that they have not been very forward to obtain knowledge of their duty. But even if it be admitted, that their reason discovers some of the obligations of the law, it still fails to furnish them with a complete code of morals; and it is well known, that by their systems of religion, some of the worst crimes are exalted into the highest duties. But this reference to the heathen may be objected to, as not fairly meeting the argument, inasmuch as their reason is depraved, while right reason would not fail to discover the whole law. This, however, is treading on ground that we know nothing about. Adam alone could give information on this point; for no other has been in a situation to know what right reason is capable of doing. The reason of the Christian, having received all its light from divine revelation, is not competent to decide.

The truth is, that the moral law being adjusted, and exactly adapted, to the relation subsisting between Creator and creature, no finite reason is adequate to discover its duties. If finite reason could determine the duties of the law, then it must be able to fathom the divine nature; for this law takes cognizance of the divine nature, and settles the duties which are suitable to it. But who by searching can find out God? His nature is incomprehensible; and if by searching we cannot find out his nature, how presumptuous to undertake to determine what are the duties due to it. The thing is impossible. He alone, who comprehends his own nature, can settle the matter. Hence the indispensable necessity of a revelation from God.

We conclude then that the moral law is not ascertainable by human reason; but when it is once ascertained for us by revelation, it is found to harmonize so perfectly with our nature, and with the nature of God, so far as he has discovered himself to us in other respects; and hence to be so exactly adapted to the relation we sustain to him, that reason cannot help but approve, and "consent unto the law, that it is good." These definitions, upon which we have offered our strictures, appear to us vague and unsatisfactory; vain jargon, calculated to bewilder, but not to instruct. *

BAPTIST TRIENNIAL CONVENTION.

A Special Meeting of the Baptist Triennial Convention was held in New York on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of last week. The occasion of the meeting was the recent secession of the Southern portion of the Baptist denomination from the Convention; the object was twofold, to adopt a new Constitution for the more successful management of the Convention's affairs, and also to raise funds for the liquidation of its debts. Both of these objects were very harmoniously and happily attained.

A new Constitution was adopted, which changes the title of the Triennial Convention to that of "the American Baptist Missionary Union," the single object of which "shall be to diffuse the knowledge of the religion of Jesus Christ, by means of missions, throughout the world." The Union is organized upon the plan of most of the national Societies now in operation, such as the American Bible and Tract Societies. It makes money contributions the basis of representation, and relies mainly upon the income from life-memberships for support. The price of a life-membership is fixed at $100; and it is expected that most of the churches will make their pastors and other worthy brethren life members, while those who are able and interested in the work will make themselves and their friends life members. By such an organization it is hoped not only to raise funds more easily, but also to prevent all collision between the different sections of the denomination, particularly the northern and southern sections. Of course it is not possible for the Union at once to commence the transaction of business. It is necessary in the first place to obtain a charter from some State, and in the second place to have the property of the Triennial Convention transferred to the Union. Resolutions were therefore passed directing the acting Board to procure from the Legislature of Massachusetts an act of incorporation, and also stating that if this act is secured the Convention will transfer to the Union all its books, property, rights, interests, and duties, at a meeting to be held on the Tuesday before the third Thursday in May, 1846.

In regard to the old debt of $40,000, it was stated in one of the sessions that $20,000 had been collected in New England, $2,300 in Albany, and $8,000 in New York, leaving only about $10,000 to be raised. Immediately upon this statement there was a scene of most pleasant rivalry among the clergy and laity to pay off the debt. Several missionaries were made life members by $100 contributions from their friends, and in about an hour one hundred and twenty-two persons gave in their names as life members. Thus the residue of the debt, and an overplus of $1200 was raised on the spot. Other large contributions were made during the meeting of the Convention.

Several missionaries were present during the meeting, and added much to the interest by occasional remarks. Messrs. Kincaid and Abbot spoke frequently. Dr. Judson spoke to the audience directly once or twice, and several times through the medium of a second person. This course on the part of Mr. Judson is rendered necessary by a complaint of the lungs and throat with which he is afflicted, which makes it imprudent for him to attempt to address an audience for any considerable time. In other respects his health is good, and he is said to be more competent and disposed than ever to prosecute his work of philology and biblical translation.

REVIVALS.—We are rejoiced to learn by private letters from different sections of the country, that the Lord is graciously reviving his work in several of our churches, and that considerable numbers have been brought to repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. We hope to be able to give the particulars in due time. Meanwhile the mercy drops which have already fallen ought to encourage our prayers for a more plentiful shower. The Lord's arm is not shortened, neither is his ear heavy. Only let his children bring all their tithes and offerings into his storehouse, and he will pour them out a blessing that there shall not be room to contain.

SUNDAY DESECRATION IN ENGLAND.

"One Sunday lately, the large number of nearly 7,000 children, belonging to the Dissenting Sunday Schools in Birmingham, visited Darby. They came in 112 carriages, and formed two enormous trains, and left in about three hours, after going through the Arboretum."

[Border Watch, October 30, 1845.

I have on a former occasion stated my conviction, that railways are destined to demolish the fence which law and custom have in this country hitherto preserved around the Sunday Sabbath. But of all the instances which I have yet observed indicating the progress of this desecration, the above is the most remarkable.—Monster Sunday trains, on different lines, have previously proved how many there are whose regard for that day is less than their love of pleasure. But that 7,000 Sunday scholars, leaving behind all that demands its sanctification, should proceed thus together in search of amusement, marks an epoch in our annals of evil. For however much the Church is to be condemned, that by refusing to return to God's appointment, she places the hopes of the Sabbath-keeper in the ruin of the present apostacy, it is still a melancholy spectacle to see those who profess to regard the first day of the week as the Sabbath of the Lord, and having the care of young immortals, making gigantic efforts for its simultaneous desecration by their pupils. One Sunday 7,000 children are taught to believe that day the Sabbath, and the next Sunday they are whirled along in search of pleasure, in contempt of the precept in which they are being instructed. Seven thousand precious souls impregnated with falsehood, and seven thousand consciences next taught to disregard the lesson imparted as true, what must be the form of trees grown from twigs thus bent and unbent? What the baleful fruit they shall hereafter bear, and shed profusely over our sinful land? J. A. B.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The cause of missions among the benighted nations, is evidently becoming of more interest among the friends of the Sabbath in this country, than at any former period. A deep feeling seems to pervade the minds of very many of our brethren upon this subject. The burden of their anxious inquiry is, whether the knowledge of the only Sabbath of God's appointment shall forever be concealed, or blotted out of remembrance among the heathen. Shall the millions of China, to whom the way of access is now open, be instructed in papal traditions rather than in the commandments of God? Shall Protestant missionaries forever continue to plant the seeds of Popery, by propagating a Romish festival as a Christian institution, among the converts of benighted lands? It is not enough, that we talk of the Abyssinians, and other nations of Eastern Africa, where the knowledge of the seventh day is not quite forgotten; the Gospel must be preached to all nations. But how can the power of the Gospel be fully appreciated where the law against which we have rebelled, is mutilated or misconstrued? We say to the friends of the holy and honorable law of God—to the friends of a pure doctrine in the church of Christ—to the friends of the heathen—awake to the important crisis which must sooner or later overtake all Protestant missionary operations, if the Sabbath be not REMEMBERED. Let the present missionaries of India—of the islands of the sea—and of whatever part of the earth they may be—take heed that they do not sow tares among the wheat, which at a future day they may reap in sorrow, when even with sighing and many tears the evil may not be corrected. To the friends of the Sabbath we would say, let the ark of the Lord move onward. What have you to fear? The promises of the Holy One of Israel are to those who do and TEACH even the least of these commandments, that they shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven; while he who breaketh the least, and TEACHETH men so, shall be called the least in that kingdom. What a rebuke to the long-devoted missionary among the heathen, to hear from the lips of the glorious King, who, coming with his reward with him, shall repeat the oft-read censure, Ye have made void the law of God by your traditions; in vain have ye worshiped me, TEACHING for doctrine the commandments of men. LUTHER.

BAPTIST MISSION AMONG THE KARENS.

At a public meeting on Tuesday evening, Rev. E. T. Abbott, who has been labouring among the Karens for ten years with great success, gave a very interesting account of the progress of Christianity among this people, whom he found without any form of government, any written language, or any religion. From one to two thousand of these people dwell in Arracan, now under the protection of the British government, and many others in the mountainous districts. While Mr. Abbott was in Rangoon, during the rebellion of 1837, he met with a young Karen, who urged him to go out into the country and preach the gospel to his friends. He obeyed this call, as he could not then accomplish any thing in Rangoon, and having accompanied him some three days' journey, they found the man, since known as "the young chief," but then wild as a mountain deer. He soon embraced Christianity, learned to read, began to preach, and multitudes from the whole country thronged to hear him. Additional native teachers and preachers were sent out, and through their efforts the truths of the Gospel were diffused widely through that region. In 1839 Mr. A. crossed the mountains into Arracan, where he baptized several hundred converts. Christianity had crossed the mountains before him, by means of a young pedlar, who had met with some Christian in Burmah from whom he obtained an epitome of the Gospel in Burmese, which he could read, and on his return to his native village in Arracan read it to the people, who all immediately embraced the truth. The old men there had a tradition, he said, that white strangers would come in a golden ship and bring them a religion in a white book, and they believed this Tract, on white paper, must contain that religion. The Karens in Arracan have now, under the care of Missionaries, 26 churches, about 3,100 communicants, two ordained native pastors, and 23 native preachers; are very anxious for instruction. Hundreds of youth, says Mr. Abbott, would be placed immediately under the care of competent teachers, if provided. Mr. Abbott had been treated with noble generosity by officers of the British army, many of whom aid in support of the Mission schools.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE DECISION OF THE SUPREME COURT.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Being unacquainted with the determination of the denomination in regard to testing the law of 1839 for the relief of Sabbath-keepers, by a farther appeal, I had thought of suggesting the inquiry, whether the constitutionality of the decision has been a matter of proper consideration? It appears from the Opinion of the Supreme Court, that the unconstitutionality of the decision in the court below was not before them; but the reliance was principally, if not wholly, placed on the Statute, and the opinion applied entirely to that view. It was formerly the case, that suits were not permitted to proceed by many magistrates on the Sabbath, against Sabbath-keepers, merely from the constitutional barrier thrown in their way; but since we have relied mainly on the Statute, and the decisions of the courts have been against us, prosecutions have become more common and aggravating; and although there can be no objection to an effort for the amendment of the Statute so as to give the protection required, still, if the decision be unconstitutional, the appeal is also desirable, as it will cover all the cases that are arising under this decision.

The clause in the Constitution to which I refer is as follows, viz:—

Art. VII. Sec. 3. "The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind. But the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the State."

In what possible light can this constitutional guaranty be viewed, if our religious profession of regarding the Sabbath as dedicated to the worship of God cannot be enjoyed, but we must be compelled to answer to suits at law, and thereby be obliged to defer our worship, or suffer the consequences, while laws are made to protect first-day observers from such aggravation, thereby establishing a preference, contrary to the express provisions of the Constitution? In the first place, the law which makes Sunday "dies non juridicus" is either unconstitutional, or the observers of the Sabbath should be equally protected, and the seventh day be made "dies non juridicus," to all such as observe it. This view of the subject presents a defense independent of the arguments drawn from the Statute on which we have so confidently relied, and must, in the hands of an experienced and capable counsellor, be powerful. J.

The foregoing article, in connection with the Law of 1839, and the Opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Maxson vs. Annas, was handed to a gentleman of the legal profession in this city, who has given the following as his opinion in the case:—

I do not think that the 3d section of the 7th article meets the case. What the framers of the Constitution had in their minds, and what they intended to prevent, was, that interference with religious profession and worship which is universal in the old world. The Constitution prevents the Legislature from passing any law impairing the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, but does not require it to pass laws in order to secure such exercise and enjoyment. No legislation in favor of the first day of the week could, by implication drawn from the Constitution, be extended to the seventh. It might contain provisions in favor of persons observing the first day, which would amount to "discrimination or preference," but that would not extend those provisions to the case of persons observing the seventh day. The only effect would be to make the law itself unconstitutional and void.

Neither do I think the Statute sufficient to meet the case. The difficulty is that the law only forbids the "service" and "execution" of process, &c., &c. These two words have a very definite meaning, which no proper construction can extend so as to cover the rendition of a judgment.

The course I would recommend would be, not to proceed any farther with the litigation, but to apply to the Legislature, and have this "badly-drawn law," as Chief Justice Bronson very properly calls it, amended so as to do in fact, what it was no doubt intended to do—place persons observing the seventh day on the same footing with regard to that day of the week, as the law now places all other persons in regard to the first day.

SUNDAY SCHOOL FAST.—Monday last was set apart by the friends of Sunday Schools in New York as a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer, on account of the manifest decline of piety among the various schools, and the evident lack of interest among teachers. A public meeting was held, at which several clergymen and missionaries were present and spoke upon the subject. The acknowledged decline was attributed indirectly to a want of proper exertion on the part of teachers, and a failure to cherish that prayerful spirit which is necessary to the success of any good cause, and this especially. All the exercises were of an interesting character, and undoubtedly contributed much to awaken new interest among the large number of teachers present.

ACCIDENT TO DR. BEECHER.—We learn from the Cincinnati Gazette, that on Sunday evening last, this venerable man met with a serious accident. While on his way to church his horse ran away with him, the buggy was dashed to pieces, and the Doctor pitched upon his back with great violence. He lay some three quarters of an hour senseless. For some five hours he had great difficulty in breathing. His bruises are merely muscular, and the physicians, we hear, say there is no danger.

NEW SHIP.—A beautiful ship, to be called the NIAGARA, was launched last week from the ship-yard of Geo. Greenman & Co., Mystic Bridge, Ct. She was built for the house of Stanton & Frost, of this city, and is intended for the Liverpool trade. She is about 750 tons burthen, 150 feet on deck, 33 feet beam, 21 feet hold, 7 1-2 feet between decks, and is of Virginia white oak. This is believed to be the largest vessel ever built in Connecticut, and for strength and beauty of model is not surpassed by any ship of her class.

COMMUTATION.—Gov. Wright has decided to commute the sentences of John Van Steenburgh and Edward O'Conner, who were condemned to be hung for their participancy in the affair which resulted the death of Sheriff Steele, of Delaware County. They are to be imprisoned in the State Prison during the terms of their respective lives.

FRUITS OF TEMPERANCE.—The following account of himself was given at a temperance meeting in Alabama, by Col. Lemanousky, who had been for twenty-three years a soldier in the army of Napoleon Bonaparte. It is a grand testimony to the value of temperate habits. The Colonel rose before the audience, tall, erect, and vigorous, with the glow of health upon his cheek, and said:—

"You see before you a man 70 years old. I have fought 200 battles, have 14 wounds on my body, have lived thirty days on horseflesh, with the bark of trees for my bread, snow and ice for my drink, the canopy of heaven for my covering, without stockings or shoes on my feet, and with only a few rags for my clothing. In the deserts of Egypt I have marched for days with a burning sun upon my naked head, feet blistered in the scorching sand, and with eyes, nostrils, and mouth, filled with dust, and with a thirst so tormenting, that I have opened the veins of my arm and sucked my own blood! Do you ask how I could survive all these horrors? I answer, that next to the kind providence of God, I owe my preservation, my health, and vigor, to this fact, that I never drank a drop of spirituous liquor in my life; and," continued he, "Baron Larry, chief of the medical staff of the French army, has stated it as a fact, that the 6,000 survivors who returned safely from Egypt, were all of them men who abstained from the use of ardent spirits."

CHINA.—Dr. Parker writes to the American Board, that the Missionaries are already beginning to witness the beneficial effects of the Memorial of the High Commissioner, advising his Majesty, the Emperor, that no reason exists why the religion of the high God of Heaven should not be tolerated in the trading parts of the Empire. Great numbers of religious books are called for; and some of the high officers of the Kingdom are now receiving and reading them. Public Christian worship is now maintained without hindrance, in any of the ports which are opened to foreigners for trade.

LAST WORDS OF EMINENT MEN.

The last words of dying men often furnish instructive commentaries upon their habits of thought and life. The following are striking illustrations of the truth. Who can read them without offering a prayer that he may die the death of the righteous?

"Head of the army."—NAPOLEON.

"It matters not how the head layeth."—SIR WALTER RALEIGH.

"I must sleep now."—BYRON.

"Kiss me, Hardy."—NELSON.

"Don't give up the ship."—LAWRENCE.

"I'll be damned if I don't believe I'm dying!"—CHANCELLOR THURLOW.

"Don't let that awkward squad fire over my grave."—BURNS.

"Raise me up that I may behold the Sun."—SCHILLER.

"Poh, nonsense, don't talk to me of Christ."—PAINE.

"See how calm a Christian can die."—ADDISON.

"Blessed be God, all is well."—RISDEN DARRACOTT.

"I have got the victory, and Christ is holding out both hands to embrace me."—RUTHERFORD.

CYPRIAN—"Let him fear death, who must pass from this death to the second death."

JOHN DODD—"I am not afraid to look death in the face. I can say—Death, where is thy sting? Death cannot hurt me."

ROBERT BOLTON—"O when will this good hour come? When shall I be dissolved? When shall I be with Christ?"

HALYBURTON—"Here is a demonstration of the reality of religion, that I, a poor, weak, timorous man, as much afraid of death as any, am now enabled by the power of grace, composedly, and with joy, to look death in the face."

Mrs. JOYCE LEWIS, when she was condemned to be burnt for the Protestant religion, said: "As for death, I fear it not: for when I behold the amiable countenance of Jesus Christ, my dear Saviour, the ugly face of death does not much trouble me."

EDWARD DEERING—"As for my death, I bless God I feel and find so much inward joy and comfort to my soul, that if it were put to my choice whether I would die or live, I would a thousand times rather choose death than life, if it may stand with the holy will of God."

JOHN OWEN—"O, brother Paine, the long-looked for day is come at last, in which I shall see that glory in another manner than I have ever yet done, or been capable of doing."

The friends of the College of South Carolina are endeavoring to induce Hon. W. C. Preston to accept the Presidency of the Institution.

General Intelligence.

THIRTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Britania reached Boston on Thursday evening last, with English papers to the 4th inst. The following are the principal news items of general interest.

The Cotton market was rather dull, but not any lower for American descriptions.

The shortness of the Grain crops both in Great Britain and on the Continent has created an extensive market for American Bread Stuffs.

The failure of the Potatoe crop must lead to great suffering among the poorer classes, particularly in Ireland.

There was a better demand for American Wool.

The Railway fever has led to a serious revulsion both in England and France.

There is much excitement in regard to the Corn Laws, and those who seek their abolition derive much advantage from the scarcity of Bread Stuffs.

Rumor has talked authoritatively of an intention on the part of Ministers to open the ports of the kingdom for the admission of foreign Grain; and, it has even gone so far as to state the duties resolved upon, viz: 4s. per quarter for Wheat; 2s. for Oats, &c.

Ireland.

The accounts from the Sister Island for some days past, as regards the potatoe crop, are of a very serious and alarming character. The failure is dreadful in the extreme, and the prospects before the great majority of the lower classes truly horrifying. The authorities at Dublin Castle seem to have directed their attention to the matter. Commissioners have been employed to visit the different provinces, and to report to his excellency the result of their examination. Up to the present time these reports are of the most discouraging character. With a people so steeped in poverty as the Irish are, and discontented with "the powers that be," it is frightful to contemplate the consequences of scarcity. The numerous railways likely to be in progress of formation next summer, and during the course of the present winter, will, no doubt, materially assist to alleviate much of the suffering that would otherwise ensue.

The Dublin Corporation held a meeting on the 29th ult. for considering the best means of avoiding the danger impending the extensive failure of the potatoe crop. Mr. O'Connell attended, who, after a long speech, moved that a deputation should wait upon His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, and call on his lordship and the Government to stop the distilleries and breweries—to prevent the exportation of provisions to foreign countries—to raise a million and a half on the credit of the Irish Woods and Forests—and to take immediately into their consideration the levying of a very large income tax for the present year, if necessary. The motion was put and carried.

France.

The announcement of the resignation of the brave old veteran Soult appears to be based on truth. At his advanced age, repose and retirement would well befit him, so that the old soldier, like the Roman in his capitol, should be enabled to adjust his mantle before the closing scene of his eventful career. It is now said that although he will resign the post of Minister of War he will still nominally retain the Presidency of the Council.

The French Telegraph has been busily engaged in transmitting to Paris the state of the war in Algeria. The French forces had left Oran with 5,000 men in quest of Abd-el-Kader; whether they will take, or overtake him, is another question. He is said to treat his French prisoners well and handsomely—and, in doing so, he sets the example, which it would have been to the credit of the French arms, had they imitated towards his countrymen.

The Paris correspondent of Wilmer and Smith, mentions the death of Mr. Warden, a citizen of the United States, and at one time Consul of the States in this city. Since his retirement from public life he had occupied himself with scientific and literary pursuits, and his funeral was attended by many of the most learned personages of the day, many of them in grand costume, as professors in the university and colleges, members of the academy, &c.

Spain.

Accounts from Barcelona speak of the disturbances on account of the conscription having obliged the Captain General Breton to leave for Gerona on the 15th. There were disturbances also at Badalona, San Andres de Palomar, and other small towns in the province of Barcelona.

The Government goes on steadily with its measures against the press. The Espectador, which ventured to make some rather sharp remarks upon some of the late acts of the Government, has been condemned to pay a fine of 20,000 reals, which amounts to £200 sterling. The case was tried, of course without a jury.

The appeal of the Espectador against the sentence of the lower court, for libel on the government, has been rejected, and that journal condemned in costs, and a fine of 20,000 reals, and to publish a retraction with the sentence, which it has not yet complied with.

A few days ago, a band of eighteen robbers, armed with guns and carbins, stationed themselves near the Vanta de San Anton, about three leagues from Madrid, where they remained the whole day, robbing every one that came by; above thirty persons being robbed and stripped by them.

The Judge of a Court of Law has been dismissed, because he was not severe enough in the trial of some political offenders. Such is justice in Spain!

Miscellaneous.

Late arrivals from China bring copies of the rescript of the Emperor, giving permission to Christians to follow their religion without persecution. It is to the exertions of the French ambassador that Christianity is indebted for this toleration, which it has never before enjoyed.

The latest accounts from Athens represent the stability of the Government as most insecure.—A crisis was daily expected, owing to the disordered state of the finances.

We have accounts from Copenhagen of the 3d of Oct. which state that the disease in the potatoes is spreading more and more in Denmark, as in Funen, Lolland, Falster, and likewise Sealand, especially in Amak, near Copenhagen. It has likewise appeared in the Duchy. It is stated that the disease is beginning to show itself in Sweden, and it is feared that the disease may spread wider.

A railway is projected from St. Petersburgh to Odessa, from the Baltic to the Northern Sea, with an embranchment towards Persia, and thence to the East Indies and China. It is a gigantic project that, and will astonish even your boldest railway speculators. But if the Czar resolves upon it, it will be done. On such a line people, in the course of three days, could pass from the frigid to the torrid zone, from the intensest cold to burning heat.

Ronge and his disciples are continuing their career of proselyting, and with pretty much the same success as I mentioned two months ago. In some places they make thousands of enthusiasts—in others they have to bolt to avoid pelting, the horsepond and the pump. The King has given the German Catholics a place for worship, after it had been refused by the authorities.

In the free town of Frankfort the new religion appears in high favor, the majority of the recent elections having been of its partisans.

Puseyism.—Mr. Newman, who has lately seceded from the Established Church, of which he was a Minister, is reported to have purchased several acres of land at Littlemore; and an important institution is likely to rise there for the promotion of the objects of the Puseyite and Romanist party. For the present Mr. Newman remains in lay communion with the Romish Church—and rumor tends to connect him with the Jesuit College at Stonyhurst.

The Hutchinson Family.—This family were to give their last concert at Dublin on the 5th, after which they would proceed to Liverpool. The Freeman's Journal, in the course of a very commendatory notice of their concerts, says: "No man can listen to the Hutchinson Family without feeling that America, Yankee America, has a national music, and none without delightedly acknowledging that 'the family' are happy in their illustration of the harmony of New England."

A Sad Case.—By a letter from St Louis, dated October 14th, we learn that at that time a colored man, aged about 35, who some years ago ran away from slavery, was confined in the jail at that place. After his escape he reached Canada but finally located in Michigan, where by most laborous effort, he acquired a small property worth about $2,000. Recently he returned to Missouri with a view to rescue his wife who was still in slavery, but he was unfortunately seized and thrown into jail. At the date of the letter he was in the hands of a negro trader, who was about carrying him in a few days to the far South. Some effort was made to save him by raising the money demanded for him, $600, but the trader swore that he would not sell him.

Mormon Preparations for Moving.—James Arlington Bennett writes thus to the New York Sun:—"There are already organized twenty-five companies of one hundred families each, to be filled up during the winter, for the march to California. Each family of ten persons will have a strong wagon drawn by four oxen and supplied with every thing necessary for the journey. A troop of horse will be organized as an advance guard. The whole Mormon people are called in from Europe and America, so that they expect about two hundred thousand persons to congregate within one year at the Bay of St. Francisco. Several ships will be fitted out in England to take their people round Cape Horn, and others will sail from New York in the spring."

The War against the Press.—The mob at Lexington, Ky., having driven Cassius M. Clay and his paper out of that State, has afforded a pretext for the enemies of free discussion to recommend the same kind of proceedings against other offending journals. The Louisville Times urges the people of Louisville to approve, by public meeting, of the proceedings at Lexington, and to make the relinquishment of the editorial chair by Geo. D. Prentice a condition of their continued support to the Louisville Journal. The Editor, it appears, is suspected of entertaining abolition doctrines.

From Bremen.—A letter from Bremen, of the 18th ult., states that "the rush of emigration will be very great from here to Texas next year. Already the excitement has commenced. Numerous letters are arriving here daily from the interior, making inquiries in regard to that country, all of which receive prompt and encouraging answers. Already three vessels have sailed direct for Texas with emigrants; and there will have left Bremen this year, at the close of the season, for the United States, 40,000; and already about 30,000."

SUMMARY.

The late Mr. Mumford of Richmond, for some time Reporter of the Virginia Court of Appeals, left smong his MSS a new translation of the Iliad, which is soon to be published. The Richmond Compiler states that Mr. Mumford's object was to produce a translation of greater ease and beauty than Cowper's, and of more literal accuracy than Pope's

A Boston Editor had his pocket picked, the other day, while waiting for the opening of the Post Office. Its contents were—an unfinished article on Oregon, and two well-thumbed exchanges.

The new packet ship Washington Irving, which sailed on her first voyage from Boston to Liverpool, Thursday week, carried out 500,000 lbs. of cheese, besides a large quantity of lard and other domestic produce.

Smoke is yet issuing from the ruins caused by the great fire in New York on the 19th of July last; and—more wonderful still—from the ruins of the great fire at Pittsburg, which happened some time before.

A Mr. Mitchell, who has been missing for some time at Chicago, has just come to light, having been discovered by a friend in a state of delicious intoxication. The incidents of this affair have no slight resemblance to those elicited in the case of Mr. Gough.

A writer from Kentucky, to the Cincinnati Herald, says that the mob has more than trebled C. M. Clay's subscription list in his region. He stated that one slaveholder in his own town recently emancipated his twelve slaves, and another eight, making twenty cases of emancipation in one day. Mobocracy should remember, that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church."

A Water Cure establishment, under the name of the "Brattleboro Infirmary," with a capital of $50,000, was incorporated at the recent session of the Vermont Legislature. The charter, which passed both branches by a very large vote, was obtained on most favorable terms.

Hon. Stephen C. Phillips, of Salem, has lately delivered to large audiences in Boston, two powerful Lectures on the question of Texan Annexation, with a view to arouse the people of the Bay State to make one more struggle against the consummation of that stupendous iniquity.

A gentleman of Brooklyn is said to have imported thirty tons of onions to England, in the Fidelia, which sailed on Monday. Accounts from Weathersfield, represent the inhabitants of that place as in an unusual state of hilarity.

A Medallion portrait of the great John Hampden, in plaster, as large as life, together with a miniature imitation in marble, of the monument erected to his memory, on the spot where he received his death-wound in battle, have been presented to Hampden Sidney College, by Dr. Leigh, one of his descendan's.

The Providence Journal says that Hon. Caleb Cushing is preparing for the press a 'History of the American Embassy to China.' It will be an attractive, interesting, and, we doubt not, a widely popular book.

In Frederic County Court, in a suit for seduction brought by a Miss Brobat, against a young man named Tons, the Jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff of $2800.

Walter Mulford, a young man convicted of selling lottery policies, was sentenced, at Philadelphia, to pay a fine of $5000 and to be imprisoned six months.

Thirty-four Rumsellers of Lowell, who were indicted for violations of the License Law, at the recent session of the Court, paid fines and costs amounting to $35 each, and, in the aggregate, to $1190.

The New Haven Palladium of Nov. 17 says:—We regret to learn that Pres. Day and Prof. Fitch are suffering from severe and protracted illness. Prof. Fitch has been sick nearly five weeks, and at times his life had been in jeopardy. President Day has been seriously ill some days, and yesterday prayers were offered for both in the College Chapel.

It is stated in the N. E. Farmer, that a farmer in Danvers raised the present season, on seven acres of land, 3,000 bushels of onions! Danvers is as renowned for onions as Beverly is for beans.

The cost of the Croton Aqueduct to this date, including interest, exeeeds fourteen millions. The net income for 1843 was $32,000; for 1844, $45,000; and for 1845 bids fair to be $70,000.

An extraordinary spring of water is in Missouri, about 50 miles north of Bateville, which has been sounded to the depth of five hundred feet without reaching the bottom. One of the State boundary line commissioners describes it as rising in the western extremity of a basin from a cavily nearly circular, about fifty yards in diameter, and depth hitherto unfathomed. The water flows with but little variation in quantity throughout the year. The quantity is estimated to be from twenty to thirty thousand cubic feet per minute. The fall is rapid, amounting in the distance of a half mile to twelve or fifteen feet.

The Annual Dinner of the German Hebrew Benevolent Society, was given at the Minerva Rooms on Wednesday evening. There were about two hundred and fifty gentleman in attendance.

A German blacksmith, in South Wheeling, has one forge that he devotes altogether to making nails for the coarsest shoes. At this a boy makes about a thousand a day, having a dog to blow the bellows, which is done by a wheel attached to a crank. The dog blows while the iron is in the fire; but as soon as it is taken out he stops to rest, and commences at once when it is put in again.

A young lady, of high respectablity, residing a few miles from Philadelphia, has lately had a cancer extracted from her breast, the effect of tight lacing. She is about 20 years of age, and has been long addicted to this pernicious habit.

The Plymouth County Agricultural Society's premium of $50, for plantations of forest trees, has been awarded to the Rev. Morrill Allen, of Pembroke, who, within a few years, has stocked nearly ten acres of sterile land with valuable forest trees, which the committee represent as being in a thrifty state.

The Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States, under date of November 7, 1845, has decided "that articles imported bona fide for the furniture or construction of churches, or which appertain to the worship therein to be performed, should be admitted free from duty."

Hon. Edward Everett has consented to take the Presidency of Harvard University, and will of course be chosen.

Prof. Dodd of Nassau Hall, Princeton, N. J., departed this life between 3 and 4 o'clock P. M. on Thursday.

In the list of passengers by the Brittania, we see the name of Wm. C. Bryant, Esq., Editor of the Evening Post.

We learn from the Express that the great gun, brought over by the John R. Skiddy, consigned to R. Thompson, Esq. the friend of Capt. Stockton, weighed 8 tons, or about 16,000 pounds. The duty on it amounted to $1100. The freight on it cost about $250. The consignee, R. Kermit, Esq., paid $30 for hoisting and landing it on the wharf. It took a large truck and seven or eight horses to move it.

Application is to be made to the next session of the Legislature, for an act of incorporation of the Ocean Steam Navigation Company in the city of New York, with power to build, equip and navigate one or more steam vessels to ply from this city to any ports in Europe, with a capital of $100,000, with the privilege of increasing it to $1,000,000.

The Sun is advocating the prosecution of the road to Oregon—estimating the expense at $30,000,000, which is but one year's revenue of our Government. In twelve years it would save this sum in the consequent reduction of appropriations for the Navy alone. In giving increased value to the public lands it would augument the resources of government one hundred millions.

The Superintendent of the Northern State Prison, says that he has just closed in the first section of the prison, containing one hundred and twenty-six cells, and expects to complete another section early in the Spring. There are now about one hundred and ninety convicts altogether, sixty of whom will be without cells. Many of those, however, are in for light offences, and their term of service will expire in the winter and early in the spring: a number of such he is about to recommend to the Governor for their good conduct, and hopes to procure their pardon. Among the number he mentioned, was one man for stealing a Bible and Prayer-book when he was drunk.

It is asserted by one of the most eminent bakers in London, that American flour will absorb from 8 to 10 per cent. more of its own weight of water, in manufacturing it into bread or biscuit, than the English wheat; 14 pounds of American flour will make 21 pounds of bread, while the same quantity of English flour will make 18½ pounds.

The corn crops in New Jersey prove better than was expected. The yield is little less than the usual quantity, but the corn is very good. One farmer, it is said, has had 120 bushels of corn to the acre.

The Potatoe crop, so far as we can learn, is not so general a failure as was expected. The supply, however, is sufficiently short to keep the prices through the season above the prices of former years. They are now selling, we understand, in our market, at the unprecedented rate of 75 cents a bushel.

The losses by the fire of July 19th have been so far investigated as to show that they amount to an aggregate of over seven millions of dollars. From this, however, may fairly be deducted the value of buildings burned in Broad street, for the opportunity which the destruction of those buildings gave for remodeling the street, made the fire really an addition to their value; for the lots were worth more the day after the fire, without the houses, than they were the day before, with them. It was a capital piece of good luck to the owners of real estate on that street. They recovered the value of the buildings from the Insurance Companies, and also gained the advance of rents.

The Gazette says that a gentleman of this city, on Monday, placed in the hands of Thos. N. Stanford a check of two thousand dollars to be appropriated toward the erection and support of Seamen's Floating Chapels, under the management of the Young Men's Society of the P. E. Church in this City. This sum makes upwards of three thousand dollars which have been appropriated to benevolent objects during the current year, by the same generous and anonymous donor, through the same channel.

The Albany Citizen understands that it is in contemplation to arrange a route from New York to that city during the winter season by the way of New Haven and Springfield. A boat is to leave New York every evening except Sunday, at 4 or 5 o'clock, and the train is to be due at Albany at 4 o'clock the following morning.

Lately a little girl, about eight years of age, daughter of a widow lady, residing about eight miles from Lapeer, Michigan, was frightened in such a manner that she died in about two hours after the fright. Her brother, a small lad, dressed himself in a dried bear skin, and chased her as she was going to a neighboring house. What a lesson that is to bad boys! What sobs and tears that thoughtless act has cost the lad.

Rev. George Bourne, who has for some time been employed in connection with the Christian Intelligencer, entered the office on Thursday as usual, though feeling rather unwell, and in a short time after taking his seat, expired, probably, it is supposed, of apoplexy.

Frederick Douglass, the fugitive slave who went out to Great Britain from this country a few months ago, is received with great attention in that country. At Cork, Ireland, he was honored by a public breakfast, at which Alderman Lyons presided. At Dublin, the Lord Mayor having presided at one of his lectures, was so deeply interested in him, that he invited him to dinner in company with a number of Aldermen and Common Council of the City. He was treated with marked attention by all—his health was drank, and he was invited to give an account of the manner in which he proceeded to acquire the knowledge he possesses. This he did in an unaffected manner, giving entire satisfaction to the party. Though a young man, and only seven years out of slavery, Mr. Douglass possesses a character that renders him worthy of these attentions and which will save him from being spoiled by them, as no one can doubt who has read his auto biography. He is a mulatto, but more black than white.

One of the sons of the late Daniel D. Tompkins is about instituting proceedings for the recovery back of that portion of his father's real estate, on Staten Island, purchased by Caleb T. Ward. This is a piece of ground now of immense value, embracing about two hundred and fifty acres, including a large portion of the village of Tompkinsville, and also the ground on which the Episcopal and Methodist churches stand, and on which many beautiful and expensive country seats are built.

MARRIED,

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 9th inst., by Eld. Henry Clarke, Mr. George H. Spicer to Miss Harriet Davis, both of Hopkinton.

Also, by the same, at Hopkinton, on the 15th inst, Mr. Henry Whipple, of Coventry, R. I., to Miss Mary Spicer, of Hopkinton.

At Marlboro, N. J., on the 18th inst., by Eld. David Clawson, Mr. George B. Davis to Miss Elizabeth S. Bonham both of Shiloh.

DIED,

In Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., June 14th, of typhus fever, Jane, daughter of Benjamin and Wealthy Hall, aged 16 years. She was a worthy member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Genesee, and gave good evidence that she was about to exchange a world of pain and sorrow for one of joy.

In Genesee, Nov. 1st, of typhus fever, Benjamin Hall, in the 60th year of his age. Bro. Hall was a member of the Petersburgh Church, and although he never removed his standing, he evinced a desire for the prosperity of the cause of Christ, and died with a full assurance of an immortality of blessedness.

In Watson, Lewis Co., N. Y., Oct. 11th, 1845, Benjamin Nye, in the 75th year of his age. For many years he has been striving to "keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus;" and in his last moments he gave full satisfaction that they who trust in the Lord are like Mount Sion, which can not be moved. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

In Watson, on the 12th inst., of typhus and inflammatory fever, Nancy Clark, wife of Calvin Clark, formerly of Brookfield, aged 37 years. Sister Clark made a profession of faith in Christ in early life, and united with the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, where she remained a worthy member until she removed to Watson. Soon after locating here, she became a member of the Watson Church, in which relation she continued until her death. Rarely have such instances been known of the triumphant power of religion over death, as was manifested in the case of this sister. "Say ye to the righteous, it shall be well with him." She has left a companion and four blooming children, together with numerous relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. But their loss is her eternal gain. E. R.

Miscellany.

THE CHRISTIAN DEAD TO SIN.

"Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin."

What a great difference there is between the man of the world and the Christian. They are different in their views, feelings, motives, principles, character, desires, and pursuits. The one is seeking happiness here, the other is looking for it in the world to come. The one is dead to the pleasures of religion and the things of God, but alive to the world and the objects of them; the other is dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God. Here we may notice—

The Christian's Death.—"Dead indeed unto sin." Let us not mistake here. He is not dead unto the being of sin, it still lives in him, though he cannot live in it. Let us inquire in what sense he is dead to sin.

To the dominion of sin.—"For sin shall not have dominion over us." Though it has an existence in the soul, it has not a throne in the heart. The sceptre is wrested from it by a superior power. It rages, but it does not reign, because grace is more powerful and triumphant.

To the curse of sin.—To this all are exposed by nature, but by virtue of his interest in Christ, the believer is delivered from it. The curse is averted, and the blessing is realised. The terrors of the law that once excited such alarm in his mind are hushed, and he is cheered and encouraged by the voice of love and mercy sounding from Calvary.

To the destroying power of sin.—Those who are found united to Christ are rescued from its calamitous influence, and shall be preserved blameless at his coming. If I am a Christian, sin may disturb but cannot destroy me. I am sustained by the power of God. "The strength of sin is law," but I am not under the law, but under grace.

To the final doom of sin.—This is felt in the caverns of eternal darkness and despair, by those who die impenitent, rejecting the Saviour and the blessings of his grace. But the Christian is delivered from all this. How can we perish when we are assured that "he which hath begun a good work in him will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." Although the swelling of Jordan may rise high, and the tempest may be loud, yet

> "Not one object of his care,
> Ever suffered shipwreck there."

Examine yourselves, and ascertain whether you answer to this description of character. Many are dead to sin by oaths and professions, who are not so indeed by inward experience. If we are dead to sin, we hate it, and love holiness and live unto God.

[Temple's Christian's Daily Treas.

SACRED APHORISMS.

It is the manifestation of the glorious presence of the Almighty that makes heaven to be itself.

There is no variety in that which is perfect, because there is but one perfection; and so much shall we grow nearer to perfectness, by how much we draw nearer to unity and uniformity.

O Lord, why do I not yield to the word of thy counsel; since I must yield, as all thy creatures, to the word of thy command.

After the Almighty had drawn that real real large map of the world, he did thus abridge it into this little table of man: He alone consists of heaven and earth, of soul and body.

This my soul teaches me of itself, that itself cannot conceive how active it is. It can be all things, can comprehend all things; know that which is, and conceive that which never was, never shall be. Nothing can fill it but Thou, which art infinite; nothing can limit it, but Thou which art everywhere.

The better we were at our creation, the worse we are by our fall; as the sons of some prodigal and tainted ancestors tell their lands and lordships which were once theirs. Only do what our desires, answerably to the readiness of God's mercies, that we may redeem what we have lost; that we may recover in him what we have lost in ourselves. The fault shall be ours, if our damage prove not beneficial.—Gen. 1: 26.

If man had been made only for contemplation, it would serve as well to have been placed in some vast desert, on the top of some barren mountain; but the same power which gave him a heart to meditate, gave him hands to work, and work fit for his hands.—Ibid.

God loves to see his creatures happy; our lawful delight is his; they know not God that think to please him by making themselves miserable.—v. 28.

What marvel is it, if my corruption find the serpent in my closet, in my table, in my bed, when our holy parents found him in the midst of paradise?—Gen. 3: 1.

LITTLE THINGS SOMETIMES BECOME GREAT THINGS.

If the beginning of the discoveries of printing, gunpowder and steam, could be clearly seen, no doubt they would appear to be very little, but when we look on their mighty influence among mankind, we regard them as great indeed. At times they are great for good, and at other times they are great for evil. More simply and beautiful is the fact of little things being some times great things set forth in the following Scriptural example—"Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth," Jas. 3: 4. It seems, then, that small and trifling as the helm may be, it is great and important in the management of a ship.

In common circumstances an old ballad might with great propriety be called a little or trifling thing, and yet half an old ballad was so important on a particular occasion, that it was the means of causing a murderer to be hung. Lord Eldon says in his note book, "I remember, that in a trial wherein I was counsel, for a long time the evidence did not appear to touch the prisoner at all, and he looked about him with the most perfect unconcern, seeming to think himself quite safe. At last the surgeon was called, who stated deceased had been killed by a shot, a gun shot, in the head, and produced the matted hair and stuff cut from and taken out of the wound. It was all hardened with blood. A basin of warm water was brought into court, and as the blood was gradually softened, a piece of printed paper appeared—the wadding of the gun, which proved to be half of a ballad. The other half had been been found in the man's pocket when he was taken. He was hanged."

THE STREAM OF TIME.

BY MARY WILSON.

We often speak of the fleeting nature of Time. It forms a theme for the poet, and the moralist, but, even while it occupies our thoughts, how little do we realize how swiftly it is bearing us onward.

I had penned the preceding sentence, and, with my head resting on my hand, was arranging my thoughts to commit to paper, when there seemed to flow, distinctively before me, the broad smooth expanse of a wide river. Its surface was crowded with small boats, each containing the individual to whom it belonged, borne on singly, in pairs, or in groups, of various sizes. Their little barks differed much, in their construction, some were small and slightly framed, seeming barely sufficient for the preservation of their occupants, others were larger, and more comfortably fitted for the accommodation of their owners, while some few there, were richly gilded and carved, luxuriantly cushioned, and the whole boat so magnificently furnished, that it seemed not so surprising that its short-sighted owner should hardly send his thoughts beyond it. Turning off from the sides of this river, I noticed innumerable streams, into each of which, some bark as it was sailing past, was turned, as by an irresistible hand, and further, I tried in vain to trace its course. I was particularly struck by the difference with which the several occupants of the boats met this change—some seemed to have long been expecting it, and when the current appeared to be bearing them toward one of these little streams, a calm and peaceful smile betokened that they expected a happy change; others seemed to have only a few hours notice, and were almost bewildered by the suddenness of the transition, while many seemed, to go without a moment's warning. When a single boat, and one that appeared to have been almost alone in its course, was thus taken away, no effect seemed to be produced on those who remained, save a general and transient feeling of seriousness, among those in its immediate neighborhood. If one was taken from the midst of a group, the others went on their way, sorrowing, and a void seemed to remain in the midst of them, which, however, grew less and less distinct, as they went farther from the place of separation.

It struck me as a thing most strange, however, that this innumerable throng seemed so utterly unconscious of their steady onward, course. It was so even, and so gentle, that they all floated on, without realizing their progress, and without feeling that every day brought them nearer and nearer to the end of their voyage. Some few I noticed, who, after each day, seemed to call themselves to an account for the manner in which it had been spent, and to realize that their course was rapidly onward, but this was much the smaller part. As a general thing, the crowd seemed utterly unconscious of their progress. One thing seemed to meet their attention: this was a kind of year-stone, as I may call it, which was erected on the bank, at the end of every year's journey, as they passed one of these, a feeling of surprise seemed to seize them, that they had, so soon reached another.

Sometimes a boat passed among the rocks, and, tossed about by the waves, its occupant seemed for a time, to look and long for a haven of rest. To an observer, it was so obvious that these voyagers were all hastening to a final destination, and that they were now on their journey thither, that it was hardly credible, how entirely they seemed swallowed up in their present occupations and enjoyments, scarcely giving a thought to the future.

I was thinking on this, when I suddenly started up and found that I had been deep in a dream; trying to recall what had passed, I thought that what I had seen, might well represent the Stream of Time. We each occupy one of these little vessels, and are almost unconsciously, fast gliding down this wondrous stream.

THE MILE.—There is a great difference in the number of yards contained in a mile in different countries. The following table will be useful:—

England or America,	1,760 yds.
Russia,	1,109 "
Italy,	1,476 "
Scotland and Ireland,	2,200 "
Poland,	4,400 "
Spain,	5,028 "
Germany,	4,866 "
Sweden and Denmark,	7,223 "
Hungary,	8,800 "

A person in company said in a violent passion to another, "You are a liar! a scoundral!" The other with great composure turned round to the company, and said to them, "You must not mind what this poor fellow says: it is a way he has; he was only talking to himself."

TO CURE A WART.—Scrape a carrot fine and mix with salt, and apply as a poultice five or six nights.

God loves man better than man loves himself.

A PARENT'S PRAYER.

BY REV. LEONARD WITHINGTON.

At this hushed hour when all my children sleep,
Here in thy presence, gracious God, I kneel;
And, while the tears of gratitude I weep,
Would pour the prayer, which gratitude must feel;
Parental love! O set thy holy seal
On these soft hearts which thou to me hast sent;
Repel temptation, guard their better weal:
Be thy pure spirit to their frailty lent,
And lead them in the path their infant Saviour went.

I ask not for them eminence or wealth—
For these, in Wisdom's view, are trifling toys,—
But occupation, competence, and health;
Thy love, thy presence, and the lasting joys
That flow therefrom; the passion which employs
The breast of holy men; and thus to be
From all that taints, or darkens, or destroys
The strength of principle, forever free:
This is the boon, O God, I ask of thee.

The world, I know, is but a narrow bridge,
And treacherous waters roar and foam below;
With feeble feet we walk the wooden ridge
Which creaks and shakes beneath us as we go;
Some fall by accident, and thousands throw
Their bodies headlong in the hungry stream;
Some sink by secret means, and never know
The hand which struck them from their transient dream,
Till Wisdom wakes in death, and in despair they scream.

If these soft feet, which now these feathers press,
Are doomed the paths of ruin soon to tread;
If Vice, concealed in her unspotted dress,
Is seen to lure to her polluted bed:—
If thy foreseeing eye discernest a thread
Of sable guilt, impelling on their doom,
O spare them not—in mercy strike them dead;
Prepare them for an early welcome tomb,
Not for eternal blight let my false blossoms bloom!

But if some useful path before them lie,
Where they may walk obedient to thy laws;
Though never basking in Ambition's eye,
And pamper'd never with the world's applause;
Active, yet humble; virtuous too; the cause
Of virtue in the dwellings where they dwell;
Still following where thy perfect Spirit draws;
Releasing others from the bands of hell;—
If this be life, then let them longer live: 'tis well.

And teach me, Power Supreme, in their green days,
With meekest skill thy lessons to impart,—
To shun the harlot, and to show the maze
Through which her blandest accents reach the heart;
Help them to learn, without the bitter smart
Of bad experience, vices to decline;
From treachery, falsehood, knavery may they start
As from a hidden snake; from women, wine—
From all the guilty pangs with which such scenes combine.

How soft the sleep! what innocent repose
Rests on those eyes from older sorrows free!
Sweet babes! The curtain I would not unclose,
Which wraps the future from your minds and me;
But, Heavenly Father, leaving them with thee—
Whether or high or low may be their lot,
Or early death or life await them,—be
Their Guardian, Saviour, Guide, and bless the spot
Where they shall live or die; till death, forsake them not!

* * * * *

When as a scroll these heavens shall pass away,
When the cold grave shall offer up its trust;
When seas shall burn, and the last dreadful day
Restores the spirit to its scattered dust;
Then, thou, most Merciful as well as Just,
Let not my eye, when elements are toss'd
In wild confusion, see that darkest, worst
Of painful sights that ever parent cross'd—
Hear my sad, earnest prayer, and let not mine be lost!

ON THE TRAINING OF GIRLS.

Girls fare much worse in their physical training than boys. I was at a funeral one cold day in April; the ground was damp and the air chilly. A girl of eight years was among the attendants; she wore a warm hood over a full head of hair, that had been carefully cultured in quantity and length. Over the usual amount of clothing She wore a large fur cape, lined and wadded, reaching below her elbows; with a collar of the same which came to her shoulders. She had armlets and gloves, and then a muff; her skirts were plenty, and very full, and reached a little below the knee; her pantalettes were of fine muslin, with rows of lace inserted; her hose fine open work cotton, and her slippers of the thinnest material. This child was dressed in the height of fashion, but where was the judgment of the parents? The head, which should be kept cool, covered with a quantity of hair that should not have been permitted to grow thus until of maturer age, and a hood which should only be worn in the bleakest weather. The vast amount of clothing on one-half the child, and the almost total destitution on the other part, and then the feet, which came in contact with the cold wet ground, and which should always be kept warm, thus driving the blood from them to the head. What would have been said, if they had put such pantaloons, stockings and shoes on their boys? Why, every one would call out, for shame, you will kill your boy! Is a girl so much stronger than a boy, that she can bear all this without injury? "Oh," says the mother, "the boys have to run out doors so much!" What do they have to run for? "It is healthy for the little fellows, and they love it." Is it not just as healthy for the girl, and does she not love it too? "Well, but a boy must be tough," and a girl may be feeble, is the insinuation, though not expressed; and feeble she is, after being dressed every way but comfortably or healthy, made to hold all the babies, in a confined room, for fear they will take cold, and for amusement compelled to do worsted work until her eyes are almost spoiled, or drum on the piano without any taste for music, three hours in a day. Now we have her delicate enough for any lady, and, as it is the custom, she must marry before her constitution is matured.

And then, added to the cares of housekeeping, all the watchings must come on her; let who will be sick in the family she must lose her rest. Is it the husband, the wife must take care of him day and night; if a dependent, the same. If a child is sick, as a general rule, the mother loses one hundred hours' sleep to the father one. Who most needs a strong constitution?

The man works hard, it is true, but if they belong to the operative class she works as hard during his labor hours as he does. When he comes to his meals, three times a day, he rests, while she has to step quicker and is more perplexed than ever in her efforts to make every thing comfortable, to see that nothing is burned or spoiled in cooking, that all is served up neatly; and then assist in waiting on the table, and with an infant in her lap, she hardly gets time to eat; and then the children must be prepared for school, and all must be done cheerfully. These and many other things make the meal hour the busiest hour for the farmer's or mechanic's wife. Who needs nerves? When the man's eight or ten hours' work is done he converses, reads, walks, or retires, whichever relation suits him best. The woman never has such a time; she must put the children to bed—no small job sometimes—then she must mend, or make clothes, and very frequently work from two to five hours after the man has ceased his labor. Who needs vigor, to do all this? The woman gets much less sleep than the man, and not unfrequently works more hours, without any relaxation at meal times or in the evening, of course she needs more strength.

The girls are taught to wait on the boys; if a boy wants some bread and butter the girl must go to the cellar for it, if he wants a collar, the girl must go up stairs for it; if one has cut his finger, the girl is despatched for a cloth and string to bind it up, while her oldest brother stands by in idleness; if the baby wants to drink, the girl is called; if to be rocked, the girl must sit for hours, while her brothers are at play and never made to relieve her; is the baby to be held or amused, she must do it. And here I would call the attention of mothers to the fact, that mantua-makers say they seldom fit a young lady whose right shoulder blade is not enlarged and out of place—no complaints of this kind from the tailors, that I know of. If any thing is lacking on the table, the girl must rise and get it; who ever thought of calling on a boy to wait on the table?

Do you ask, "How would you have it?" I would divide the play and work equally; I would have your daughters play out doors just as many hours as your sons, and no one should call them girl-boys. They should play just enough for the full development of physical strength, and no more; for that would be idleness. "What will you have the boys do, if they are only to play as much as their health needs?" The same work that the girl does, and just as much, and let no one call him a boy-girl.

Do you ask, "Why I would have a girl exercise in the open air as much as a boy?" I answer, to strengthen her physical energies, which will be taxed in after life even more than your boys. "Why would you have a boy work in the house as much as a girl?" To give him habits of industry, self-denial, usefulness; to develope his faculties and sympathies, and to keep him from mischief, which idle boys always get into, and I might add, to make him happy, for the useful person is the only happy one. "But the business of men and women is to be different." Very well, when the boy goes upon the farm or into the shop, and works as many hours as the girl does, then excuse him from his share of the in-door work, but not till then.

"Shall we dress our boys and girls alike?" Certainly not, for this would be disobeying God; always keep a distinctiveness in their dress, let the boy wear a frock-coat, and the girl a frock; the boy a hat, and the girl a bonnet; the dress may be of different materials and texture, but let both be dressed equally warm, commodious and modest.

EVIL COMPANIONS.

Society is the atmosphere of souls; and we necessarily imbibe from it something which is either infectious or salubrious. The society of virtuous persons is enjoyed beyond their company, while vice carries a sting into solitude.—The society or the company you keep is both the indication of your character and the former of it. In company when the pores of the mind are opened, there requires more caution than usual, because the mind is passive. Either vicious company will please you or it will not; if it does not please you, the end of going will be defeated. In such society you will feel your reverence for the dictates of conscience wear off, and that name at which angels bow and devils tremble, you will hear contemned and abused. The Bible will supply materials for unmeaning jests or impious buffoonery; the consequence of this will be a practical deviation from virtue, the principles will become sapped, the fences of conscience broken down; and when debauchery has corrupted the character, a total inversion will take place, they will glory in their shame. SUGGESTIONS TO YOUNG MOTHERS.

Rise so early in the morning, that you may be able to secure at least half an hour for reading the Scriptures and prayer before your domestic concerns require your attention. You will find this exercise admirably adapted to prepare and strengthen you to encounter, with a becoming temper and spirit, the trials and vexations of the day.

Accustom your children to make prayer and praise to God, the giver and preserver of life, the first employment in the morning, and the last at night. Remember that the duties of a mother are untransferable, therefore, except in cases of unavoidable necessity, never suffer the devotional exercise of your children to be superintended by another.

See that your daughters rise early, and that they employ themselves about such domestic affairs as are suited to their years and capacities.

Never suffer your children to require services from others which they can perform for themselves. A strict observance of this rule will be of incalculable advantage to them through every period of life.

Let all the young members of your family be regularly washed and combed before breakfast; never permit them to treat you with so much disrespect as to appear at your table in a slovenly condition. It should ever be remembered that the highest respect which a child can pay is due to its parent. This respect may be insured by forming correct habits in youth.—Christian Observer.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

BY REV. J. FLANNERY.

Religion's richest treasures to obtain,
O may my ardent longing soul desire;
May Jesus blood wash out my every stain,
For perfect holiness may I aspire!
The best affections of my steadfast heart,
Be ever centred in the great three one;
Like Mary choose the better part,
Like Paul delight the Christian race to run!
With Salem's daughters may I take my stand
Beside my Saviour's cross with sacred awe;
And with that wondering loving weeping band,
Behold him magnify God's holy law!
And while the sun withdraws his blushing face,
And darkness draws her sable curtains round
Hear how he groans for Adam's fallen race,
And hear redemption in that mournful sound.
To save a ruined world he bleeds and dies,
The gushing blood in torrents freely flows;
And hark! I hear amid his dying cries,
A prayer offered for his cruel foes;
The angels hover round their dying Lord,
And gaze astonished at the wondrous scene,
With eager search explore God's holy word;
If it will teach them what these wonders mean,
And Satan now with all his hellish host;
Appears in triumph o'er the woman's seed,
His own disciples give up all for lost;
And fly the awful scene, with fearful speed;
The Lord's Anointed bows his languid head,
Gives up the Ghost, while Salem's daughters weep,
Jehovah's fellow lies among the dead;
The Prince of life in death's cold arms doth sleep,
But Ah! the greedy tomb shall not retain
The King of glory in its cold embrace,
Triumphing yet o'er death and hell, he'll reign
While men and angels join to sing his praise,
Triumphant and Immortal he shall rise
And leave the tomb with garments dyed in blood,
Angelic hosts attend him to the skies;
To take his seat at the right hand of God.

ANECDOTE OF A POET.

Willis, in his own peculiar way, records the following virtue of Tom Moore:

Moore had just returned from his government office in the West Indies, a defaulter for eight thousand pounds. Great sympathy was felt for him among his friends, and three propositions were made to him to cancel the debt. Lord Lansdown offered simply to pay it, Longman and Murry offered to advance it on his future works, and the noblemen at White's offered the sum to him in a subscription.

This was the time subscriptions were on foot for getting Sheridan out of his troubles; and while Moore was considering the three propositions just named, he chanced to be walking down St. James street with two noblemen when they met Sheridan. Sheridan bowed to them with a familiar "How are you?" "Hang that fellow," said one of the noblemen, "he might have touched his hat, I subscribed a hundred pounds for him last night." "Thank God! you dare make no such criticism on a bow from me!" said Moore to himself. The lesson sank deep. He rejected all the offers made to relieve him—went to Passy, and lived in complete obscurity in that little suburb of Paris, till he had written himself out of debt. Under the spur of that chance remark, were written some of the works by which Moore will be best known to posterity.

A movement similar to that which has kept this State for so long a time in confusion and alarm, has just been agitated by sundry discontented persons in Greene Co. Wisconsin Territory, which has called forth much attention from the public journals published in that neighborhood. The bone of contention is the Claim Law enacted by Congress some years since with regard to certain unappropriated lands in the farther West, and which does not seem to give very general satisfaction to those for whose benefit it was enacted.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
IRA SAYLES, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics
GURDON EVANS, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. HARTSHORN, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. STILLMAN, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. MAXSON, Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences. The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense. SAMUEL RUSSELL,

President of the Board of Trustees

SOUTHERN ABYSSINIA—NO. 1.

Travels in Southern Abyssinia, through the country of Adal to the Kingdom of Shoa, during the years 1842 and 1843. By CHARLES JOHNSTON, M. R. C. S.

This is the title of two octavo volumes published last year in London, which we have recently obtained. For a number of years past intertropical Africa has excited considerable interest among scientific and commercial men in several European countries; and some advance has been made in geographical and ethnological information respecting those vast, and heretofore almost unknown parts of the world. As the information obtained is already subserving the interests of science and commerce, it serves only to sharpen the desire for further discoveries, which we doubt not will be pushed onward until all the unknown parts will be as familiarly known as the interests of science and commerce shall demand. In this process we have a deep interest, as the servants of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the friends of man. It appears to be ordered by the providence of God, that the discoveries and conquests of nations shall prepare the way for the diffusion of the gospel among the nations, which have long been benighted by ignorance and barbarity.

The author of the work before us is a native of Birmingham, Eng., who was for a time a surgeon in the East India Company's service; but having an ardent desire for African discoveries, he obtained permission to follow the British Embassy from Aden to Shoa, with a view of making his way across the African Continent by any practical route which he might discover. Health and means failing him, he remained for some time in Shoa, employing himself in obtaining information respecting that interesting people, and other adjacent countries, which is of much value in explaining and correcting the romantic history of the "Highlands of Ethiopia," written by Major Harris.

From sundry observations contained in these volumes we judge that Mr. Johnston is a Christian philosopher of the Dr. Priestly school; at least we have no fellowship with the Arian character of some of his reflections on the religion and renovation of nations. He however appears to be a candid and honest narrator of the facts he discovers; his statements are therefore worthy of confidence, and himself of respect, for the service he has rendered to the history of man.

Mr. Johnston traveled nearly the same route as Major Harris and several Englishmen had before him. The principal difficulty in accomplishing this journey appears to be in passing the Adal, or low country, lying between the coast and the Highlands of Abyssinia,—a journey of about three hundred miles through sultry plains, inhabited by hostile Mahommedan tribes, whose poverty and cupidity make each jealous of the others, and rivals in their avaricious desire to obtain the presents which all travelers are expected to make in passing their several territories, or visiting their persons.

Debarking at Tajourah, an African port on a considerable bay of the same name, opposite Aden; and having provided himself with ten bags of rice, a lot of calicoes and chintzes, cotton handkerchiefs of every gaudy pattern, paper, an abundant supply of needles, and other small wares, and a hundred Austrian dollars, for presents on the road; Mr. Johnston hired a servant to attend him to Shoa, for ten dollars, and ten men for an armed escort, at twenty-five dollars per head; although, when some distance on the road, five men offered to be his body guard for five dollars per head. Camels were hired for the journey at twenty dollars per head. His daily fare seems to have been boiled rice, boiled wheat, dates, sooge or fine oatmeal, kids' flesh, ghee or liquid butter, and clotted milk, which the native women brought in skin bottles and exchanged for his light wares. Occasionally they obtained wild animals. After many tedious detentions, interesting incidents, and some alarms, he reached Shoa in safety; on which occasion he expresses himself in the following manner:—

"Arrived upon the summit, the stranger finds an extensive table-land spread out before him, and he cannot divest himself of the idea that he has reached some new continent. A Scotch climate, and Scotch vegetation, wheat, barley, linseed,—and yet in intertropical Africa! He feels as if there must be some mistake." . . . . . "The country seemed highly cultivated, wheat and barley on all sides growing close to our path, while near the farm-houses were stacks of grain, which gave the whole scene an English apppearance." . . . . . "Amidst the luxuries and conveniencies so abundandly supplied to the Embassy by the indulgent care of a liberal government, I almost fancied that I had returned to the comforts and pleasures of civilized life."

As soon as Mr Johnston had been introduced and recognized as a visitor at court, the King ordered him a constant supply from his own stores, which was regularly furnished to him by an officer of the royal household so long as he continued in the country. Shortly after, at his own solicitation, a house and garden was assigned him for his own exclusive service. He was furnished with wheaten bread, and butter as good as ours; flesh and fowl; honey, wine, and native beer, resembling English ale; and cayenne pottage. In a weekly market was sold, wheat at twenty-five cents per bushel, barley somewhat lower, peas and beans at ten cents per bushel, five eggs for a needle, or two hundred for a dollar. Five sheep for a dollar, an ox for three dollars, and a good horse for ten dollars. Teff, maize, and other things in proportion.

Although they thus possess an abundance of a great variety of edible productions, husbandry and the arts of civilized life are not in advance of the age of the patriarch Jacob. Agricultural implements, household furniture, and domestic utensils are of the rudest construction. The family mill may serve for an example, the following being the only kind used in the country. "In a corner, stood side by side two of the peculiar handmills of the country, each consisting of a large flat stone of cellular lava, two feet long and one foot broad, raised upon a rude pedestal of stones and mud, about one foot and a half from the ground. The rough surface of this stone sloped gradually down from behind forward into a basin-like cavity, into which the flour falls as it is ground. A second stone, grasped in the hand of the woman who grinds, weighs about three pounds; beneath which, as it is moved up and down the inclined plane of the under millstone, the grain is crushed, and gradually converted into a coarse flour." This is afterwards passed through a grass seive. (See Exod. 11: 5.)

The Government of Shoa, like that of all other African kingdoms, is an absolute monarchy; the will of the King is the indisputable law. Sahela Selassie is however reputed by his own people and all travelers to be remarkably just in his transactions, moderate in his anger, and benevolent towards his visitors. He himself says, "I have the fear of God before mine eyes." He is moreover a man of sagacious and noble mind, and will doubtless profit by the repeated visits of English, French, and German travelers, who have each been to his coast within the last three years. As the country is capable of furnishing many valuable exports it is highly probable that they will soon rise in the scale of nations, and exert an important influence on the civilization of Eastern and Intertropical Africa, and if truly evangelized, upon the Christianization of all that vast portion of the earth. S. D.

THE GOVERNOR OF VERMONT ON PEACE.

Governor Slade, in his recent message, thus speaks of this subject in response to a communication from the Peace Society:—"It would seem necessary to do little more than announce this object to secure for it the favorable consideration of the rulers of every Christian people. War is the greatest of all the calamities that ever afflicted the human race; and yet the world, after having been involved in its crimes, and felt the terrific sweep of its desolations for near sixty centuries, seems but just awaking from the delusion, that it is necessary, and consistent with the principles of a religion whose all-pervading element is love.

"Our own country, more perhaps than almost any other, needs this awakening influence. The freedom happily enjoyed by our people, seems to engender the restless spirit favorable to war, while it receives additional impulse from the popular appeals incident to our system of free suffrage—appeals made often by men who love distinction and excitement more than their country—while their appeals act on minds in no condition, from the association of numbers, and other causes, to feel their individual responsibility for the crimes and consequences of war.

"While the spirit of peace, and a scrupulous regard to justice will, by their silent influence, check, if they do not entirely subdue, the spirit of aggression, they will not necessarily prevent the occurrence of international difficulties, nor in the present, if in any future state of the world, supersede the necessity of some formal provision for their adjustment. The necessity suggests a resort to the principle of ARBITRATION, and the introduction into treaties between nations, of stipulations to that effect.

"It is to the furtherance of this object by acting on the public sentiment of our own country and the world, that the American Peace Society solicits the action of the General Assembly of this State; and I could hardly be invited to the performance of a more grateful duty, than to become the medium of asking your attention to it, and recommending, as I do, such action as may in your wisdom, most effectually lend the influence of this State in the furtherance of this great movement of peace on earth, and good will towards men.

"I must be permitted to add an expression of the sense I entertain of the great value of the efforts of the friends of peace through the organization of peace societies, in dispelling the delusion so long prevalent in regard to war. The results thus far of the quiet and persevering efforts of these associations, have furnished a most gratifying illustration of the silent power of truth, in the hands of Christian benevolence, to reform and save the world."

These extracts are only a part of Governor Slade's noble testimony on Peace, the noblest ever yet uttered by any ruler. We deem the example worthy of all imitation.

MIND.—Such is the power of the mind, there is scarcely a passion which has not, by excess of action, terminated existence. Love has done it; anger has done it; and also joy. But there is one mental emotion, which in our experience never struck the human body with a fatal blow. It is HOPE. Hope, when well grounded, never creates evil—it is a true anchor. The other passions may agitate the soul, as the angel Bethesda's waters; but Hope rather resembles the healing influence that angel left behind.

PUTTING RESOLUTIONS INTO PRACTICE.

At a Missionary meeting held amongst the negroes in the West Indies, these three resolutions were agreed upon:—

1. We will all give something.
2. We will all give as God has enabled us.
3. We will all give willingly.

So soon as the meeting was over, a leading negro took his seat at the table, with pen and ink, to put down what each came to give. Many came forward and gave, some more and some less.—Amongst those that came was a rich old negro, almost as rich as all the rest put together, and threw down a small silver coin. "Take dat back again," said the negro that received the money, "Dat may be according to de first resolution, but it is not according to de second." The rich old man accordingly took it up, and hobbled back again to his seat in a great rage. One after another came forward, and almost all gave more than himself, and he was fairly ashamed of himself, and again threw down a piece of money on the table, saying, "Dare, take dat!" It was a valuable piece of gold, but it was given so ill-temperedly, that the negro answered again, "No! dat won't do yet. It may be according to de first and second resolution, but it is not according to de last;" and he was obliged to take up his coin again. Still angry at himself and all the rest, he sat a long time, till nearly all were gone, and then came up to the table, and with a smile on his face, and very willingly gave a large sum to the treasurer. "Very well," said the negro, "Dat will do. Dat according to all de resolutions."

SCRIPTURE ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Arabs of the Desert commonly clothe themselves in manufactures of camel's hair; and the article most prized by them is the "haik" or cloak of that material; it is either with or without broad strips; it consists of a square piece, with holes for arms, and has no seam. The Druses of Lebanon, and the people of Mesopotamia, not only wear a coat which is "without seam," but of "many colors," having variegated strips proceeding to a point downward from the shoulders like a reversed pyramid. This is believed to be of the same description as that bestowed by Jacob on his favorite child We are informed that our Saviour also wore "a coat without seam, woven from the top throughout," and that, in the wilderness, St. John "had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins." The "sackcloth" of the scriptures was a similar manufacture, but of the roughest and coarsest kind, like that which is worn by dervishes and reputed saints. It is still used for sacks and tent covers. We can easily understand the necessity of a girdle; no person with loose flowing robes can engage in active occupation without first "girding up the loins"—that is, taking up a portion of their dress out of their way. Some lay aside their outer garment for the time; others put forth their strength by fastening a belt or girdle round the waist, by laying bare the arms to the shoulder. Thus Elijah girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab to Jezreel; and the sacred writings abound in passages, which, like this, illustrate the habits of those who wear the oriental costume. CHRISTIAN.

To be denominated a Christian was in the estimation of the Christian professors and martyrs, their highest honor. This is forcibly shown in the narrative which Eusebius has copied from an ancient record, of one Sanctus in Vienna, who endured all the inhuman tortures which art could inflict. His tormentors hoped, by the continuance and severity of his pains, to extort from him some unfortunate acknowledgment; but he withstood them with unflinching fortitude, neither disclosing to them his name, nor his native land, nor his condition in life, whether freeman or slave. To all their interrogatories he only replied, in the Latin tongue, I am a Christian, affirming that his name, his country, and kindred—all were included in this. Of the same import also was the deportment of the Martyr Lucian, as related by Chrysostom. To every interrogation, he replies, I am a Christian. Of what country are you? I am a Christian. What is your occupation? I am a Christian. Who are your parents? I am a Christian. And such was his reply to every question. [Coleman.

DEGRADING HABIT OF SWEARING.

It is not easy to perceive what honor or credit is connected with swearing! Does a man receive a promotion because he is a notable blusterer? Or does any man advance to dignity because he is expert in profane swearing? How low must be the character which such impertinence will not degrade. Inexcusable, therefore, must be the practice which has neither reason nor passion to support it. The drunkard has his cups, the lecher his mistress, the satirist his revenge, the ambitious man his preferments, the miser his gold; but the common swearer has nothing; he is a fool at large, sells his soul for naught, and drudges the service of the devil, gratis. Swearing is void of all plea. It is not the native offspring of the soul, nor interwoven with the texture of the body, nor in any way allied to our frame. For as a great man, (Tillotson,) expresses it, "though some men pour out oaths as though they were natural, yet no man was ever born of a swearing constitution." But it is a custom, a low and paltry custom, picked up by low and paltry spirits, who have no sense of honor, or regard for decency; but are forced to substitute some rhapsody of nonsense, to supply the vacancy of good sense. Hence, the silliness of the practice can only be eqalled by the silliness of those who adopt it.

THE MARTYRS.

They walked unflinching to the stake,
Those holy men and true!
And women shrunk not to partake
The cup of suffering too!
He, who for love of them in torments died,
Their souls with help unspeakable supplied!

The gentle met the scornful eye,
Nor shrunk from its proud gaze;—
The timid gladly chose to die
Ere leave their Saviour's ways;—
The simple answered wisely in that day,
God's Holy Spirit taught them what to say.

They feared not the rack or flame,
They feared not the sword,
The agony, the wrath, the shame,
Or the reviler's word.
Through Death's most fearful valley calm they trod,
One walked beside them, 'twas the Son of God!

—In happier times, in happier lands,
Our peaceful lot is cast;
Yet not inactive Satan stands,
To lure us from our post,
The prince of this world feigned to repose
Deceitfully—no change his hatred knows!

'Twere better far for us that we Should tread where martyrs trod,
Than in the world's prosperity,
Learn to forget our God.
Earth's fears and friends are mortal pleasures frail,
But God's eternal purpose cannot fail. YORKE.

The following communication, from Rev. A. Judson, to the Editress of the Mother's Journal, is invested with double interest owing to the circumstances to which it alludes. This beloved Missionary, after a sojourn of thirty three years in Burmah, is again with us for a little season. Those who have enjoyed the privilege of seeing his face, and hearing his voice once more in the flesh, have had their hearts touched by most tender and soul-stirring associations. Reader, do you know the trials and labors of this dear brother, and of the Mission with which he has been so long connected? If not, become familiar with them, and the few crosses you may have borne for Christ will seem light in comparison.

* * * * I send you the accompanying lines by my late beloved wife, written on board ship near the Isle of France, when she was so decidedly convalescent that it appeared to be my duty to return to Maulmain, and leave her to prosecute the voyage alone. After we arrived, however, at that Island, she became worse, and I was obliged to relinquish my first purpose. She continued to decline until we reached St. Helena, when she took her departure, not for the 'setting sun,' but for the sun of glory, that never sets, and left me to pursue a very different course, and under very different circumstances from those anticipated in the lines—

THE PARTING.

"We part on this green islet, love,
Thou for the eastern main—
I for the setting sun, love—
O when to meet again!

My heart is sad for thee, love,
For lone thy way will be;
And oft thy tears will fall, love,
For thy children and for me.

The music of thy daughter's voice
Thou'lt miss for many a year,
And the merry shout of thine elder boys,
Thou'lt list in vain to hear.

When we kneelt to see our Henry die,
And heard his last faint moan,
Each wiped the tears from other's eyes—
Now each must weep alone.

My tears fall fast for thee, love,
How can I say farewell?
But go; thy God be with thee, love,
Thy heart's deep grief to quell.

Yet my spirit clings to thine, love,
Thy soul remains with me,
And oft we'll hold communion sweet
O'er the dark and distant sea.

And who can paint our mutual joy,
When, all our wanderings o'er,
We both shall clasp our infants three,
At home, on Burmah's shore.

But higher still shall our raptures glow,
On yon celestial plain,
When the loved and the parted here below
Shall meet, ne'er to part again.

Then gird thine armor on, love,
Nor faint thou by the way,
Till the Boodh shall fall, and Burmah's sons
Shall own Messiah's sway."

And so, God willing, I will endeavor yet to do; and while her prostrate form finds repose on the rock of the ocean, and her sanctified spirit enjoys sweeter repose on the bosom of Jesus, let me continue to toil on, all my appointed time, until my change shall come.

Yours affectionately, A. JUDSON.

THE DRUNKARD'S WIFE.

Composed by Miss S. E. CHADWICK, of Gardiner, Maine, and sung at Mr. GOUGH's visit there, Sept., 1844; and again at the second Anniversary of his signing the Pledge, October 28, in the Tremont Temple, Boston.

'Twas a woman's dying bed,
And a fair child bent with a tearful eye,
With an aching heart and a heavy sigh,
To raise that drooping head.
"Look again, daughter, thro' the dreary dark!
Hush! is it not my husband's step? Oh hark! oh hark!"

With a noiseless foot she crept,
And sadly looked through the broken pane;
But she naught could see, for the driving rain,
And she turned away and wept.
Look again, daughter," &c.

"I shall rest soon with the dead—
Now, I think of the past with its happy hours,
When my brow was wreathed with its bridal flowers,
Of the time when we were wed.
"Look again, daughter," &c.

Will he bend o'er his wine cup now?
Will he yield to its mad'ning, dead'ning power?
Will he leave me thus in this dreary hour?
With the death damp on my brow?
"Look again, daughter," &c.

It is still, they have all passed by!
He, in whose griefs I have borne my part;
He, that I loved with a changeless heart,
He hath left me alone to die!
Come away, daughter! raise my drooping head,
Come, for my dying dream of hope has fled."

BLESSINGS.

We are continually desiring and asking for blessings, both temporal and spiritual; yet how many there are clustered about our paths, and falling at our feet, which might be ours, would we but stretch forth the hand to gather them, and which we yet never possess. God smiles upon us in the flowers, and tells us that we are the creatures of his love, but we shroud our minds in some imaginary woe, and pass them by without a glance. He flings a rich boon upon us in the bursting sunlight of the morning, and we forget the throb of heart-worship that is due, and plunge our souls amid the cares of life, without perceiving that the gold of heaven is poured in showers about us. We are often like one who has bandaged his eyes, and goes abroad groping, and complaining that there is no light. But amid all the blessings with which the earth is strewn, there is none which casts a sweeter light upon the soul—none which breathes a deeper melody, or exhales a more soothing fragrance than that of human sympathy, and yet there is none which is more wont to be trampled under foot. We go forth under the pure vault of heaven, and meet our fellows as if no bond of brotherhood united us—passing one another with averted eyes, or looks intent on vacancy; and thousands, who thus meet, bear in their bosoms' hearts that yearn for sympathy; yet they forget that other hearts are constituted like their own, and that they must "sow where they would reap." It is an acknowledged injunction upon all christians to love one another; but there are many who include themselves under this title, who are under the lash of this command, wont to say of their brethren, "Why, I hope I love them as christians, but—" and the remainder of the sentence shows that the feeling with which they regard them is anything but human sympathy. Now there may be love in this; but verily it is not the love of which I am speaking—it is not the love which forms the sweetest of life's blessings, and can make a garden in the dreariest wilderness.

Yet where the true and living spirit of Christianity exists, this love will exist also, will it not? I do not mean the love which we hope we feel, while we have to feed its fires with borrowed oil continually, to keep these burning; but that deep, gushing, overflowing fount of feeling which could not possibly be mistaken for anything else. Nor do I mean that love which spends itself upon some particular sect or body, or even upon the whole body of christians, but that which extends to all mankind, and loves everybody because they were made in the image of God, without stopping to question whether they be proud or humble, righteous or degraded, Jews or Gentiles, that which loves them now, and not that which is going to love them when they shall be proselyted to some particular faith. This is the love which I call the chief blessing of life, the golden grain which we may sow, and be sure that it will spring up at once in a harvest of diamonds around us. Kind words are the gems we should scatter, and smiles the sunlight by whose influence they grow.

There is many a garden in the human heart which now lies barren, or choked with weeds upon which habitual smiles would pour a flood of light which would cause them to flourish and bear fruit an hundred fold. That spirit must be far sunk in gloom and bitterness which can resist the cheering beams of a loving, happy countenance. This blessing is reflexive; a wealth which we must pour out for others, ere its treasures are of avail to ourselves A frown shuts down the gates of the heart, and leaves darkness behind, as well as before. A smile raised them again, and the light streams back to its recesses, and pours its pure tide on all around us. If there be "holy waters" that will "lay evil spirits," they are hidden here. We mingle with the world—or the world, we may say, (for we are but a part of it) mingles its thronging multitudes like the characters in a masquerade. The features of the mask we wear are known, but nothing more. We meet in crowds continually, busied with our own thoughts, and caring for our own cares, with blank unwritten faces, and know not, nor seek to know what burdens of anguish are borne in the bosoms of those who pass us by. How many there are, who, beneath the moveless, stony features, which we have learned to call humanity, bear hearts lacerated and wounded, which they suffer to fester in concealment until the last life drop is wasted, or until they are cicatrized and callous to all feeling, because they meet with none to whom they can look for sympathy. How often would a kind word, or even a passing smile from a stranger, lighten the spirit of some care-worn pilgrim, and send him on his way with a happier step, perhaps to fling down, in his turn, the same blessing into the heart of the next he meets. And yet how sparing are we of these simple gifts. This want of sympathy is not natural. It is not thus that children meet. Look at their gentle, kindly faces, how they peer into everybody's eyes, as if they were sure they should find affection hidden somewhere in their depths; and when they fail to find it, what a look of wonder is expressed upon their countenances. It is that which makes children so lovely and beloved. They have learned their first lesson in heartlessness when they fail to find that love for which they look.

One burning sultry day, not many months since, I was toiling up a sandy hill, and had nearly reached the summit, when I turned aside into a by-path which led by a shorter way into the road I wished to take. This path was very steep, and the deep sand slipped from under my feet at every step. I was fatigued with a long walk, and more than usually inclined to feel that this is a weary world. I had, however, taken but a few steps up this ascent when a low gurgling laugh arrested my attention, and, looking up, I noticed just beside me, with their bare feet buried in the sand, two children, a boy and a girl. They were scantily clad, and though their hands and faces might have been clean when they left home, they were now thoroughly soiled by their contact with this mundane sphere—but they were none the less happy for this. The little girl had risen from her seat, and was watching my ascent with apparent delight. "Ah, ha," said she, "it's 'eal hard gittin' up this hill; aint it, aint it? Willie couldent hardly get up—he couldent. 'ook at my stones, 'ady, isent they pretty?" Delighted with the sweet confidence with which she addressed me, I paused a moment and answered to her joyous prattle; and, as I turned away, I heard her voice still speaking to her brother, "Isent she a dear, good lady, Willie? Willie, isent she?" I smiled as I thought of the simple manner in which I had obtained the child's blessing; yet it was better to me than if she had scattered a shower of gold upon my path. I remembered when my own test of goodness was as careless as hers, and I thought that if kind words were not always criterious of worth, they were messengers of joy. Adv. M. R.

LAW AND GOSPEL.

NUMBER FOUR.

We have seen that there is a fixed principle of classification, according to which laws are distributed into different kinds. This principle respects the nature or character of the relation, in which the laws originate.

We have seen what is the relation, in which originates the Moral Law—that law, which tries the moral character of men, and shows that they have need of a Saviour. Our next inquiry is, whether that law is confined to any particular part of the Bible;—whether it is in the Old Testament, or in the New;—and whether it has, drawn around it, any particular line of demarkation, by which it may at once be distinguished.

If we expect to find a methodical digest of the laws, which originate in the relation of men to God as his creatures, we shall be disappointed. It does not comport with the design of revelation to teach theology by system. Its design seems rather to be to give an outline of man's moral conduct under different circumstances of his probation. Each of these circumstances furnishes the occasion of developing some law, which bears upon his behavior. Hence, his probation being finished, the laws, which have been developed on different occasions, will be found scattered over his whole history. We speak not of our individual, but of our collective humanity, passing through different stages of its history, and affording so many different opportunities for bringing the rule of rectitude to bear upon its moral posture.

The precepts of the moral law then, instead of being methodically digested, are scattered, here and there, over the whole book of revelation. We find them in the Old Testament, and in the New;—intermingled with historical narrations, ceremonial rites, and gospel doctrine. But here an important question arises—Is there any principle, by which we can gather out, and separate these precepts so as to class them under the head to which they belong?

Reason has an unquestionable right to exercise itself in a case like this. But here the office of reason is very different from that where it assumes to excogitate the duties of the law. In the latter case it exercises itself proudly, assuming to have such an understanding of the divine nature, as to be able to decide what are the duties, or the worship suitable to it. But in the former, it acts with humility, not overstepping its proper sphere. It claims merely to judge, whether there is a harmony between our nature, as God has constituted it, and those precepts which the law enjoins. In other words, it decides a simple matter of experience, whether those precepts are adapted to meet, and fill, and bless all the faculties of our nature. It does not judge of God's nature, but of our own nature, and that only so far as our experience goes. This we conceive to be reason's legitimate office in matters of religion.

Now when a precept meets our very nature,—fills, and blesses it,—this is proof that it originates in the relation, which our nature bears to its Creator. But in most cases the precept so obviously takes cognizance of this relation, that the most humble intellect at once perceives it; there is no room for mistake. A person of intellect so obtuse, that he could not discover it, could hardly be reckoned an accountable being; he must be classed among idiots.

Let us now try the Decalogue by the doctrine we have advocated. The first precept is, "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me." What relation does this precept imply? Evidently it acknowledges Jehovah as the Creator. On no other ground would he deserve the supremacy. If we suppose him in this precept to claim the supremacy simply on the ground of his having delivered the Israelites from the house of bondage—as is some times argued from the preface to the Decalogue—he evidently claims more than his due. For a claim to supremacy could be made only on the ground of the highest and greatest work, that could possibly be performed in their behalf. But if we suppose redemption from Egyptian servitude to have been the greatest work, that Jehovah ever wrought for that people, then we must suppose another God to have been their Creator, who might justly say to the one that redeemed them, "Stand by; what right hast thou to set up thy claims above mine, by saying thou shalt have no other Gods before me. Wait until my claims are satisfied; for know, that I brought them into being, and have the first right to their services." It is as Creator, then, that Jehovah is entitled to the supremacy. No additional proof is necessary to show what is the relation on which this first commandment of the Decalogue is founded.

The second precept. "Thou shalt not make to thee any graven image," &c. This is founded in the incorporeity or immateriality of God's nature. As it is utterly impossible to represent a mere spirit by any material image, so He has forbidden it. (Comp. Acts 17: 29.) There being the widest possible difference between spirit and matter, a material image of God conveys a downright lie. Those who undertake thus to represent Him, are said to change the truth of God into a lie. Rom. 1: 25. This precept then is not founded upon that character which the Divine Being displayed towards the Israelites, when he led them out of Egypt, but upon that character which he sustains towards ALL as an incorporeal Being, yet having a real subsistency.

Third precept. "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." This precept is founded on the moral nature of God as a holy Being. The worship that we offer him by calling on his name, must be sincere,—it must mean all it solemnly professes. A holy Being can accept no other. It must be characterized by the most profound reverence for Him: a vain trifling with his name is an insult to his holiness. Whether this precept is founded in the special character he bore to the Israelites, or upon that character which he bears to all the world, let common sense decide.

The fourth commandment we pass for the present, that we may afterwards consider it by itself more fully.

The fifth. "Honor thy father and thy mother." How plain is it, that this precept is founded on the relation subsisting between parent and child; that if such relation did not exist there could be no such law; and that such relation did exist long before the exodus of Israel from Egypt. It needs no proof; the dullest intellect comprehends it.

The sixth. "Thou shalt not kill." This commandment is founded on the equality of the relation subsisting between us as fellow creatures. We are all alike made in the image of God. One has no supremacy over another, that he should presume to dispose of his life. Let this equality of relation be destroyed—if such a thing were possible—so that my fellow man shall become degraded to the nature of a brute; and the law can no longer have any existence. I then have a right to take his life. Gen. 9: 3.

The seventh. "Thou shalt not commit adultery." This law is founded on the sexual relation. When God created man, he established the distinction of sex—"male and female created he them." Genesis 1: 27. Not only did he ordain this relation, but he put a restriction upon it by making but one male and one female:—thus clearly enacting, that the man should confine himself to the woman appropriated to him, and that the woman should confine herself, in all fidelity, to the man appropriated to her. Out of the sexual relation thus established, and thus restrained by the very act which established it, grows the above law.

The eighth. "Thou shalt not steal." Man was not only created, but he was brought into being invested with certain advantages for acquiring property. "Replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." Gen. 1: 26, 28, 29. In one word, he was made lord of this lower world. Availing himself of such advantage, he becomes the proprietor of such portion of the earth as he subdues, and renders available for the end for which it was designed. Thus the property, of which men have lawfully possessed themselves, has grown out of the grant originally made in creation. When therefore I steal from another, I interfere with the original grant made by his Maker; I hinder him from availing himself of the means put in his hands, and discourage him from fulfilling the law of that relation to the earth, under which he was made,—"subdue and replenish it." It hence appears that man is not merely my fellow, but he is my fellow invested with the rights of ownership; and I cannot do violence to this right, without at the same time doing violence to the relation, in which we were originally placed to one another.

The ninth commandment is, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." My neighbor is not only my fellow creature, but he is my fellow creature invested with a moral character. Moreover, as our nature is so constituted, that we must necessarily live in society, and not isolated each by himself; and as a man's comfort in, and union with society depends upon the preservation of his character;—it is manifest, that when I bear false witness against my neighbor, I do violence to the relation, in which the Creator has placed him to me. This law, therefore, like the others, grows out of the original relation which creation established.

The tenth commandment. "Thou shalt not covet," &c., being designed only as a security for the faithful performance of all the rest, grows of course out of the same relations, and needs no particular remarks.

THE WRITINGS OF SWEDENBORG.

The present seems to be a day of increasing popularity to the writings of Emanuel Swedenborg. As an evidence of it, we have received lately several numbers of what is called "the Swedenborg Library," containing "the Memorabilia of Swedenborg, or memorable relations of things seen and heard in Heaven and Hell." These writings are published by John Allen, at 139 Nassau street, N. Y., and are accompanied with introductions and notes by Prof. Geo. Bush, who, it seems, has become a full believer in the revelations of this Swedish claimant to inspiration. We have only had time to glance hastily at the Parts of the Library; but from what we have read, we feel no disposition to exchange the plain instructions of the Book of Divine Revelation, which were spoken by holy men of old as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, for the revelations of one who seems to us to have much in common with a dreamy visionary.

While we are upon this subject, we may as well acknowledge the receipt of a paper setting forth that Swedenborg excludes from his canon of the Word of God, many of the most important books in the received Scriptures, and particularly the writings of Paul. We do not know who is the author of this paper, but he speaks like a person who has examined the subject; and from one extract which he brings from the writings of Swedenborg, it seems that he excludes Ruth, Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Songs of Solomon in the Old Testament, and the Acts, Paul's fourteen epistles, the epistle of James, the two epistles of Peter, the three epistles of John, and the epistle of Jude in the New Testament. These charges are of a most serious nature, and will serve to bar many minds against the examination of Swedenborg's views. If they are true, they ought to have that effect; if they are not true, they ought to be disproved.

QUESTIONS FOR ROMAN CATHOLICS.

1st. If the Apostle Paul says, (1 Tim. 3: 2,) that a bishop should be "the husband of one wife," then why does the Catholic Church say that a bishop shall have no wife?

2d. Do not the Roman Catholics differ as much from the Apostle Paul in this, as darkness differs from light?

3d. What church is there now, which will so completely answer the prophecy of Paul, (1 Tim. 4: 3,) in their "forbidding" their clergy "to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats" on Friday, as does the Roman Catholic Church?

4th. Does not the commandment of God say, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image," while the Roman Catholics say, they "ought to be retained in churches, and honor and veneration paid to them?"

5th. Are they not properly idolators in this thing?

6th. Do the Roman Catholics "rest the SABBATH day according to the commandment," as the early Christians did? (Luke 23: 56.) Or have they "changed times and laws," (Dan. 7: 25,) so that the words "the Sabbath day," now, mean something entirely different from what the same words ever meant when the New Testament was written?

Will some Roman Catholic please answer the above questions, and oblige C.

LOCATION OF THE FOREIGN MISSION.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I have been in a great measure ignorant of the reasons which have determined the Board of Missions to fix on Eastern Africa as the field of our infant operations. What little has been published on the subject in the "Recorder," is all I have been able to gather; and so little information has circulated with us respecting the operations of the Society, that I have felt my interest corresponding much with my information. I have for a number of years been somewhat aware of the difficulties attending a mission to Abyssinia, and was therefore the more difficultied in my mind to solve the reasons for selecting this dark and more than ordinarily difficult station. I knew that God had a blessing in stor eeven for Abyssinia, but the great question in my mind was, whether we had been sufficiently directed to this portion of the world, in full view of the probable difficulties attending it. It is true, that no difficulties should deter us, under a full conviction of the will of God; but for want of that assurance, my mind has been as dark as the region which has been contemplated for our first foreign missionary field.

But I confess a little light sprung up in my mind, on reading the article in the Recorder of Nov. 13, containing items of Missionary Intelligence, when I observed, that the Board was not fixed in relation to that particular country, but that China and Palestine had been suggested in its stead. I think that we should adapt our labors to our circumstances, and the distance as well as the magnitude of our undertaking to our means for its accomplishment. We as a people are inconsiderable in numbers and means; and the great difficulty of supporting a mission so far removed from us, as either Abyssinia or China, will be enhanced by the feebleness of those means.

I do not know as I can bring any reason that will be satisfactory to others in favor of Palestine; but at its mention such a thrill passed my bosom as fired it in 1837, when the mission to the Jews was under consideration, and my mind was in a very considerable degree settled on Palestine as the field of our operations. But the Society falling back, and settling on a home mission in its stead, I felt an assurance that obstacles would attend a home mission that would go far to dishearten the Society, and ultimately cause it to suspend its operations. The main reasons I had for this conviction, were, that under a government securing such freedom of action and commercial advantages, the consolations of religion were by far less attractive than in countries where the Israelites were more numerous and more oppressed; that those living among us, were better armed with the arguments drawn from the corruptions of society under Christian instruction, and the arguments of modern infidelity, than those less attracted by the hopes and prospects of worldly advantage under a genial government, and influenced by the improprieties of popular religionists.

I am still under the impression, that it is not far distant when "the times of the Gentiles will be fulfilled," and the dispersion will terminate, and the abomination that has made Jerusalem desolate will come to an end—when she may become inhabited as in former days, under the mild influence of divine favor and Christian institutions; and the thought has frequently occurred to me, whether we should not be permitted to aid in the consummation of this most desirable work. When Abyssinia was named, I concluded not, but I am still in hope of such a result. I know I am not so well informed on the subject of missions as I once thought myself to be, from circumstances which deny me the opportunities I used to enjoy; and I must yield my preferences to wiser and more intelligent counsellors. Still, if what I might say can have a tendency to excite inqury and investigation of the merits of this question, I shall be satisfied. J.

REVIVAL IN SCOTT.

SCOTT, N. Y., Nov. 23, 1845.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

It will doubtless be gratifying to you, as well as to all those who love the Redeemer, to learn that the Lord has again visited us in mercy. It has been a season of spiritual dearth with us for a long time; and although we have had at times indications of the divine favor, yet the darkness and apathy which has pervaded the church has been such as to severely try the faith of God's people, and many had almost or quite yielded to the discouragements with which they have been surrounded. But God, who is infinite in mercy, has heard the prayers of his children, and revived his work.

Elder John Green, of Hopkinton, R. I., came here on the 24th of October, on a visit, and immediately commenced a series of meetings, in which an encouraging attention was paid to the preached word, and an unusual solemnity was soon manifested; and we trust that his labors have been blest to the awakening of the church, to the reclaiming of backsliders, and to the conversion of some souls to God. Surely God has been better than all our fears. The seed that has been sown in tears for a few years past, has not been lost, but has now sprung up to the glory of God.

Elder Burdick has baptized thirty-four within the last three weeks, thirty-one of whom united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church, and more are expected to follow. If the Lord has not blessed us "according to the exceeding riches of his glory," it is because of the smallness of our faith. Pray for us, that the work may go on and spread.

Sincerely yours,

H. C. HUBBARD.

LARGE BEQUESTS.

A statement has been going the rounds of the newspapers, that a wealthy Baptist in New Orleans has recently bequeathed $500,000 to the American and Foreign Bible Society. The truth is now said to be, that the gentleman referred to is yet alive, but has made a will which gives to that Society at his death, a very large sum, to be appropriated to the distribution of Bibles, under certain restrictions as to the places and manner. The same person has already given to the Baptist church in New Orleans, under the care of the Rev. Mr. Hinton, a handsome property, from which the church will receive an annual income of about $3,000.

This sounds very large, and is really very liberal. But it strikes us that if the individual in question would take the matter into his own hands, and see that his money is expended to do the good he designs, the act would be much more effectual and praiseworthy. We like the plan of each man's acting as his own executor, giving while he lives, and trusting God to raise up persons to give after he is gone.

ACCIDENTS ON HOLY DAYS.

We have several times alluded to the absurd custom which prevails among certain religious newspaper editors, of catching up every accident which occurs on Sunday, and making a great ado about the evidence which it affords of the sacredness of that day. Our object has been to show, that the same kind of argument might be used with equal propriety and equal effect in favor of any other day of the week. The following article, which we copy from an exchange paper, furnishes a fair illustration of the truth of this position:—

A Warning to Sunday-breakers.—A few Sundays since, a boy was drowned in the Genesee Valley Canal—a solemn warning to all boys and men who disregard the Sabbath.—Modern Christian.

Desecration of Holy Monday.—The whole city of Rochester was kept in constant confusion on Monday last by working and amusement. The noise was a great source of annoyance to the worshipers. Cannot some means be taken to prevent such bare-faced infidelity?—Grecian.

Judgement upon Tuesday-breakers.—An Engine and Tender was thrown from the track some 30 feet down an embankment on Tuesday the 12th, near Louisville, Kentucky, a just judgement upon those who violate our holy Sabbath.—Persian.

'Shall I not visit for these things, saith the Lord?' When will men learn to keep holy our sacred days? The judgements of the Lord are weekly, warning them against violating holy Wednesday. On Wednesday the 14th, five persons were killed at Ripley, Conn., by the bursting of a boiler attached to a steam flouring mill. Sinners, take warning against violating holy Wednesday.—Assyrian.

Shocking state of Morals.—In the United States a large number of newspapers are actually printed on Thursday, which day we are commanded to keep holy. Poor infidel nation—have they no authorities to put a stop to such proceedings?—Egyptian.

More Warnings.—Two men were killed for descrating holy time, by the blowing up of a powder mill at Lowell, Mass., on Friday last.—Mahometan.

A Warning to Saturday-breakers. A young lady at Troy, N. Y., had both her legs crushed by the cars on Saturday, a few weeks since. She had been on a pleasure party contrary to the commandment, and was thus made a warning to all Sabbath-breakers.—Jew.

POPISH LIBERALITY IN SARDINIA.—In Sardinia not a single copy of the New Testament, nor a religious tract, can be given away without the risk of imprisonment. About two years since, a Swiss gentleman went to the baths at Aix. A woman was employed as a spy, who professed to be a protestant, and who asked him for some religious books. He gave her some; she took them to the priest, and the priest handed them to the police, and in a few hours the donor was in a dungeon with the lowest criminals, where he was kept nine months!

ANTI-TEXAS MOVEMENT.—The approach of another session of Congress seems to have served as the occasion for rousing a very warm and extensive anti-Texas movement. Meetings have been held in many of the principal towns in Massachusetts, as well as in other States, at which stirring speeches have been made, and strong protests sent forth. These protests are extensively circulated, receive large numbers of signatures of men from both political parties, and are forwarded to Washington for presentation at the first opportunity after Congress opens. The ground is taken, that if Texas is now a part of the United States territory, it is not yet a State of the Union, and cannot become such without an express vote of Congress. Hence the opponents of slavery call upon all the friends of freedom to send in their remonstrances against the annexation of Texas as a Slave State.

REV. CHARLES T. TORREY.—Our readers well remember the case of Rev. Charles T. Torrey, who was sent to the Maryland Penitentiary about a year ago, to remain five years, for the high crime, as the laws of Maryland esteem it, of aiding the oppressed to go free. Reports have reached us some time ago that his health was suffering from confinement. But we were not prepared to hear such a sad account of him as is given in the following extract from a letter published in the Puritan, and dated Baltimore, Nov. 14:—

"In passing through the dormitories, I caught sight of him at some distance before me. He was seated at the stone, with the prison garb on him, and the prison cap upon his head. As we passed him, he pulled off his cap, as a mark of respect to the Warden, who accompanied us. I had a fair view of him, though it was but for a moment. That sight made my heart bleed. It has followed me ever since. Mr. Torrey is sick, and sick even to death, if he be not soon released. His countenance is death-like, his frame attenuated, his hands bony, and his face ghastly. The iron has already entered his soul. If the hand of the Executive open not the doors of the prison-house, the hand of death will ere long give him a release. Oh! it is a dreadful thing to be an inmate of a prison, and to be an associate of the felon. To have night succeed day, and day follow night, and find one's self still shut out from society and friends by the grated door. And then to pass those long, long, dark winter nights, from 5 P. M. till 7 A. M., all alone. No one to speak to, nothing to do, no sound to relieve the death-like stillness of the livelong night in that prison, save at the interval of each half-hour, the watch cry "All is well." And to such a mind as Mr. Torrey's, the idea must add exquisite suffering, that after the first burst of sympathy is past, he may be forgotten. * * * * * *

"I had heard that Mr. T. was not well. But the truth had not fully been told. He is very ill. He can do no work, not even the lightest. He passes his time on the couch in his cell, or by the stone—or in very pleasant weather, in walking with a very feeble step around the prison yard. God send him swift deliverance."

FROM CHINA.—Writing from China, Dr. Parker states that "great numbers of religious books are called for; and some of the high officers of the Kingdom are now receiving and reading them. Public Christian worship is now maintained without hindrance in any of the parts which are open to foreigners for trade.

The missionaries (he says) are thus beginning to witness the beneficial effects of the Memorial of the High Commissioner, advising his Majesty the Emperor, that no reason exists why the religion of the High God of Heaven should not be tolerated in the trading ports of the Empire."

DEMANDS FOR THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.—The Board of the American Bible Society say, in the last number of their "Record," that "for several months past the demand for books has been unprecedented—(amounting in September to more than 56,000)—while the pecuniary receipts by which other books are to be prepared, have been, much of the time, quite limited. If the friends of the Bible wish to see our own people, and the more destitute of other nations, to whom we have access, furnished with the word of life, they must be systematic and prompt in their payment for books received, and liberal in their donations."

THE JESUITS.—The Catholic Herald claims that whilst the Jesuites are being persecuted in France, their order is prospering and increasing in England. They have over 160 members of the order, thirty-three establishments, houses, colleges, or simple houses in England. The principal establishment is the College of Stonyhurst, in Lancashire, which contains twenty-six novices, and fourteen brothers. Twenty of their missionaries are at Calcutta, and as much protected, it is said, by the English government, as the Protestant missionaries. In Ireland there are over seventy of the order. They have there the Colleges of Tullabed, Clongows, and Dublin. In Dublin they have recently founded a second College.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

OPENING OF CONGRESS—PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

By the Magnetic Telegraph to Baltimore, and thence by special express to New York, news to Tuesday noon was received in this city at 9 o'clock on Tuesday evening.

The Senate met at noon, Dec. 1, 1845, when Vice-President Dallas took the chair, and 43 members answered to their names. After receiving credentials of new members, the customary committee to wait on the President was appointed, and the Senate adjourned.

The House of Representatives met at noon, Dec. 1—212 members present. Mr. Davis of Indiana was elected Speaker, soon after which the House adjourned.

On Tuesday, Dec. 2, at 12 o'clock, the President's Message was communicated to Congress.

[The Message is well written; but we do not judge it advisable to publish it entire, and therefore make only the following statements of its opinions upon the most interesting topics.]

After a suitable introduction, the annexation of Texas comes up. Nothing remains to consummate the measure, but an act of Congress to admit the State of Texas into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States. This, the President thinks, there are strong reasons for doing at an early period.

Our relations with Mexico are not amicable, but a Minister has been sent there, and there are hopes of a settlement.

The Message is quite mild in regard to Oregon, and leaves the matter mostly with Congress. It recommends a line of military posts to Oregon for the protection of emigrants, and a mail thither.

The Tariff is pretty extensively discussed, and free trade is the conclusion to which the discussion tends.

A Constitutional Treasury for the safe-keeping of the public money is strongly recommended.

In regard to Cheap Postage, the Message says but little, although it squints at an increase of the rates of postage. The income of the Post Office Department this year will fall short of the expenditures between one and two millions of dollars.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.—We learn that Col. Pitchlyn, of the Choctaw nation, is now in this city, and will remain during the winter, as the representative of his people, for the purpose of conducting and settling their business with the Government, which mission, we are sure, from the high character of the agent, will be well discharged.

Three nations of Indians are now represented here: the Choctaws, Cherokees, and Pottawatamies. And the presence of their Ambassadors suggests the apprehension that there must have been some defect in the management of their business heretofore, or that they are preparing to assume, it may be, a higher rank as members of the human family, and desire to place their affairs on such a solid basis as will enable them to do so.

It occurs to us, that if some competent pen were at leisure for the task, a series of interesting and instructive articles on Indian affairs, their improvement and prosperity, might be given.

A MEMBER OF CONGRESS.—Speaking of Mr. McConnell, of Alabama, a Washington letter says:—"The honorable gentleman reached town today, dressed in a most singular and outlandish style. He had on a pair of high-legged boots, coming up to his knees. His pantaloons were of buckskin, and the legs were thrust inside his boots. His coat was white, and his cap of rough bear skin. He immediately commenced a grand spree in honor of his re-election, and he has spent the day, I understand, in revisiting his old haunts. Of such are some of the legislators of this free and happy land."

MARRIAGE NOTICE EXTRAORDINARY.—The following most extraordinary marriage notice we copy from the Baltimore Covenant, an organ of Odd Fellows. Taliaferro P. Shaffner must be a tremendous man to maintain his perpendicular under such a superincumbent mass of dignities.

MARRIED.—In Worcester, Massachusetts, on Thursday, October 9th TAL. P. SHAFFNER, Esq. Attorner and Counsellor at Law, of Louisville, Ky. Past Grand H. Priest and Grand Patriarch of that State, a Grand Representative to the Grand Lodge of the United States from the Grand Encampment of Kentucky, Junior Editor of the Covenant, of Baltimore, Ex-Editor of the Free Mason, of Louisville, Corresponding and Recording Secretary and Librarian of the Kentucky Historical Society, Recording Secretary of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Capt. of the 1st. Company, 132d Regiment, 29th Brigade of Kentucky Militia, &c., to Miss NANCY R. PRATT, of the former place.

Papers throughout the Union, including Texas, Oregon and California, please copy.

HEAVY MEN.—The largest person ever known in Ireland, with, perhaps, the exception of Philip Macoul, the celebrated Irish Giant, was Roger Byrne, who resided in Orsory, and was buried on the 13th of May, 1784, in the church-yard of Rosennallis, in Queen's county. The coffin and its contents weighed five hundred and seventy-eight pounds. It was borne on a very long bier by thirty strong men, who were relieved at intervals. Roger Byrne died of no other disease than suffocation, occasioned by a superabundance of fat, which stopped the play of his lungs, and put a period to his life in the fifty-fourth year of his age. He was one hundred pounds heavier than the noted Bright of Malden in England, who weighed four hundred and sixty pounds—and within the circumference of whose waistcoat seven of the largest men in that town could be enclosed without constraint—and one hundred and eighty pounds lighter than Daniel Lambert, who died in 1809, and weighed seven hundred and thirty-nine pounds!

A citizen of Virginia, in a letter addressed to the Richmond Whig, says that "Charleston, S. C. has now a smaller population than it had in 1830, and is daily losing more. The population for twenty miles round the city is one third less than it was before the revolution!"

IRON BUSINESS IN WAREHAM.—The Sandwich (Mass) Observer, contains an interesting statement of the amount of iron manufactured in Wareham. It seems that there are four large iron manufactories now in operation, and that a fifth is to be established. These four factories are capable of manufacturing about 20,000 tons a year of scrap iron into various articles. This, at $70 a ton, will amount to no less than $1,408,000 per annum. They consume about 10,000 tons of coal, and give employment to about 475 hands. Besides these establishments for working iron, there is a furnace in operation for casting hollow-ware, and other articles, which turns out yearly about 600 tons of castings, valued at $15,000. There are about 150 nail tools at work, turning out annually 4,000 tons of nails, worth $360,000.

LYNCHING AMONG THE DRAYMEN.—The draymen with us are all 'men of color.' The law rules them to demand no more than 12 1-2 cents for hauling a load for any distance within the populous part of the city; and lately they have ruled themselves not to receive less—for having some shabby ones among them who were in the habit of taking away the regular business from their fellows by 'working under,' they found it necessary to adopt the stringent rule, and all violators of it were to submit voluntarily to such punishment as a jury of their body should award. A sharp look-out was kept for offenders, and two were soon caught in the act of working for less than the law allows; and being convicted, were sentenced to receive, the one twenty and the other ten lashes, as an example to deter others from similar practices. This sentence was duly executed yesterday morning, when the delinquents were taken to the West end of Water street, where they submitted to the infliction of the lash without resistance. The preceeding was novel; and its irregularity (though giving rise to no disturbance of the peace) is rather too much trenching on law and order to make a joke of. This was somewhat roughly explained to the chief actors (four in number) in the course of the day by the application of the cowhide to their own backs, according to law.

1828, Nov. 25.	1842, Nov. 23.
1830, Dec. 18.	1843, Dec. 1.
1840, " 3.	1844, Nov. 28.

From 1824 to this time, the canal has closed once on the 21st of December, once on the 20th, twice on the 18th, twice on the 11th, once on the 16th, twice on the 15th, once on the 9th, once on the 5th, once on the 4th, once on the 3d, twice on the 1st, once on the 30th, 28th, 26th, 25th, 24th, 23d Nov. The latest close is Dec. 21st. The chances judging from the past, are in favor of navigation till the close of Nov.

A new invention for making bricks has been planned by Mr. Samuel Lowry, of Southwark, which it is estimated will turn out 50,000 in a day, without the aid of steam. It consists of an inclined plane, upon which run cars connected by a rope that passes over a pulley at one end of the plane. The cars, which contain divisions of mounds the size of the article to be produced, are filled with the earth, and as a filled one passes down, the empty one moves up, the only power required to move them being the weight. The cars in their descent pass under cutters placed at certain angles, which throw off the top clay, and rollers which give the brick the required smoothness.

REMARKABLE LONGEVITY.—There is living in the town of Frankfort, near Utica, a man by the name of Harvey, 111 years of age. He is now, and has been for about three-fourths of a century, a preacher of the gospel. He was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., and distinctly remembers running about in the woods there 100 years ago. He has occasionally devoted some attention to agriculture, but has chiefly been engaged in the duties of his profession. He walks without any assistance except that of a staff. His conversation, and also his style of preaching, is animated, and frequently his eye brightens with the vivacity of youth. His mind is surprisingly active and vigorous, and his voice is sufficiently strong to fill a house capable of holding 1,000 persons or more. Wherever he goes multitudes flock to hear him. To use his own words, he "can draw more folks than live horses." He preached in Amsterdam, N. Y., while I was there in August last. Not having an opportunity to see him, I wrote to Rev. W. Hutchings, Pastor of the Baptist Church in that place, and from him the above facts in regard to this venerable patriarch, have been obtained. Truly the man who has seen the generation with which he came upon the stage, and the two succeeding ones, pass entirely off, and still lives to see another that has acted half their part, is a curiosity. Occasionally a primitive oak comes through the hundredth winter, with its foliage green and its branches broken. Yours, respectfully, INFLUENCE OF LOCALITY ON PLANTS.—Professor Liebig said he had been engaged in the analysis of plants growing in different districts extending from Giessen to the sea. It was found that corn, peas, beans, and grass, contained a larger proportion of soda as they grew nearer the sea coast; thus satisfactorily proving, that plants could substitute soda for potash, without injury to their growth. No plants were found in which there was no potash, but there were many in which there was no soda. It has been asked in what proportions soda and potash were found in the animal economy? Soda existed largely in the bile and blood—potash was found most abundantly in the muscles; hence the reason was evident why the use of soda (common salt) with the food of man was universal. It was quite evident that plants could substitute one constituent for another—it had even been found that in the tobacco plant lime has been replaced by potash. In answer to other inquiries, Professor Leibig remarked, that the alkalies in plants were not in combination as organic consituents; they could be dissolved out. Carbon, on the contrary, formed a part of their structure. Carbonic acid was absorbed by plants, and served, uniting with hydrogen and with water, to form a series of compounds containing varying proportions of these elements. [Bost. Cultivator.

SUMMARY.

Marvin Hughes, of Pittsford, Mass., owns a machine with which he threshed 410 bushels of wheat per day, for six days in succession—making in nine days 3900 bushels! The horse power was constructed by himself: the remainder of the machine by Mr. Pitts, of that city.

The fires in West Jersey plains last summer cut off the cranberries on hundreds of acres, so that not a berry has been seen this season in a space of fifty miles, where large and profitable crops have been gathered in years past.

The annual Tribute paid by Ireland to England in taxes and absentee rents, is £7,000,000, or $35,000,000. What nation on earth can exist with such a tremendous drain upon its resources? There are in Ireland 32 counties, whose population is 7,734,366, and whose superfices is 11, 943,000 Irish plantation acres.

The workmen are now building the walls of the Dry Dock in our Navy Yard at Brooklyn. This Dock is calculated to admit vessels of the largest class at high tide, when the gates are shut, and in two and a half hours the whole of the water is pumped out, and the vessel is left high and dry.

During the month of September the Patent Office at Washington, issued three patents for designs, and 49 for improvements. The amount of fees received was $5,973.

As an evidence of the superiority of iron over wooden steamboats, we see it stated that the Avon Monby iron steamboat, built in 1820 at the Horsley Iron Works, England, has been in use ever since, and the repairs to her keel have not altogether cost £50 during these twenty-five years. Another built in 1825, has been in perfect repair ever since. The number of iron steamboats built in England since 1830, has been over 150. The steam navy af the East India Company consists chiefly of iron: twenty-five are now in use in India.

At the meeting of the Synod of Philadelphia, Walter Lowrie, Esq. exhibited a pamphlet in octavo form, of Chinese printing, and stated as a remarkable fact, in proof of the cheapness of labor in China, that the cost of printing and paper of such a pamphlet was only one cent for fifty pages! Shall not hundreds of thousands of copies of the Holy Scriptures be furnished on these terms to the population of that great Empire, by Christian liberality.

Flour and other produce crowd into Albany in unprecedented abundance. The receipts by canal on Monday were 37,121 barrels of Flour, 376,600 lbs. Cheese, and 263,700 lbs. of Butter, a greater quantity than ever arrived in the city before in any one day.

Maley, and Rev. S. A. Latta, are still attached to this Church as Ministers. The seam which divides the Methodist Church does not seem to run exactly on Mason and Dixon's Line.

From Oct. 17 to Nov. 24 of the present year, there were discharged from the Sing Sing State Prison 24 convicts; 3 were pardoned, and 3 died. The whole number of prisoners is now 851—of whom 790 are males and 61 females. Van Steenburgh and O'Connor have arrived at Sing Sing.

Notices have been published of the intention to apply to the Legislature for the incorporation of companies to construct a Railroad from Schenectady to Utica on the south bank of the Mohawk; to construct a Railroad from Schenectady to Catskill; and to make such improvements in the Mohawk river by means of locks and dams, as shall fit the same for steamboat navigation. The capital of this last named company to be $150,000, with the privilege of increasing the same to $500,000.

Church Bells can now be made of steel, as has been proved by an ingenious American mechanic in Ohio, from a suggestion in an English newspaper. A bell weighing fifty pounds, made of steel, will cost only about thirty dollars, and can be heard two miles or more. The advantages of this invention are said to be two-fold, first, it is so cheap that every church may have a bell of a clear, brilliant and musical tone; second, it is so light and stationary, that even a slight belfry will sustain it. This newly-invented bell is rung by a crank, and any boy can do it as well as a regular parish bell-ringer. For about $200 a chime of seven bells can now be had.

There has been shipped from Rochester since the opening of canal navigation up to the 21st ult., 598,912 bbls. of flour; last year during the whole season 400,376 bbls. The exports this year will probably reach 600,000 bbls. The receipts of wheat during the same time have been by the Erie Canal 701,355 bushels, by the Genesee Valley Canal 357,205—in all 1,058,560 bushels. The amount of tolls received during the same time was $220,125 57—against $209,763 74 last year.

The Miners' Journal (Pottsville, Pa.) of Nov. 22, says: "We feel happy in being able to announce to our readers this week, that the shipments of coal from the Schuylkill region this year, now exceed one million tons! and, should the present mild weather continue a little longer, we believe the quantity for the whole year will reach 1,100,000 tons. Untrammeled individual enterprise is the great secret which has caused this region to outstrip so far all its competitors, some of which commenced before us."

A new Salt Spring has been discovered at Canastota, 25 miles East of Syracuse, on the Erie Canal. It was discovered in digging a well in the village for fresh water. At the depth of 30 feet a cavity was met with, in a red, indurated clay, or rock, in which the brine boiled up. The water is said to be as strong as that of Syracuse.

The Directors of the Lowell Manufacturing Company, at Lowell, Mass., voted a few days since to erect a new mill 320 feet long and 200 feet wide, five stories high, for the manufacture of power loom carpets. It will contain 50 Brussels and 250 Ingrain looms.

Hon. John M. Niles, U. S. Senator from Connecticut, has just taken to himself a second wife—late Miss Jane Pratt, of Spencertown, Columbia Co., N. Y.—with whom he is now on his way to Washington.

A lady lost her speech from excessive agitation during the recent calamitous fire at Sag Harbor, and has not since been able to utter a syllable.

A man by the name of Lines met his death on Wednesday last, while in the act of firing a train of powder used in blasting rocks. The slow match failed to ignite, and Lines, becoming impatient, applied his fusee to the powder itself, when it exploded with a terrible report, blowing him some twenty feet into the air, and killing him, it is almost needless to say, instantly.

John Ross, Chief of the Cherokee Nation, has been elected an honorary member of the Pennsylvania Historical Society.

President Day and Prof. Fitch of New Haven, whose illness was noticed some days since, are convalescent.

OBED M. COLEMAN.

Died April 5th, A. D. 1845, aged 28.

"As well the singers as the players on instruments shall be there." Psalm LXXXVII, 7.

Such is the striking inscription upon a beautiful marble monument about to be erected over the remains of Coleman, the inventor of the Eolian Attachment to the piano-forte, at Saratoga Springs, where he died.

Astonishing as it may seem, the removal of the Rapids in the Mississippi has been pronounced feasible, and determined upon by the authorities of Missouri. The reason for this novel and apparently impracticable step, is the devastation occasioned by the rising of the waters to the crops in their immediate vicinity.

A REMARKABLE BEE-HIVE.—A lady rented a house in this city a few weeks since, says the St. Louis American, and shortly after she moved into it she saw honey-bees crawling about the floor. At length she found that they came down the chimney. After having made a fire, a humming noise was heard in the flue which ran parallel with the one from her room, the fireplace of which is below. Her sons examined the top of the chimney, and to their utter astonishment, found the flue filled with honey to within a few inches of the top of the chimney. From the sound of the bees below, the honey must extend to the depth of twenty feet. Whenever the family wish to enjoy a delicious repast, they have only to send up to the chimney—blow a little tobacco smoke in the flue, which drives the bees below, and with a knife cut off as much honey comb as they wish, and that of the nicest kind. The flue of the chimney in which the honey is, extends to the basement, and has never been used.

DIED,

In Plainfield, Otsego Co., N. Y., Nov. 23, after a confinement of three weeks, JOSHUA C. SISSON, aged 58 years. His disease, an organic affection of the stomach and liver, was very painful in its operation on the system; yet he bore his afflictions with Christian meekness and fortitude, saying that his suffering was nothing compared with what his Saviour bore to purchase his redemption. In his last days he manifested a thorough and candid self-examination, which caused him to rely solely on sovereign mercy for salvation. He came down to death in the full belief of his adoption into the family of God, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. The deceased came th this place from Connecticut about thirty years since, and about ten years since united with the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, of which he was an active member until death closed his earthly career.

At Westerly, R. I., Nov. 5, Mrs. LUCY D. BABCOCK, wife of Ezra Babcock, aged 23 years.

"Thus oft and sudden at our side,

Whose days seem surest long to bide,
Love's youngest, dearest—but they go!"

PLAINFIELD FAMILY SCHOOL.

THIS Institution will commence its Winter Session on Monday the 27th of November. The course of instruction embraces all the solid branches of education, and designed to prepare boys for college or mercantile pursuits. The French and Spanish languages, both written and spoken, are also taught on the most approved principle. References and other particulars will be given on application to J. O. MAURIAC, Principal.

Plainfield, N. J., Oct. 20, 1845.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
IRA SAYLES, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics
GURDON EVANS, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. HARTSHORN, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. STILLMAN, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. MAXSON. Preceptress, Instructress in French. Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs, For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense. THE SAVIOUR OF SINNERS.

Saviour of sinners, Lord of endless love!
To Thee in my disquietude I flee;
I know Thy mercy soars our fears above,
And all earth's kindreds may be blessed in Thee

Saviour of sinners, Thou hast left Thy name
Long as the sun endures, a mighty tower,
And all who will may flee into the same,
And find protection in the trying hour.

For all is safety there, and all is peace,
Peace upon earth, and peace with God in heaven;
There each misgiving, doubt, and fear must cease,
For all found there are rescued and forgiven.

Blest are the poor, the friendless, and the meek,
Who hope to build no tower of their own,
No other help, no other refuge seek,
But through their tears look up to Thee alone!

THE SLAVE'S CRY.

From the hut on Afric's shore,
Where the widowed mother sighs,
Hear her mourn—her deep grief pour,
See her lift to heaven her eyes.
"Has my husband gone for aye?
Must I from my children die?"

From oppression's prison yard,
Where the lash falls oft and hard,
(O the dregs of slavery's cup!)
Hear the broken prayer go up,
"Is there one who reigns on high?
Hear, O hear the poor slave's cry!"

From the throne where Godhead sits
And in rolling thunder speaks,
Hear that mandate loud and clear,
Ye who buy and sell men, hear!
"Afric's sons have cried to me,
Tyrant, let the oppressed go free!'

Slavery, few shall be thy days,
For to heaven thy victim prays!
On earth's circle God shall brand,
Vengeance glittering in his hand,
'Mene' on thy walls in ire,
Read it—traced in flaming fire.

THE SORROWS OF A SAILOR'S MOTHER.

Not only do the dangers, difficulties, and often fatal disasters of the sailor claim the sympathy of every benevolent mind, but the affecting experience of the sailor's mother often draws a tear from the agent of the Sailor's Society, when called to "comfort those who mourn."

The bitterness of that poor mother's feelings no one can describe, who, after months and even years of separation from her dear boy, is expecting every day to implant a mother's kiss on his sun-burnt cheek, when alas! a black-sealed letter, or a Christian friend, intrusted with the heart-rending intelligence, informs her "he's no more."

The following melancholy case came under my notice a short time since. I was requested by a ship-owner to visit a poor woman, about twenty miles to the westward, whose son had just died on board the "Dreadnaught," after a foreign voyage. Great prudence was required to break this solemn news to her, as it was but a short time since another son was lost. He was up reefing, when topmast, sail and sailors were hurled, with tempetuous fury, into the raging billows; he was seen no more, nor will he be, till "the sea shall give up her dead." His mother heard, but alas! "Her head has not been right since." One other boy was left, however, whose return she was, with feverish anxiety, expecting. The last time I saw him, he was in Shoreham chapel; hut now I had the painful duty of informing his dejected parent of his death. I shrunk from the task, fearing reason would forever take its flight, when she heard the awful truth. After some general conversation, I said, "I have solemn news for you." "Oh. is my son dead, sir? My poor boy drowned?" I replied, "You have read of one who said when he lost all his children, 'The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord.' Can you say so?" "Oh, sir, I must, if the Lord has taken away my poor John; but oh! I have been watching this fortnight, by every coach and van, and would have given the world to have seen him. Poor, dear boy! Could I but have seen the last of him, what would I have given! Now my two dear poys are gone, what shall I do?" "Fret not against the Lord," I said, "Seek him, and you shall find his grace sufficient for you."

After staying with her for an hour, she seemed, under the word of God, to be much consoled, and thanked me repeatedly for breaking it to her so gradually, and for the advice I had given her.

A little girl, whose intellects were weak, was deeply affected for her mother; but when she saw her consoled, she flew and threw her arms round my neck, with much affection. Yet ah! I cannot describe the heavy sighs, the scalding tears, the inward agony of the sailor's mother.

[Rev. E. Caiger, Shoreham.

THE TASK OF WOMAN.—Great indeed is the task assigned to women; who can elevate its dignity? Not to make laws, not to lead armies, not to govern empires; but to form those by whom laws are made, armies led and empires governed; to guard against the slightest taint of bodily infirmity the frail yet spotless creature whose moral no less than physical being must be derived from her; to inspire those principles, to inculcate those doctrines, to animate those sentiments which generations yet unborn and nations yet uncivilized shall learn to bless; to soften firmness into mercy, and chasten honor into refinement; to exalt generosity into virtue; by a soothing care to allay the anguish of the body and the far worse anguish of the mind; by her tenderness to disarm passion; by her purity to triumph over sense; to cheer the scholar sinking under his toil; to console the statesman for the ingratitude of a mistaken people; to be compensation for friends that are perfidions, for happiness that has passed away. Such is her vocation. The couch of the tortured sufferer, the prison of the deserted friend, the cross of the rejected Saviour—these are theatres on which her greatest triumphs have been acieved. Such is her destiny; to visit the forsaken, to attend the neglected when monarchs abandon, when counsellors betray, when justice persecutes, when brethren and disciples flee, to remain unshaken and unchanged; and to exhibit in this lower world a type of that love, pure, constant, and ineffable, which in another world we are taught to believe the test of virtue. [Blackwood.

ON THE BEAUTIES OF THE PSALMS.

Composed upon particular occasions, yet designed for general use; delivered out as services for Israelites, under the law, yet no less adapted to the circumstances of Christians under the gospel; communicating truths which phylosophy could never investigate, in a style which poetry could never equal; while history is made the vehicle of prophecy, and creation lends all its charms to paint the glories of redemption. Calculated alike to profit and to please, they inform the understanding, elevate the affections and entertain the imagination. Indited under the influence of Him to whom all hearts are known and all events are known, they suit mankind in all situations; grateful as the manna which descended from heaven, and conformed itself to every palate. The fairest productions of human wit, after a few perusals, like gathered flowers, wither in our hands, and lose their fragrancy; but those unfading plants of Paradise become, as we are accustomed to them, still more and more beautiful; their bloom appears to be dally heighted, fresh odors are emitted, and new sweets extracted from them. He who has once tasted their excellencies will desire to taste them again, and he who tastes them often, will relish them best.

[Bishop Horne.

THE RICH WORLDLING.

"The rich man also died, and was buried. And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments." (Luke xvi. 22, 23.) Why was this dreadful judgment inflicted? There is no heavy crime laid to this charge. His life is nor said to have been stained with gross iniquities. He was no murderer, nor adultkr, nor extortioner, nor oppressor. All that is said of him is, that he was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day." This, in one sense, implies no more than that he lived answerably to his station in life; and, if he was a man of large fortune, to live according to his circumstances was not sinful. The wealth that was bestowed upon him, "the good things of life" which were so richly imparted to him, were not to be totally rejected, but to be used; and his wealth he might have enjoyed—his name, his station, his house, his table, he might have retained, and have not been the worse man for doing so, and have exchanged, when he died, earth for glory. No; this was not his sin. His sin was that he was a selfish, unfeeling, luxurious, indolent, self-indulgent man. Insensible to the sufferings of all around him, his object seems to have been to pass through life as easily, indolently and luxuriously as he could. The care of the body seems to have been his sole concern. The care of the immortal soul had no share of his attention or solicitude. "He lived without God in the world:" his sole object was, as the apostle says, "to make provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof." He abused his trust. He lived unmindful of the fact, that he was a steward entrusted but for a time with the blessings bestowed on him, and accountable for their due proper management. Now, such a life as this may be passed, while a man may nevertheless bear an unblemished character in the eyes of the world; but O, how differently does God view these things! A man may slide down to hell in this easy, harmless, self indulgent sort of life. "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction;" but such is not the way to immortality. "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life." There must be repentance at its very threshold—sorrow for sin and forsaking of sin; but this the rich man seems never to have known. There must be serious concern for the soul. He never had it; he thought only of his body. There must be the new birth undergone.—"There must be the crucifixion of the flesh, with the affections and lusts." There must be prayers and tears, supplications and strivings; but to all these Dives was a stranger. In vain do we look for any of the characteristics of the penitent beliver in him. He lived as if he had no soul either to be saved or lost; as if there were no God above, the judge and witness of actions; as if, in short, this life were all—the next a fable.

A PIOUS FANCY.—Fontanes asked Chateaubriand, "if he could assign a reason why the women of the Jewish race were so much handsomer than the men?" To which Chateaubriand gave the following truly poetical and Christian one:—"The Jewesses (he said) had escaped the curse which alighted upon their fathers, husbands and sons. Not a Jewess was to be seen among the crowd of priests and rabble who insulted the Son of God—scourged him—crowned him with thorns, and subjected him to ignominy and the agony of the cross. The women of Judea believed in the Saviour, and assisted and soothed him under affliction.—A woman of Bethany poured on his head precious ointment which she kept in a vase of alabaster. The sinner annointed his feet with perfumed oil, and wiped them with her hair. Christ on his part extended his mercy to the Jewesses. He raised from the dead the son of the widow of Nain, and Martha's brother Lazarus. He cured Simon's mother-in-law, and the woman who touched the hem of his garment. To the Samaritan women he was a spring of living water, and a compassionate judge to the woman taken in adultery. The daughters of Jerusalem wept over him—the holy women accompanied him to Calvary—brought balm and spices, and weeping sought him in the sepulchre. 'Woman, why weepest thou?' His first appearance was to Mary Magdalene. He said to her—'Mary:' at the sound of his voice Mary Magdalene's eyes were opened, and she answered—'Master.' The reflection of some very beautiful ray must have rested on the brow of the Jewesses."

CHRISTIAN HOPE.

Hope, with uplifted foot, set free from earth,
Pants for the place of its ethereal birth,
On steady wing, flies through the immense abyss,
Plucks amaranthine joys from bowers of bliss,
And crowns the soul while yet a sufferer here,
With wreaths like those angelic spirits wear.

HEALTH.—Dr. Beaumont, of the United States Army, gives the following important rules:—

1. Bulk, or food possessing a due proportion of innutritious matier, is best calculated to preserve the permanent welfare of the organs of digestion, and the general health of the system.

2, The food should be plainly and simply prepared, with no other seasoning than a little salt, or occasionally a very little vinegar.

3. Full and deliberate mastication or chewing is of great importance.

4. Swallowing the food slowly, or in small quantities, and at short intervals, is very necessrry.

5. A quantity not excceding the real wants of the economy, is oi prime importance to health.

6. Solid aliment, thoroughly masticated, is far more salutary than soups, broths, &c.

7. Fat meat, butter, and oily substances of every kind, are difficult of digestion, offensive to the stomach, and tend to derange that organ, and induce disease.

8. Spices, pepper, stimulating and heating condiments of every kind, retard digestion and injure the stomach.

9. Coffee and tea debilitate the stomach, and impair digestion.

A FATHER'S CARE FOR HIS SON.—Beautiful and becoming in the eyes of the paternal God, is the unwearied attachment of the parent to the child! Alas! how little does the unthinking spirit of youth know of the extent of its devotedness. There sits the froward, fretful, indolent boy. The care that keeps perpetual watch over his moral and physical safety, he misnames unjust restriction. The foresight that denies itself many a comfort to provide for his future wants, he denounces as sordid avarice.—He turns from his father's face in coldness or in anger. Boy! boy! the cloud upon that toil-worn brow has been placed there by anxiety,—not for self, but for an impatient, peevish son, whose pillow he would gladly strew with roses, though thorns should thicken around his own.—Even at the moment when his arm is raised to inflict chastisement on thy folly, thou shouldst bend and bless thy parent. The heart loathes the hand that corrects thy errors; and not for worlds would he use "the rod of reproof," did he not perceive the necessity of crushing his own feelings, to save thee from thyself. [Amulet, 1829.

LEFT BY MISTAKE.—The Rochester Democrat relates the following amusing incident: A well dressed countryman with his wife entered one of the principal dry good stores in that town, and commenced making purchases. They had with them "a pledge of affection," in the shape of an infant a few months old, wrapt in flannels. While looking at the goods, the mother placed the child upon one of the low counters, on one side of the store, taking care to bolster it well with goods to prevent its falling off, where it soon fell asleep. The couple having made all the purchases they desired, left the store, got into the wagon, and drove off without the child. They were not half way home before they discovered they had left their darling behind. Back they came, as fast as horse flesh, with a liberal application of the lash, could bring them; both father and mother appeared to have suffered intense anxiety. They found the child safe, and the clerks, all of whom are "nice young men," in greater consternation than themselves—fearing that they would have to perform the office of papa to a "liitle responsibility," they had not spoken for. The mother bore off the prize in triumph, to the great relief of the aforesaid clerks, who had just reason to fear the consequences, as stranger things than these have occurred before.

A celebrated Erench infidel being introduced to the pious Fenelon, and spending some time in his society, witnessing the loveliness of his manners and conversation, was constrained to say to a friend: "I must not stay in the presence of this holy man; if I do I shall be compelled to renounce my infidelity; so much purity, so much amiableness, proves the reality of his religion, and proves religion to be of heavenly origin."

SLAVERY AND FREEDOM.

SLAVERY! second-born of hell,
Child of sin, and twin of death!
Who thy brood of woes can tell,
Drawing from thee, kindred breath?

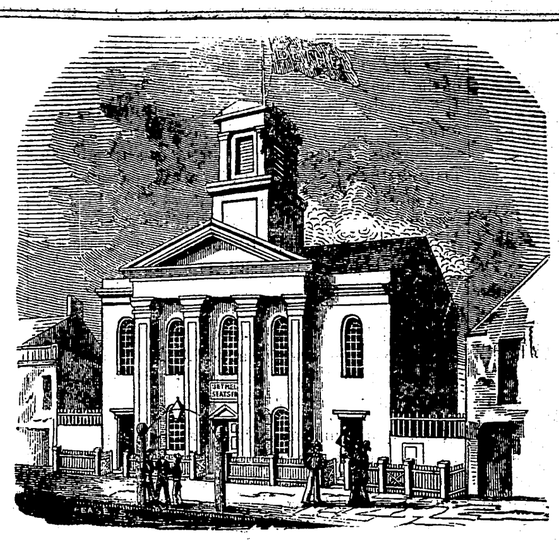
Pride, and hate, and lust and crime,
Dark revenge and cruelty,
Woes that end not here in time,
Woes that curse eternity.

FREEDOM! daughter of the skies,
Born amid primeral light;
Thousand joys around thee rise,
Thousand woes are put to flight.

Love, and peace, and hope are thihe;
Lofty thoughts, and virtue pure,
Joys of life, and life's decline,
Joys that evermore endure.

WARDLAW.

"When I see a hale hearty old man, who has jostled through the rough part of the world without having worn away the fine edge of his feelings, or blunted his sensibility to natural and moral beauty, I compare him to the evergreen of the forest, whose colors, instead of fading at the approach of winter, seem to assume an additional lustre when contrasted with the surrounding desolation."



THE ALBANY BETHEL.

Power of Kindness.

Deacon Eaton has been employed by the American Bethel Society to labor as a Missionary on the Erie Canal in the State of New York. The Dea. gives the following account of his efforts on one boat.

I stepped on board and went to the steersman and asked him where the Captain was. He said he had just lain down to sleep. I told him who I was, and what my business was. I found him a very pleasant man, tho' not a professor of religion. He acknowledged the importance of religion, and said he was glad christians had thought enough of boatmen to send missionaries to labor, and thought much good might be done.—While conversing with the steersman, the bowsman came along, and overhearing what we were saying, soon began to swear most profanely. I admonished him very kindly, and told him I was very sorry to hear such language, and although he intended it as an insult to me, it was really God his Maker that he had insulted. "What do you know about God"? said he; "have you seen God"? He asked many other like questions. "You don't know," said he "that there is any God; and if there is a God, I don't believe there is any hell. I don't believe God is going to punish men after they die, and you need not think you can scare us." I remarked that he would find out there is a God, and when too late to repent, he might find out that God punished sinners. As I made that remark, the captain came out of the cabin in a great rage, and coming up to me with all the fury of a maniac, he enquired what business I had on his boat. "You need not preach up hell and damnation here," said he; "we are not easily frightened by such creatures as you are; we are Universalists." He asked a number of questions before I had time to answer any of them, and came towards me as though he intended to throw me into the canal, which was his intention as he afterwards informed me. I told him if he would wait until I could go to my trunk, I would show him what business I had upon his boat; that I was laboring for the good of his soul, and he might throw me into the canal if he pleased; although I could not swim, I could get out some way, and the first thing I should do after getting out, would be to kneel down and pray for him. His countenance changed; he appeared confused, and interrupting me, he said, "I am ashamed that I have abused you; I have no reason for treating you so; but I was mad when I lay down. My bowsman neglected to lay over his boat, and another boat ran into her, which has done fifty dollars damage, and I have no remedy because I was on the other man's side of the canal. I heard you talking on the boat, and got up mad, hardly knowing what I said; but I have no right to abuse you. Come walk down with me into the cabin. I have a woman there who will be glad to see you."

Accordingly we went down into the cabin, where we found a lady standing by the cabin stairs weeping. The captain said, "My dear, what are you crying about?" She replied, "it would make an angel weep to hear you abuse that man and to listen to his answers in reply. Never did I think I should hear my husband talk to a christian as you have talked to that man."

I then turned to the lady and enquired if she thought herself a christian. She replied that she did, and that nothing could give her more pain than to hear her husband talk as he had to me. The captain then said, "Well, my dear, dry up your tears; I am ashamed that I have abused the man."

We walked into the cabin, he handed me a stool and I sat down.

Well, said I to the captain, I suppose you love that woman; for she appeared one of the most amiable women I had ever seen, Her tears and her taking my part perhaps made her appear more lovely.

"Yes," said the captain; "I married her because I knew she was a christian; have known her for three years, and if there is a christian in the world, I think my wife is one."

I replied: "As much as you love your wife, you cannot have her society always; the time will be short that you will live together in this world: you will either close her eyes and bear her away to the land of silence, or she will see your body consigned to the dark and cold grave. With the sentiments you profess, while your wife will sing in heaven, you will lie down in everlasting sorrow."

He replied: "I am no more of a Universalist than you are; I believe in rewards and punishments, and would freely give all that I am worth in the world, if I was as well prepared to die as my wife is. If I had a man on my boat who would abuse you as I have done to day, I would discharge him. And now, sir, you may have all the privileges you wish on my boat, and if you will forgive me this time, I promise you I will never abuse you again."

Such is the power of kindness that we see even the hardened boatman may be subdued by it. We have many other interesting stories to tell the children about the labors of Deacon Eaton on the Canal. After spending five years on the canal, he published an account of his labors, from which we gather our facts, and our young readers may rely upon all the stories we tell them about Deacon Eaton as true. *J. A SERMON FOR THE CHILDREN.

THE GOOD CHOICE.

Luke X. 42.—Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her.

Mary chose to set at Jesus feet, that she might listen to his talk, and catch the gracious words that fell from his lips, rather than to spend her time in preparing a fine dinner, as Martha her sister did. To choose the instruction of Christ as Mary did, is the same in meaning as when we say a person chooses or seeks religion. This is a good choice. In preaching to you children, on this text, we will simply undertake to show why those make a good choice, who choose to seek God and religion rather than this world.

1. Those who make such a choice, choose a portion for their souls. The body needs but little, nor needs that little long, but the soul will need its portion forever.

2. Such make a good choice, because they choose that which will make them good. The world in any of its forms does not make people good; but christianity, chosen and lived up to, will make us all good. Riches often make men selfish, but religion makes them benevolent; powor often makes men cruel, but religion makes them kind and tender-hearted; honor makes them proud and vain, but religion will make them humble and meek. Thus religion always makes people good.

3. Such as choose religion make a good choice, because they choose what will secure their happiness. The world cannot make us happy. The world never satisfies. Those who have none of this world, think they would be satisfied if they had but a little, but when they get that little, they always want a little more, and those who have most always want a little more. It is said that when Alexander had conquered the world, he was so unhappy that he cried because there was not another world to conquer. Give us all the world without religion, and we are unhappy; but give us religion without any of the world, and we shall be happy.

4. Those who choose religion make a good choice, because they choose what will bring with it every other good thing. If we choose the world, such as riches, honors, &c., we cannot have religion; but if we choose religion, God has promised that we shall have with it, so much of the world as can do us good. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you,"—Matt. vi. 33.

5. Those who choose religion make a good choice, because they choose what they are sure of obtaining. Nothing is sure but religion. Some choose riches, but live and die poor; some choose honor, and sink in disgrace; some choose pleasure, and live and die miserable; but no one ever sought God with all his heart, who did not find.

"Restless mortals toil for nought;
Bliss in vain from earth is sought;
Bliss, a native of the skies,
Never wanders.—Mortals, try;
There you cannot seek in vain;
For to seek her is to gain."

6. Those who choose religion make a good choice, because they choose what may be safely kept. It is not certain, if we get riches, honors or pleasures, that we shall keep them long. God may take them away; but He will never take away our religious hope and comfort. If we are faithful to keep this interest, it will never be taken away. It is a safe investment, as men of the world say. Fire cannot burn it, waters cannot drown it, moth cannot eat it, rust cannot corrupt it, time cannot waste it, sickness cannot blight it, death cannot kill it, eternity cannot outlive it!

CONCLUSION.—1. To have this great interest, you must choose it. None can ever have it but by their own voluntary choice.

2. To make sure of it, it should be chosen immediately. The best time to make the choice is in childhood. May all our young friends make the good choice without further delay.

KNOWLEDGE FOR THE PEOPLE.

RE-ISSUE OF THE

PENNY MAGAZINE,

AT ONE HALF THE ORIGINAL PRICE!

4000 IMPERIAL OCTAVO PAGES,

2000 ENGRAVINGS!!

A COMPLETE LIBRARY WITHIN ITSELF.

THE London Penny Magazine, issued under the direction of the Society for the "Diffusion of Useful Knowledge," is, unquestionably, one of the most entertaining and useful of all the popular works which has ever appeared in any age, or in any language. Its pages embrace every subject in the wide field of human knowledge, and as every article, whether on

SCIENCE, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, LITERATURE, OR THE ARTS,

passed the careful scrutiny and critical ordeal of an able committee of learned men, the work may be placed in the hands of the youth of the country without danger or distrust. The popularity of the work in England may be judged of from the fact that during the first year of its publication of the monthly parts were disposed of. In the United States too, the work has acquired no inconsiderable popularity.

The undersigned having purchased the Stereotype plates, with the Engravings, of the London edition of the above-named work, has commenced its republication in the city of New York. The whole work consists of about 4000 large imperial octavo pages, and is illustrated with 2000 Engravings. The American Re-issue will be printed on good paper, and well done up in handsome paper covers, and issued in

24 PARTS AT 25 CENTS EACH.

The Parts average 170 pages each, and will be published every other Saturday, till completed, commencing SATURDAY, MAY 3d, 1845. It is an exact reprint of the London edition, without alteration or abridgment.

☞ The work is sold by all dealers in Books and cheap Literature, throughout the United States. Persons wishing to obtain it regularly on its issue, will do well to hand in their names to some Bookseller in their neighborhood, at as early a day as possible. Postmasters will be entitled to ten numbers for Two Dollars.

THE CONTINUING OBLIGATION OF THE SEVENTH DAY, AND THE UNAUTHORIZED SUBSTITUTION OF THE FIRST, AS THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

SECTION I.

INTRODUCTION.

Communion with God is the true blessedness of his intelligent offspring. It is the very life of all those bright angelic beings who, in their varied spheres of unfallen dignity, delight in the contemplation of his righteousness, and in the execution of his purposes. Till sin had separated between man and his Maker, it was his pure and unalloyed enjoyment also; and though now unappreciated by the natural heart, the regenerated soul finds anew in Christ this better life. Once brought back to allegiance, and truly tasting that the Lord is gracious, the heart of the convert goes forth in participation of the divine mind, whether yet in a present evil world, finding in a Father's love his only shelter from multiplied dangers, or already removed by death beyond the reach of their temptations—whether, on the earth as a stranger, unknown and despised, the disciple of a lowly Lord, or in a state of disembodied existence, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God. It is the blessed privilege of the believer now, in the natural body, while conflicting with the powers of darkness, through the strength of the glorified Redeemer, as it will be his enjoyment in the spiritual and glorified body, when, in the heavenly kingdom of the coming age, the crown of victory having been obtained, he shall administer righteous government for a righteous Lord over all the works of his hands.

And, however indifferent to the value of communion with God men by nature are—or, rather, however much the natural heart is enmity against God—he who estimates things according to their real value, is, in every way, striving with us, that we should not only be reconciled unto him, but have also his image renewed in our souls. His will is our sanctification, and the glory of his character, as seen therein. It is thus, and thus alone, that the world's maladies are to be healed, that the world's disorders are to be rectified, and all its evils eradicated. God would that we should be restored to full fellowship with himself, and have his joy as our strength. That we should be made "partakers of the divine nature," is the mighty boon his fatherly heart longs to impart, grieving that any should account themselves "unworthy of eternal life."

While thus desiring good for men, He, to whom all souls belong, and to whom their condition and circumstances are fully known, has not left our race without adequate provision for its abundant enjoyment. He has contrived a mighty plan for the redemption of man and of man's inheritance, no part of which plan can be dispensed with without injury, each effecting an end essential to the accomplishment of the desired result, in the harmonious operation of the whole. It is not for us to question the wisdom of the divine devices, or to imagine that less than the machinery employed were requisite for fulfilling the desire of our Heavenly Father. All his precepts, his promises, his judgments, and his ordinances, will be precious when thus understood—they will have a glory in our eyes, as they have all a sanctifying tendency.

Among the many means which have been devised and put into operation, both before and since the fall, with a view to promote the all-important end that we should have communion with the high and lofty One whose name is Holy, there stands pre-eminent the institution of THE SABBATH—the earliest of God's appointments for our race.

The importance of the Sabbath is most clearly seen when we thus contemplate man as called to, and created for, the enjoyment of fellowship with God, and destined for immortal glory. To this higher end, the cessation from all service-work is but subordinate; and it is as ministering to this, chiefly, that the design of God in the appointment of the Sabbath is to be perceived. Made in the image of God, his Maker, for the cherishing of that which alone is worthy of a being of such capacities, and fitted for such enjoyments, even in innocency to all the more ordinary intercourse of our great progenitor with the living God, there was added a day to be devoted to that especial end.

But if called to admire the wondrous provision which was thus made for the spiritual life of unfallen man—ere sin had weaned the human heart from a God so worthy to be loved—the blessing of the Sabbath becomes doubly valuable, and is seen as a more signal display of the love of Jehovah, when viewed as a help against the evils of an unbelieving heart. In the darkness of the natural mind since the fall, there is very little understanding of our spiritual necessities—which are, however, but the greater on that account. With a heart not only deceitful above all things, but "desperately wicked," we have also to contend with the powers of darkness, ever seeking to destroy our souls; and we need both to be warned of their seductions, and fortified against their power. Man needs the living God to instruct and to counsel him, to guide and to uphold him; and the Sabbath, reminding of the Creator and the fountain of all life, comes fraught with provision for those varied wants on the right hand and on the left. It invites to the acceptance of divine aid, by promoting and strengthening faith in the love of the beneficent Creator and Sustainer—of which the soul has become so needful by that fall which so early and so awfully estranged the affections from their rightful source, For it is not merely as affording opportunity for instruction concerning the works and ways of God, or as bringing leisure for the enjoyment of communion undisturbed with him, in which the Sabbath blessing consists. It is to be viewed as a means of imparting help to every man against his own ungodliness, and as strengthening trust in God. which of itself constitutes the most important blessing. While the eye of sense discerns only the connection between means and ends, and therefore expects results only in proportion to the efforts made, the eye of faith perceives through all material creation the moving mind which actuates the whole, and contemplates results only as in accordance with the will and purpose of Jehovah. He who once discerns that the fruit of his weekly labor is not merely proportioned to his expenditure of strength or application of skill, but is in constant dependence upon the blessing of Him from whom all creation hath taken its law, will be able to rest at whatever time the God of nature and of grace is pleased to enjoin. And each and every instance in the experience of such individual, in which that faith hath been justified in the result, forms a new argument for, and is felt as an additional evidence of the safety of, his being cast again upon that God whose glory this faith promotes. Thus, the Sabbath is not only an opportunity for faith's enjoyment, but an aid to faith's enlargement; and he who, from week to week, rests on the day of God's own rest, and, in doing so, finds, both in his soul and on his substance, the blessing of the Eternal, will with greater ease be enabled to obey any farther command which he recognizes as coming from him whose presence and blessing he has already thus abundantly proved.

But when we consider man's state in the relations of life, and observe the unhallowed thirst for power, and influence, and wealth, now everywhere displayed, the Sabbath appears farther as the compassionate interposition of the Creator's authority for the purpose of shielding the weak from the tyranny of the strong. It is a day of God's own rescue from the grasp of sordid avarice, that all souls should be blessed in him—that master and servant should equally enjoy corporeal, and mental, and spiritual rest—and that the creatures subjected to man's dominion, now groaning under the bondage of corruption, and sharing in their masters' toil, may obtain, at the hand of a nobler Benefactor, that respite from ceaseless labor which the tyrants of creation grudge to give.

By a law implanted in our being, the affections are stimulated and strengthened through society. The social exercise of the duties of religion, therefore, to those who have proved its value, has a communicative power, which those who have not forsaken the assembling of themselves together, have in every age experienced.

Our social relations, also, impose duties to be performed in a social capacity. Of these it will suffice here to mention, the ascription of praise to the one living and true God; the combined acknowledgment of thanks by the members of one family, dependent upon, and expressing their love to, the same provident Father; receiving from his hands common blessings, and subjected to the same chastisements; our drawing spiritual life from the same living Redeemer, and deriving consolation from the same Comforter. Mutually thus having fellowship the with Father and with his Son Christ Jesus, unitedly is the service of this blessed God to be performed, and his glory promoted,—unitedly is his favor to be implored, and thanks to be given for his goodness unto all.

The social discharge of such duties renders necessary the setting apart of STATED times. And while the love of saints for each other, and their mutual joy in the Lord, where really known, will always lead to the desire of frequent opportunities for communion, the kindness of God in the enjoined sanctification of the Sabbath by man, has made provision to some extent for the means of its existence, and for its enlargement. The fixed and permanent appointment of this hallowed day, to be especially employed with and for himself, unites them together in a bond of holiest fellowship.

The divine appointment of the Sabbath, therefore, as it is of universal obligation, contemplates also the need of all—has regard to the circumstances of every class—and is enforced by considerations of general application. And although those in the various classes of society may not equally require periods of rest, since some can better bear a continuance of fatigue than others, and all are not under the same necessity of being greatly occupied either corporeally or mentally,—and although the other opportunities of men for spiritual contemplation also differ,—yet, by one general enactment, God has been pleased to make weekly provision, to some extent, for the necessities of all in the discharge of duties which are relative as well as personal, and social as well as private.

It is not, then, that in the observance of the Sabbath we give any thing to God, but that he has sanctified and blessed it for a day of good to us,—therein providing at once help against the enemy without, and against our spiritual foes within. Calling man to see his need of God, and to find his help on high, and taking him out from the bustle of worldly business, and from the undue ardor of occupations, self-imposed for worldly objects, it disentangles him from many scenes in which the corrupt heart finds more naturally the occasion of sin, while it brings him into circumstances, and places him in an attitude, and speaks in a language of truth more easily comprehensible, telling of a present God, and of his desire and power to bless, —and although it does not thus create a spirit of heavenly mindedness, it is at least fitted eminently to call up thoughts of God, and to suggest motives for prayer and reasons for praise.

"The Sabbath was made for man;" and in whatever aspect seen, is an institution bearing in its very nature the impress of divine beneficence. It makes provision for the body as well as for the soul—is a preservative of human comfort, health, and life, of which unintermitting toil proves so destructive—and it secures, by Heaven's appointment, opportunity for more undisturbed communion with the Father of our spirits It is, indeed, not only the belief of all who imagine the Sabbath to be changed from the seventh to the first day of the week, but is also the acknowledgment of an author denying the existence of any Sabbath under the Christian dispensation, and who sees the weekly holiday at present observed as only an appointment of human expediency, that "whatever difference of opinion may have hitherto prevailed respecting the theological question, it may safely be affirmed, that the expediency of intermitting public labor one day of the week is on all sides readily admitted."*

Among those professing the Christian name, there are none, indeed, who question the heavenly origin of the day of rest, whatever doubts may have been cast upon its continuance,—nor are there any who impugn the wisdom and love of its original appointment, however they may suppose the purpose changed it was designed to serve. Proposing therefore somewhat fully to investigate the subject, we specially solicit the attention of such as seek the glory of God their Saviour, with prayer to him for guidance.

If "the expediency of intermitting public labor one day in the week" is admitted by all, surely God imposes no burden upon us by declaring which day of the week that shall be. And if besides the purpose of bodily, and mental, and spiritual rest to us—the assumed ground of such expediency—he has conjoined another purpose, in no way inconsistent with it, and because of that other purpose has blessed the day of his own choice, a special reason for our preference of it will thus be afforded, because of that blessing belonging to no other day. And it is of importance that we seek to be conformed to the mind of God, assured that we cannot improve on that which comes from him, while our deviations from what is really of divine institution, in whatever they consist, must necessarily be for deterioration. We have therein the divine wisdom on which to rest; and to every dutiful child, what bears the impress of our Father's hand will come with acceptable testimony to its value, the perception of which will be reason sufficient for his love and acquiescence. It is, indeed, when in such a spirit alone, that God can communicate fully of his mind. Ever rejoicing, therefore, in his love, desiring his counsel, and certain that his will is best, the people of God, when rightly exercised, will testify by their ready and hearty obedience, that they have no higher aim and no greater pleasure than to do the things which please him, esteeming and proving this the channel appointed for their blessing. They will not account his will a heavy yoke imposed upon them, the desire of escape from which would lead them to devise reasons to persuade themselves and others, that some different way of their own is equally good or better than the Lord's, rendering return to the divine appointment a matter of indifference or wholly unnecessary. As in the case of the children of Israel, they will hear it as the expression of deepest interest in their welfare, when Jehovah says, "Observe and hear all these words which I command thee, that it may be well with thee, and with thy children after thee for ever, when thou doest that which is good and right in the sight of the Lord thy God."—"What thing soever I command you, observe to do it; thou shalt not add thereto nor diminish from it."—"Keep therefore the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may prosper in all that ye do." Deut. xii. 28, 32; xxix. 9. If we at all understand the purpose of our Redeemer, the disciples of Christ will recognize the voice of truest friendship in the expression of his desire concerning them. "If ye love me, keep my commandments."

God's design in requiring implicit subjection to his holy law is very different from that of the despot who takes pleasure in demanding at the hands of inferiors that which he knows he has the power to enforce. God's authority is interposed only that we may "do that which is good and right;"—and it is so interposed that it may "go well" with us. And who that has felt and witnessed the constant readiness which there is in the spirit of man to depart from the right path, does not perceive it to be the cause of deepest thankfulness for the divine kindness, that, besides his voice in man's conscience, testifying to the truth, God has in his blessed word farther and distinctly intimated his holy will, that we may yield obedience to it. It is of his grace that he has shown the path of life,—that he has set up a boundary line, that we may not pass over; or, perceiving our departures, we may be taught to return. When we do come to know our wanderings from "that which is good and right," we will rejoice in being furnished with that testimony of divine love ever pointing to the path of righteousness which is the path of peace, —and practically, as well as theoretically, we will prove that we feel our need of God, and delight in finding him in all things, at whatever expense of worldly ease or worldly pleasure.

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

The following interesting items of Missionary Intelligence were communicated at the monthly Concert in Boston on the first Monday evening of December. They relate mostly to the missions of the American Board of Commissioners, but will be read with satisfaction by Christians of all denominations. We copy from the Boston Traveler.

CHINA.—There are fifteen missionary stations in China under the care of the American Board, from one only of which have letters been received since the last Concert. From Amoy station, under the care of Messrs. Doty and Holman, information has been received as late as July 9th. At this station the missionaries have on Sunday from 40 to 70, and a Bible class of from 10 to 20 stated Chinese attendants, among whom there are 4 or 5 serious inquirers, and one or two hopeful converts to Christianity. The missionaries say that within a few miles of Amoy there are hundreds of populous villages to which they might have easy access, and among whom 50 chapels might be immediately opened, if the men and means were furnished. Within the same limits an indefinite number of day schools might also be established, with the most encouraging prospects of success; and the trifling expense of about $100 each a year would cover all the expenses.

SIAM.—More oral religious instruction has been communicated by the missionaries during the past year than ever before. Three natives have been recently received into the church at this station. The Siamese are a community of readers, and greatly do the missionaries need an abundant supply of Bibles and Tracts.

MADRAS.—A letter from Mr. Winslow mentions the recent reception into the Mission Church, of two natives. The question of caste is exciting great interest at this station, and indeed throughout Southern India. The prejudice of caste is exceedingly strong, and some, even of the Christianized natives, have refused to partake with their Christian brethren of a lower caste. The missionaries are determined to break down this prejudice. A year ago they found it necessary to exclude from their church-fellowship four of their native members, for refusing to eat with their brethren of a different caste; recently, these excommunicated persons have returned and made confession of their faults, and have been received again to the Christian Church.

ADMEDNUGGER.—At this station, too, the question of caste is becoming one of deep interest. A man has recently been received to the Church of a lower caste than any previously connected with it; and it is a question of interest—How will it be regarded and treated by those of superior castes, particularly the Mohairs, the caste next above this?

CONSTANTIONPLE.—Affairs at this mission remain much as they were at previous dates; inquiry among the Armenians continues unchecked; and opposition and persecution for the Word's sake also continues.

SYRIA.—The latest dates from this mission are to September. Every thing then was encouraging for the missionary operations among the inhabitants of Mt. Lebanon.

WEST AFRICA.—The intelligence from the mission at the mouth of the Gaboon River, is of the most painful character. It will be remembered that about eighteen months since, a French ship of war arrived off King Glass town, and proposed to purchase the country—the King refused to sell. Soon after the King was visited by an agent of the French commander, (though unknown as such,) and being plied with intoxicating liquors until drunk, was then presented with what the agent said was a friendly letter to the King of the French, inviting him to send his vessels to the Gaboon River to trade; Glass was induced to sign this letter. This document, however, proved to be a deed of his country to the French, and under this deed they threatened to take immediate possession of the country. Glass remonstrated, and sent a protest to Louis Philippe and Queen Victoria. English merchants interested themselves in the affair, and it was hoped that the French Government would disown the doings of their naval agent when apprized of the circumstances of the case—but recent events have disappointed all our hopes. A French naval force arrived in the Gaboon River early in the summer, and demanded possession of the territory. A bombardment of the town followed a refusal to surrender, and the missionary premises were not exempt from this attack so long as the U. S. flag were flying over them. The general result was, that the inhabitants of the town were driven away and all missionary operations suspended. The latest accounts are from Monrovia, whither one of the missionaries had retired, and bears date Sept. 4th. A more full account of the matter is daily expected from Mr. Bushnel, the only remaining missionary at this station.

GREECE.—The latest intelligence from this mission is of the highest importance. Mention has been made on a previous occasion of Mr. King's "Defence," lately published at Athens. Having been attacked in the Smyrna papers, last Autumn, for an alledged attempt of proselytism in that city, he replied through the public papers of Smyrna and Athens. He was soon charged, however, with speaking against the Virgin Mary; and to this accusation he also replied, but not in such a way as to satisfy his enemies. He went directly to their own Fathers, to Saint Epiphanius, and quoted his language in proof of his own doctrines. The controversy continued for some time in the public papers, when Dr. King thought it advisable to publish his defence, mentioned above, a book of some 209 pages, with large quotations from the Greek Fathers, which were directly opposed to the prevalent opinions of the Greek Church in regard to the Virgin Mary, the use of images, transubstantiation, &c. This book was distributed at Athens and elsewhere, and caused no little stir among the ecclesiastics. The Holy Synod took the matter in hand, formally excommunicated Dr. King, and called upon the Government to arraign him before the civil tribunal. The Government complied with his request, and he was arraigned accordingly. Being brought before the proper officers, he was required to answer certain interrogatories, and to hear the accusation; an account of which will be found in the Missionary Herald for December. At the latest advices Dr. King's trial had not taken place.

MONEY WELL EXPENDED.

Capt. S. C. S., of Portland, was one day passing through one of the streets in Boston, when he saw a poor sailor lying on the side walk, with his feet in the gutter, in such a position as to endanger his limbs, if not his life. Capt. S. pulled him out of the gutter, aroused him, and by degrees got his history. He was from a good family, who resided in the eastern part of Maine, had been well educated, and exhibited now the wreck of a brilliant intellect and an amiable disposition. He had been sick, he said, had staid his time out in the Charlestown Hospital, and had that morning been discharged without a cent, and in so feeble a state as to disqualify him to go to sea again at present. "Then why don't you go home?" said Capt. S. "I cannot pay my passage; I have no money," answered the desponding sailor. "Have you found any body who would give you any breakfast?" said the Captain. "No;" was the reply, "but I found a man who gave me something to drink, and, as I was very weak and very hungry, the liquor overcame me; but I am not so much intoxicated as I seem to be; I have my senses perfectly well." "How much will take you home," inquired the Captain. "There is," said the tar, "a vessel lying at the wharf, which will take me within two miles of my home for one dollar, and I would go if I only had the money." "Now, shipmate," continued Capt. S., "give us your hand. Look me straight in the eye. Now promise me, upon the honor of a sailor, that you will never drink any more of the poison-stuff, and I'll give you some breakfast and pay your passage home." The sailor clasped his emaciated fingers around the rough hard hand of the Capt., and pronounced the pledge. Capt. S. handed him a bill, and saw him safe in the nearest public house, and went his way.

Some three years after, as Capt S. was passing along Exchange street, in Portland, some one behind him called out—"Cap'n; I say, Cap'n: Hallo, Cap'n." Capt. S. turned around, and a well dressed stranger grasped him by the hand, and inquired if he knew him. He confessed he did not recollect ever to have met him before. The stranger, after several ineffectual attempts to refresh his memory, finally brought to his recollection the scene narrated above, and confessed that he was the sailor to whom he had thus acted the part of the Samaritan, and insisted on restoring four-fold for the money which had been bestowed on that occasion. All remuneration was refused, and the young man was exhorted to go and do likewise. "I will with all my heart," said he, as the tears gathered to his eyes; "but I owe you a debt I can never discharge. I have never broken my pledge, and by the help of God I never will. I went home after you left me, and by the entreaty of my friends, I commenced trading, and am now here to purchase goods. I have been prospered in business, and have been lately united to the woman of my choice. You have saved my soul and body, for I have lately been made acquainted with the blessed Saviour of sinners. O, if my poor old father could get hold of your hand, he would almost wring it from your body for gratitude." The generous heart of the Captain was melted, for he loved the Saviour too. The flood-gates of his soul were opened, and they wept together like two children, shook hands again, exchanged a hearty "God bless you," and parted.

LAW AND GOSPEL.

NUMBER FIVE.

We have seen that nine out of the ten precepts of the Decalogue are founded in the relation which men bear to God as his creatures, and in their relation to one another as fellow creatures. The fourth of these precepts we have reserved for a separate consideration. Concerning this a doubt might arise, whether it belongs to the same relation with all the others. But even if a doubt should arise, the facts that it was, like all the others, spoken by God himself;—that it was, like all the others, graven in stone with God's own finger;—that it was, like all the others, placed in the ark;—and that, in common with all the others, it thus stands out in bold relief from the rest of the laws given to the Israelites,—will go far towards neutralizing the force of such doubt. The most careless observer cannot but feel, that there must have been some reason for drawing the line of demarkation so strongly around the Decalogue; and he will naturally think, that the fourth commandment must therefore have some property in common with all the others, by reason of which it is entitled to the same regard.

For the sake of convenience in our reasoning, let us divide this commandment into two parts, of which the first shall contain the mandate, the second, the ground, or reason of the mandate. The first part then will read thus:—"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy; six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates."

The second part is as follows:—"For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."

We have remarked concerning the precepts of moral law, that for the most part they so obviously take cognizance of the great primary relation to which they belong, that the dullest intellect at once perceives it. Now should such a person read the first, or mandatory part of the fourth commandment only, it is possible that he might not discover that it is founded in the natural relation we sustain to God as his creatures. What is there in his own nature, or in God's nature, that renders it necessary for him to rest after having labored six days? So far as bodily fatigue is concerned, his own nature prompts him to rest whenever he is tired, whether that is after an interval of six, or of three days, or even of one. A man who labors ten hours every day for six days, may need to rest all of the seventh day; but let him labor but eight hours a day under the same circumstances, and he will not need it. His bodily energies are just as well restored by deducting two hours from his labor each day, as if he were to rest the whole of the seventh day. In fact there is a gain by it of four hours in the course of the week.

Again, so far as the spiritual exercises of the Sabbath are concerned, what is there in our own nature that renders it necessary for one entire day in seven to be devoted to them? The Christian does indeed feel, that his soul is refreshed, and its strength renewed, by such a course. But he also experiences the same result from the consecration of other portions of time to such exercises. There is little doubt, that if two or three hours each day were abstracted from the ordinary business of life, and spent in devout spiritual exercises, the result would be a prosperity to the soul quite as great, as that which now results from the dedication of a whole day. Indeed we are not sure but religion would be the gainer by such a course.

We utterly repudiate the popular argument, which makes bodily rest and spiritual refreshment the great ends of the sabbatic institution. That they are concurrent ends we admit; and in this view, the God-breathed humanity of the institution, and its faith-cherishing character, are clearly manifest. But if these were the only ends, it would matter but little, which day of the seven were set apart for the purpose; or even whether any thing more were done than the separation of a part of every day. Indeed, from the reading of the mandatory part of this law, it would be difficult to discover, which day of the hebdomadal cycle is intended. For although the definite article the does appear to indicate some particular day, yet unless that day is infallibly ascertained from some other source, or the exact point from which we must extend our reckoning clearly fixed, we are still left in uncertainty.

But this uncertainty is entirely removed by the second part, which gives us the ground or reason of the law. We have here a fixed point, from which our reckoning shall extend; viz. the day in which God rested from his work of creation, which, as the merest child can see, was the last, or seventh day of the first week of time. This then was the rest, or Sabbath, of the Lord our God; that is, the rest which he observed. Because he rested on this day, therefore he "sanctified it." Common sense can see—indeed any degree of intellect above idiocy can see it—that the blessing was not put upon a seventh day, or seventh part of time indefinitely, but definitely, upon the last or seventh day of the first week of time. Hence our reckoning point is sure—nothing can be more certain.

Now it is clear, that the law requires us to keep holy that day, upon which God has put the blessing. If not that particular day, the reason of the law has no force at all, and the whole second part of the commandment is a useless appendage.

Let it not be objected here, that the second part of the commandment gives the reason for the relative order, in which labor and rest shall succeed each other, but not for the definite period, which shall be appropriated to each. That which we are required to keep holy, by doing no work therein, is "the Sabbath [rest] of the Lord thy God;" which means, if there is any meaning in language, the rest which "the Lord thy God" OBSERVED. The day of rest is fixed; and the days of work are fixed, and called by the prophet "the six working days." Ezek. 46: 1. It is a shame, and speaks little for the candor of our titled divinity doctors, that they will, in face of the perfect transparency of this law, continue to talk about "the seventh part of time"—"one day in seven"—or, as the "Permanent Sabbath Documents" has it by an evidently studied evasion, "labor six days and rest ONE." *

THE SABBATH FOR THE GENTILES.

As it is argued by many that the Sabbath was made for the Jews only, and not for the Gentiles, would it not be well to examine this subject, and see whether there is not a Sabbath intended for the Gentiles as well as for the Jews? And I argue that there is, for the following reasons:—

1st. In Isaiah 56: 6, 7, we find these remarkable words, "And the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant, even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer; their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for my house shall be called an house of prayer for all people." Now if this gospel prophet, Isaiah, does not include "all people," both Jews and Gentiles, in this scripture, then I do not understand language.

2d. The "LORD of the Sabbath" himself says, "The Sabbath was made for man." Mark 2: 27. The word man here cannot well be applied to the Jews only, but must refer to "the human race." See Webster.

3d. The Gentiles actually need the rest of the Sabbath. Exod. 23: 12. "On the seventh day thou shalt rest; that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger may be refreshed." Thus we see and know the moral necessity of the rest of the Sabbath. We learn the same also from the practice of almost all nations, in observing some day as a Sabbath or rest-day.

4th. If the Sabbath was not intended for the Gentiles, then why did the "Gentiles" ask Paul to preach for them the "next Sabbath," as in Acts 13: 42, 44? And if these Gentiles, in their keeping the Sabbath, had got hold of something that did not belong to them, why did not Paul correct them?

5th. The "first tabernacle was a figure for the time then present," [that is, a figure of the first dispensation,] "in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation." And the second tabernacle was a figure of the gospel dispensation—the time now present—in which was kept the law of God, the ten commandments, written by the finger of God upon the tables of the covenant; showing us, beyond all controversy, that this law of God, the ten commandments, is intended for the gospel dispensation, and is "holy, and just, and good." Compare Heb. 9th ch. with 1 Kings 8: 9.

6th. The coming of Christ did not destroy, disannul, or "make void the law." But he rather claimed the law of the ten commandments as a law of the kingdom of heaven—Matt. 5: 17 to 19—and assures us that not one jot or tittle can pass from the law till heaven and earth pass away. No, not even the words, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." These commandments are all truth; "thy law is truth." "All his commandments are sure; they stand fast for ever and ever, and are done in truth and righteousness." Therefore "the law is spiritual," and "the righteousness of the law," [the true intent and meaning of it,] "should be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." Rom. 8: 4.

7th. "And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." Isaiah 66: 23. And if this is to be the joyful state of society after the "new heavens and new earth are created," then let every individual of the human family keep the seventh day—yea, let them all, as the primitive Christians did, "rest the Sabbath day according to the commandment." Luke 23: 56.

Now if these seven reasons are not sufficient to show clearly that the seventh-day Sabbath was made for the Gentiles, as well as for the Jews, it is intended to give more reasons when called for. C.

NEW YORK HEBREW BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—The last number of "The Occident" contains a full account of the 24th Anniversary of this Society, which was held at the Apollo Saloon on the 5th ult. From statements made by the President, it appears that when the Society was chartered there were only 500 Jews and a single synagogue in this city, whereas there are now over 10,000 Jews and nine places of worship. The objects of the Society are charitable, consisting chiefly in supplying weekly allowances to poor families during the winter, and aiding poor emigrants in finding business. The receipts of the past year amounted to $3,500, and the expenditures to about the same sum. The Society has also a permanent fund of $3,000, together with a few lots of ground, and hopes in a few years to have funds which will suffice to erect an asylum for the aged and poor of that people. Among the speakers at the meeting we notice the names of Jonas B. Phillips, Rev. Isaac P. Labagh, and Mr. George Lyon. The whole exercises were of an exceedingly interesting and enthusiastic character.

THE JEWS IN RUSSIA.—The Rev. Dr. Lilienthal, of St. Petersburgh, who has been connected with a mission among the Jews, under the auspices of the Emperor of Russia, is now on a visit to this country, and has addressed one or more meetings of Jewish Societies. He represents the condition of the Jews in Russia as being wretched beyond conception. Heretofore they have enjoyed the liberty of following the religion of their fathers, but they are not without fear that even this privilege will be denied them, so that the only alternative will be to renounce their religion. The editor of the Occident, speaking of this matter, says: "How strange that at all times, and in all ages, we meet persecution! To-day it is the Inquisition of Spain; then a Philip in France; an Edward in England; and now again, a Nicholas in Russia, aims—which God forfend—to raise his hand against a larger mass than ever the sword threatened before, since the destruction of Jerusalem. O! is this the freedom of which our men in Germany and France boast? Need we not wish for the Messiah to raise up the standard of freedom?"

MISSION AMONG THE JEWS.

We have received a Circular from the Board of Directors of the American Society for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews, which sets forth their plans and operations, with the reasons for their renewed and enlarged patronage. It seems that the Society has rented a large and commodious building in this city, part of which has been fitted up as a Jews' Chapel, and the remainder appropriated as a residence for the members of the City Mission, a Seminary for the education of candidates for missionary work among the Jews, and a Home for inquirers into the truth of Christianity when cast off by their kindred. As Superintendant for the Institution, the Society has secured the services of Rev. Mr. Lichtenstein, a Christian Israelite, who has for some years labored among the Jews in France. The Board have also employed Rev. John Neander, another Jewish convert, who has recently come from Germany to this country, by invitation, to engage in their service. This gentleman now resides in the mission-house, but intends, as soon as he has acquired greater facility in the use of the English language, to itinerate as a missionary in the other great Atlantic cities. These arrangements—which are deemed essential as preparatory measures for successful labor among the Jews—have been made at considerable expense, and can be continued only by an increase of the income of the Society. Hence the Board have ventured through this Circular to solicit aid from all evangelical Christians to carry forward and enlarge their operations. There are several stations in this country which they deem it important immediately to occupy; and there are various ways of advancing the cause, through the publication of tracts, &c., which they are anxious to adopt. Nothing seems to be wanting now but funds, and these they hope will be forthcoming as soon as the want is made known.

THE VERMONT OBSERVER.—Some weeks ago, we commented upon an article in the Vermont Observer, touching the imprisonment of Plymon Seaver, and supposed the matter would end there. But in a subsequent number of the Observer, the editor informs us of what we did not know before, that the "Recorder justifies Seaver," and thereupon proceeds to say, that before entering upon a discussion of the subject, we must answer certain questions about whether human government is of divine appointment—whether the Bible should be the basis of such government—and whether, if the Sabbath was protected by penal enactments in days of old, it ought to be so now? We have only to say, that we have thought of all these questions long ago, and presume we should answer them to the Observer's entire satisfaction. But suppose we should enter upon a long discussion about them, it is evident that we must in the end come back to the simple question, What law, BASED UPON THE BIBLE, has Plymon Seaver broken by working on Sunday? To this question, we think no satisfactory answer can be given. Now, although it might be very amusing to the editor of the Observer, to go round Robin Hood's barn in getting at this question, we should think all the while of what we were coming to, and should therefore feel an almost irresistible aversion to the discussion. If, however, the editor of the Observer is still anxious to try his steel with us, we will not refuse him a chance, but give him due notice, that we shall expect him to discuss and answer the real question at issue between us, namely, "What law, BASED UPON THE BIBLE, has Plymon Seaver broken by working on Sunday?"

AN OLD CHARGE REVIVED.—The Voice of Jacob tells of a traveler in Germany, who seized a girl about eight years old, and confined her in his vehicle. Some peasants observed him, and followed, exclaiming, "A Jew has been kidnapping!" The child was recovered, and the kidnapper given into custody. Upon examination, he was proved to be not a Jew but a Christian. Notwithstanding this, the ignorant populace still insisted that he was a Jew, and that his base act was prompted by a thirst for Christian blood!

THE PENNY MAGAZINE, republished by J. S. Redfield, has reached the 15th No. Nine more parts will complete the series—containing an immense amount of valuable matter.

SOUTHERN ABYSSINIA—NO. 2.

Travels in Southern Abyssinia, through the country of Adal to the Kingdom of Shoa, during the years 1842 and 1843. By CHARLES JOHNSTON, M. R. C. S.

SHOA NEEDS EVANGELIZATION.

In Major Harris' Highlands of Ethiopia we have detailed the creed and sacred calendar of the Alexandrian Church, as the faith and order of the present Shoan Church. Respecting this matter Mr. Johnston says:—

"Whilst in Ankobar, the capital of Shoa, I read a considerable portion of Ludolph's Ethiopic History, a work left in charge of Dr. Roth, the naturalist of the British Embassy, by Dr. Krapf, the church missionary, when he returned to Egypt. I had the opportunity of reading the whole book upon the doctrine of the church contained in Ludolph; and also the interesting Almanac appended to it; but the former is such an evident compilation of what ought to be the faith of the Abyssinian Church, rather than what it ever was, or is at the present day, that I consider any abstract, or account of the Christians of Shoa, founded upon it, would be one of the grossest impositions that could be palmed upon the reading public. I dare not, in fact, attempt any elucidation of the faith professed by the King and the monks of Shoa. They certainly have no universal creed, nor any articles to define what is orthodox belief, and what is not. The chief principle of religion with the heads of the church in that country, seems to be, to think as the King does. I confess myself, therefore, unequal to the task of giving any account of the Christian religion in Shoa.

"It must be observed, however, that in matters of church ceremony the Shoans affect the formulary of the Alexandrian Church. But even on this subject a great schism exists, by the contemptuous disregard of tabots, robes, and all outward show whatever, with which the Tabeebar sect celebrate their worship. Blacksmiths, potters, carpenters, in fact all manufacturing artisans, are called Tabeebs, and from this circumstance, when first I heard of their mysterious rites, I considered that they would be found to be a community of free-masons. Now, I give them the credit of practicing the primitive customs of the early church of Christ, as it approaches very much to that simple worship of God which, from internal evidence contained in some of the letters of St. Paul, we may suppose to have distinguished the meetings of Christians in the apostolic age.

"It is a peculiar feature of the worship in this country, that all religious buildings should surmount some earth overtopping mountain;—and all churches that I have seen, are so situated, except the meeting-houses of the Tabeebar sect; who do not pay that respect to ancient superstitions that still influences the other Christians of Abyssinia.

"I never saw the members of any church less bigoted than the Christians of Shoa; but I am given to understand, that more to the north, less toleration is exhibited towards Mahommedans and individuals of other faiths."

The people of Shoa are described as comely in their persons; of good natural parts; domestic in their habits; kind and hospitable to one another and to strangers; but superstitious and ignorant of letters, and all the life-giving doctrines of the holy gospel; and priests and people are shockingly addicted to debauchery and licentiousness.

But few individuals are educated except for the church; and the qualifications required for that are so meagre, that it is often the case that the ability to recite the ever-repeating formularies, is sufficient to dispense with a ready knowledge of the letter.

The English Church Missionaries, Messrs. Isenberg and Krapf, prepared some school books, and a geography, which were published by the Church Missionary Society, together with parts of the Scriptures; and both Christians and Mahommedans evinced considerable desire to obtain these publications.

Major Harris makes a great parade of a commercial treaty effected by himself between the King of Shoa and the Queen of Great Britain; but by Mr. Johnston's account, it appears that the King of Shoa was offended at the conduct of the Embassy for infringing upon his prerogative, and some difficulty occurring between them on account thereof, Mr. Scott, a member of the Embassy, admitted to Mr. Johnston, that the King did not know the purport of the paper he had signed; and had only been made aware of the new responsibilities he had incurred, by a sharply-worded expostulatory letter, written by Dr. Krapf, the missionary, at the dictation of Major Harris.

"Any idea of granting public benefit at the expense of his prerogative, was never entertained for a moment, the intentions of the King being limited to showing personal favor alone; which he is ever ready to concede even now, to English travelers, much as he complains of the conduct of the Mission in Shoa as regards their political misdoings; more especially of the great insult offered to him by the unfortunate letter before alluded to, and which was worded so unguardedly, that the King, on receiving it, might well, considering his great regard for Dr. Krapf previously, turn to him and say, in a tone that implied more of sorrow than of anger, 'Did you write that, my father?' * Who can help regretting the great mistake of the missionary, in calling political aid to his assistance, though he erred solely by his zeal to extend his opportunities of conferring good upon his fellow men? He grieves now for influence founded upon respect that is gone forever."

On the whole, we are more than ever interested in a mission to Eastern Africa; but feel more than ever the need of ample information upon all the policy of Shoa and other adjacent countries; and this we hope soon to obtain. S. D.

* The appellation by which the clergy of Shoa are addressed.

DESECRATION OF SUNDAY.—A custom prevails, it is said, among the country towns and villages of Canada of holding public auction regularly on Sundays, immediately after service. This has, at last, become the subject-matter for much discussion among the professors of religion in that quarter. Rev. Mr. ROWMAN, a Divine of the Episcopal persuasion, has notified his congregation that he will administer the Lord's Supper to no one who makes a bid on such occasions.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

We gave last week the principal doings in Congress up to Tuesday noon, Dec. 2, when the President's Message was presented.

The House of Representatives was in session on Wednesday and Thursday, when it adjourned over to Monday, for the purpose of giving the Speaker time to select the Committees. B. B. French, Esq., was elected Clerk of the House; Newton Lane was re-appointed Sergeant-at-Arms; Mr. Whitney of Illinois was appointed Doorkeeper; and Messrs. Ritchie & Heiss were chosen Public Printers. A Memorial was presented from certain citizens of the United States, residing in the Territory of Oregon, praying for the establishment of a distinct territorial government, to embrace Oregon and its adjacent seacoasts. There was a motion in the House to revive the old Rule, whereby all Petitions, &c., relating to Slavery, were formerly laid on the table, without reading, reference, or any consideration whatever. The motion was lost by a vote which gave a cheering sign of progress in public sentiment.

In the Senate nothing of general interest was done, except that the reports from the different departments were read and ordered printed. On Thursday the Senate adjourned over until Monday.

A SABBATH CONVENTION, so-called, was held in Philadelphia last week, at which were present many delegates from the city and adjacent villages. There seems to have been great difference of opinion as to the propriety of petitioning the Legislature upon the due observance of Sunday, and the debate upon that subject was quite animated. The Rev. Dr. Bethune opposed appealing to the Legislature, and several other reverend doctors advocated it. We have not learned what was the final decision of the Convention; but we are glad to notice, as an omen of good, that there were found among its members some who doubted the policy of attempting to make men religious by legislative enactments. If the Legislature has made laws which hinder the free exercise of religious preferences, let it be petitioned to unmake such laws as soon as possible. Or if any new laws are necessary to secure to all the privilege of acting according to the dictates of their consciences, let petitions be forwarded for the passage of such laws. But if a set of men, who are abundantly protected in holding their own religious views, wish also for the passage of laws which will compel others to practice like themselves, then it is time for the friends of religious freedom to refuse to sign or countenance petitions which aim to secure the passage of such laws.

THE COLORED ORPHAN ASYLUM, located in the vicinity of this city, held its ninth anniversary on Monday evening last. The exercises consisted chiefly of recitations and singing by the orphan children connected with the Asylum, and were of such a character as to evince great proficiency and respectable talent. Rev. Dr. Vermilye varied the exercises by an address, in which he alluded very feelingly to the abject and degraded condition of colored orphans, who are permitted to roam at large, instead of being gathered into some such institution as the asylum, where they can receive that instruction and training which will fit them for happiness and usefulness. He said there were many who looked upon the colored race as having no intellectual capacities, but the sight of the children present, and the advancement which they had exhibited, refuted the theory. Indeed, although he had attended many exhibitions of a similar nature, he had never been present at so good a one as this. He therefore recommended the institution to the public as worthy of their highest confidence and support. The present number of children in the Asylum is 139. The number admitted since its opening is 262.

THE CHRISTIAN PARLOR MAGAZINE for December comes to us with its usual variety of choice original matter. The principal articles are, "The Jews and their History," "Rambles about Paris," "Sketches of Life in the City," "The Domestic Revival," and "The Primeval Forest." The plate of "The Holy Family" is well executed and appropriate.

A CLERGYMAN DROWNED.—The Rev. Thomas Robinson, a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, residing in Anne Arundel county, near the head of Severn river, met an untimely death on Saturday morning. Our informant states that he was thrown into the water by the upsetting of a small boat, and that he managed to reach the shore by swimming, but in so exhausted a condition from the intense cold, that he shortly afterwards expired.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I wish to acknowledge, through the Sabbath Recorder, the following sums received on behalf of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, they being part of a considerable subscription to be paid prior to the next Anniversary of the Society.

General Intelligence.

FOREIGN NEWS—15 DAYS LATER.

By the Cambria, which reached Boston] on Friday last, English papers were received to the 19th ult.

The political news is of very little importance.

Cotton remains about the same as at our previous advices, and the Grain Market has been well sustained, but we do not gather that flour or grain have actually advanced.

It is understood that the British Cabinet has determined not to open the ports of that country for the free admission of Grain at present.

The failure of the potatoe crop in Ireland continues to create a sensation among Statesmen as well as the poor.

American Wool appears to command much attention.

Trade in the Manufacturing Districts is represented as comparatively prostrated.

Puseyism is still advancing in Great Britain. Rev. R. A. Coffin, vicar of St. Mary Magdalen, and student of Christ church, Oxford, has joined the Roman sect; also Rev. Mr. Brown, curate of Bawdsey, Suffolk; several university men at Stonyhurst are secretly apostates from the church of England; and at a church consecration in Leeds, Dr. Pusey and his friends refused to sign a declaration of loyalty to the church of England and aversion to Popery.

The youngest daughter of the Earl and Countess of Jersey, Lady Adela Villers, eloped from Brighton on the 5th ult. with Capt. Ibbertson, of the 11th Hussars. They were married at Gretna Green on the following day. The affair created considerable excitement in fashionable circles in London.

The Railroad Speculation.—The London Times has published a document relative to the railway interest of this country, which has excited much interest and a good deal of alarm. The document exhibits the astounding number of 1,263 projected companies, to carry out which will require nearly two-thirds of the national debt of England! Even the deposit of ten per cent, will alone absorb £53,336,300. It further appears that there are 47 railways completed, representing a capital of £70,680,887. In the course of construction there are 118 lines of railway, to complete which, even with the preliminary power of borrowing one-third on debenture, will absorb £67,359,325—so that the invested capital in rails, leaving entirely out of view the new announcements, is already the enormous sum of £113,612,018! But if the old, the new, and the announced undertakings are added together, with the ten per cent deposit, we have the incredible sum of £649,583,790 required for this branch of trade alone. [European Times.

France.

It appears from a report of the Minister of Marine that the total loss of the late conflagration at Toulon was about 3,165,000 francs.

Prince de Joinville has again become a father, the Princess having presented him with a little boy, whom the King created instanter Duc de Ponthievre. This little child—a mere squalling infant—has been gravely dubbed in pompous official accents at his birth, a "high and puissant prince!" High and puissant prince—what next? And yet this is royality.

Spain.

At Valencia there have lately been more troubles, and the city has been declared in a state of siege by the military authorities of the district.

The harvest of this country has been abundant, and general surprise is felt that the English Government does not send here for the supplies of which it has need, in preference to France, Germany, or Russia.

Germany.

The excitement among the German Catholics still continues. Ronge travels from town to town, addressing large numbers, and gaining new converts. He has not yet been arrested for publishing obnoxious pamphlets, and it is now said that he will not be. The General Synod of the Free Scotch Church has addressed a letter to the German Catholics of Berlin, expressing their sympathy with them. While blaming their profession of faith as too vague, it offers them its aid and succor. It is not known whether the German Catholics will accept this offer of pecuniary subsistence, as they did a similar proposal from the Anglican Church.

A violent quarrel between the Government and the new Archbishop of Cologne, similar to that which raged some time ago, appears on the eve of breaking out.

In Germany, generally, the harvest has been very fair. Potatoes have suffered cruelly from the malady.

A marriage has been resolved upon between the Archduke Stephen of Austria and the Princess Olga, daughter of the Emperor Nicholas. The lady is the most beautiful princess in Europe, according to all accounts, and is the darling child of her stern, iron-souled father. The Archduke is cousin to the Emperor of Austria, son of the Palatine of Hungary, and is himself Viceroy of Bohemia. The marriage was once before arranged, but was broken off in consequence of the young Archduke refusing to change his religion. The Emperor Nicholas has at last consented not to insist upon this point. It is the first time a similar concession has ever been made by the imperial family of Russia, and it is considered most important in a political point of view.

Greece.

Athens, 25th Oct.—It is said that twenty Greeks were recently massacred by the Turks on the frontier. The Journals state that it is important to bring this fact to the public knowledge, for if a Turk is killed an outcry is raised as if the Ottoman Empire was in danger, but the murder of a Greek is spoken of as a natural occurrence.

Turkey.

A fire took place at the Dardanelles on the 25th, which consumed all the Greek and Hebrew houses, 40 Turkish and 80 Armenian, a number of stores, a synagogue, and two mosques. It is stated that not less than 600 buildings have been destroyed.

French Africa.

The latest news from Algeria is rather unsatisfactory. It appears that Abd-el-Kader has carried away several of the disaffected tribes from the territory of Algeria, and established them in the Morocco territory, where, according to the French accounts, they are preparing to make war in favor of Abd-el-Kader against the Emperor of Morocco. There seems to be no doubt that Abd-el-Kader is endeavoring to gather together as many of his old subjects as will follow him, for the purpose of founding a sort of wandering sovereignty within the Morocco frontier.

It is said that the French government intend to send 20,000 men to Africa before the month of February.

A rumor is afloat that Abd-el Kader, having been surprised, and compelled to flee, his horse, in descending a steep hill, fell and crushed the Emir to death.

Abstract of the Postmaster General's Report.

The number of Postmasters appointed during the year, ending June 30, 1845, was 3033; deaths and resignations 1897; removals 753; commissions expired 14; new Post Offices 352.

During the year 516 contractors were fined to the amount of $10,521 50.

The revenue during the year was $4,289,841 80
" Expenditures 4,320,731 99

Net revenue after deducting the commissions of Post Masters, contingent expenses, &c. is $2,942,-217 27.

The Postmaster General believes there will be a falling off forty-five per cent in the receipts of the current year, and that there will be a diminution of the means of the Department of $1,328,-997.

The saving from former rates in New England and New York in transportation, the current year, is $232,732.

The Railroad service is only one-tenth of the whole, while they charge one-fifth of the whole.

Should there be a similar saving in letting the contracts to other districts to that effected in the Northern, it will amount in 1847, '48 and '49, to $1,005,732.

Compensation to Postmasters and for Post Offices during the year ending 30th June, 1845, was $1,409,875 18. Over 2000 Postmasters resigned on account of the new law.

The Postmaster General mentions a case of fraud on the Post Office where in one envelope, on which $1 50 had been paid, there were counted 100 letters enclosed, which would have amounted to $10 00.

The P. M. G. thinks the single sheet system should be restored or reduced to a quarter of an ounce for a single letter.

The great weight of the mail is by carrying printed matter. It composes nine-tenths of the mail, yet pays only one-tenth of the expenses.

He proposes the following reform:

5 cents each single letter under 50 miles.
10 " " over 50 and under 300.
15 " " over 300 This to continue till 1848, when the pesent rates shall be restored.

He recommends the former rates on newspapers, periodicals &c. with right to send them out of the mail. He urges a pre-payment of letters in all cases. He advises a limit to the number of exchange papers between Editors. He recommends the restriction of franking privileges to the old ground.

The number of letters not called for, the first quarter, under the new law, was 300,000.

Morse's Telegraph to Baltimore, with Professor Morse's salary, costs $3244, and the receipts only $413 44.

The National Treasury.—It appears, by a letter from a Washington correspondent of the Journal of Commerce, that the receipts from the Customs for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1845, will exceed $27,500,000; from Public Lands $2,000,000; miscellaneous and incidental sources $163,998,56; making in all, over $29,-700,000.

There was a balance in the Treasury 1st July, 1844, of $7,857,379 64, which added to the receipts, will make a total of over $37,500,-000. The expenditures for the same time were about $30,000,000, which leave a balance in the Treasury of above $7,500,000. In the items, the expenditures under the direction of the War Department were very large, being over $15,-000,000, or more than one-half of the whole expenses of the government. The civil list will not much exceed two and a quarter millions of dollars, and the foreign intercourse not half a million. The Navy Department has expended above $6,000,000; making upwards of $21,000,-000 for our active national defence.

"Statistics of the Woollen Manufactories in the U. States," have just been published by Wm. H. Graham, 158 Nassau st. The book purports to give the location, name of chief proprietors, No. of sets of condensing cards and strands, and kind of goods made in each Woollen Factory of the United States. Of these we learn from this book that there are 28 in Maine, (not including small wool-carding works,) 58 in New Hampshire, 141 in Massachusetts, 75 in Vermont, 40 in Rhode Island, 123 in Connecticut, 326 in New York, 10 in New Jersey, 101 in Pennsylvania, 4 in Delaware, 16 in Maryland, 18 in Virginia, 80 in Ohio, 9 in Kentucky, 6 in Indiana, 6 (small) in Michigan, 6 in Illinois, 7 in Wisconsin, 3 in Missouri, 2 in Iowa, 4 in North Carolina, 1 in South Carolina, 3 in Georgia, and 2 in Tennessee: Total in the Union, 1,042.

A Prediction Verified.—The Springs at Saratoga, N. Y., are situated in the original territory of the Mohawks, and are supposed to have been known and used by them before their discovery by the whites, (a party of surveyors,) which was about the year 1770. They were considerably resorted to, while the neighboring land was a wilderness, by our revolutionary troops, stationed at Saratoga. Dr. Tenney, of the army, 62 years since, (in September, 1783,) observed in a communication to a scientific society—"I think they only want a suitable introduction to the world, and some convenient houses for boarding and lodging of patients, to render them of important service to the country." How completely this prediction has been verified, we need not undertake to prove.

Novel Printing Machine.—A printing machine of a novel construction has lately been invented by Mr. George Schnebly, an engineer. It is called the Victoria Platten Printing Machine. The novelty of the invention consists in having but one large wheel and two cog wheels, one larger than the other. In the larger of these there is an eccentric groove, in which two shafts work, one on each side; the larger of the shafts forces up the platten, and the smaller carries the paper under the platten, and discharges and adjusts it. When the larger of these shafts is moving, the smaller one stops, and when the smaller one is moving the larger stops, and vice versa. There is also another contrivance attached to the smaller shaft, by which the type is better and more equally inked. It is capable at present of printing between six and eight hundred impressions an hour; a contrivance which, though not calculated to compete with steam printing presses, may be found useful in small establishments, it being a great improvement on the old press.

Why Mechanic Arts cannot flourish in Slave States.—In Slave States, the tendency of things is for land to accumulate in the hands of a few. The former occupants of the soil emigrate to new countries. Now B. is a saddler; he supplies twenty farmers with saddles; well, if no depopulation takes place, he may live on very well; but what are his children to do? Make saddles too? There is no one to buy—the father supplies the demand. Sell saddles in the great marts of commerce?—that is impossible, because Slave States do not afford roads and canals, and such facilities of transportation as the Free States. And if the roads were made, there is not division of labor and energy enough to enable the maker of saddles in Slave States to sell as cheaply as saddlers in the Free States. B.'s children are then left without employment; for all other trades are full, as well as that of saddle making. Hence, in the great mass of Slave States, free white laborers are necessarily impoverished. But suppose half of B.'s customers buy out the other half; B.'s means are reduced one half—he becomes poorer. Suppose one buys out the other nineteen of the twenty farmers, filling the twenty farms with slaves; then B. is ruined—he can't sell but one saddle—he is out of bread, and must move or die. Thus the tendency of slavery is to destroy every free white laborer, or reduce him to the physical necessities and mental subserviency of the black slave! The State loses her middle class; effeminate aristocracy ensues on one hand, and abject slavery on the other. This is barbarism! [True American.

Babies' Dolls.—We see it stated in an English paper, that 17,000 sacks of sawdust are consumed annually, in London, for stuffing dolls alone. Also, that one toy manufacturer has been known to purchase three thousand pounds worth of doll's eyes at one time—that one hundred and eleven persons are constantly employed in one manufactory, in making small sized donkeys—and, that as much timber is annually consumed in making wooden horses for children to ride upon, as would be required in a first-rate ship of war. This is certainly doing a large business, though it be for small matters.

The Farmer.—The situation of the Farmer is that in which the Almighty placed his people in their days of comparative innocence, and to that situation many of his laws refer; and when in the fullness of time the Messiah came, it was to the shepherds that his advent was announced by a chorus of angels. It was chosen by the Almighty for his people under the old dispensation, and they were the earliest recipients of his favor under the new. Agriculture conduces to health and competence, and in giving these, it gives all this life can bestow, and if rightly improved, they will open to him a glorious future.
[Quincy's Address.

Labor to Make a Watch.—Mr. Dent, in a lecture delivered before the London Royal Institute, made an allusion to the formation of a watch, and stated that a watch consists of 992 pieces, and that 43 trades, and probably 215 persons, are employed in making one of those little machines. The iron of which the balance spring is formed, is valued at something less than a farthing; this produces an ounce of steel worth 4 3-4d, which is drawn into 2,250 yards of steel wire, and represents in the market £13 4s; but still another process of hardening this originally farthing's worth of iron, renders it workable into 7,650 balance springs, which will realize, at the common price of 2s 5d each, £946 5s, the effect of labor alone. Thus it may be seen that the mere labor bestowed upon one farthing's worth of iron gives it the value of £959 5s, or $4,542, which is 75,-980 times its original value.

Poverty.—Start not at the labor doom of honest poverty; it is to poverty that we are indebted for the discovery of a new world; it made Franklin a philosopher; Hogarth a painter; and Napoleon the conqueror of Europe. The mightiest minds that ever astonished the world were nursed in the vale of poverty; that was their incentive to action, their stimulus to glory and immortality. Pine not, then, at your lot, if you be poor and virtuous; a large fortune to a giddy youth, is the most painful judgment an indulgent heaven can inflict upon man. The inordinate love of wealth, so fatally prevalent in modern times, when with a great majority, riches are a test of respectability, and cash a token of worth and virtue, a cloak to screen from crime—is worse than blear-eyed famine, more fatal than the festering folds of purple pestilence. Mourn not, then, that you are poor—push your faculties into a holier sphere, and reap abundant stores of mental gain in the extended field of an enlightened mind. [Fisk.

Family Recipes.—We are indebted for the following, to a lady of Utica, whose skill in the art of housewifery, we have reason to know, is not often excelled:—

To make Johnny Cake.—Take two large cups of meal, one cup of flour, and one cup of sour milk, one egg, one table spoonful of molasses, and a tea spoonful of saleratus, dissolved; mix thoroughly, and add sufficient sweet milk to cause the batter to spread in pans; then bake in the usual way.

Rice Puddings.—One cup of clean rice, and nine cups of new milk, a piece of butter the size of a small hen's egg, a little salt, and sweeten to suit taste—some add a few raisins and a little spice or lemon. Bake in a slow oven, but do not bake dry. It is best eaten when cold.

Cure for Scalds and Burns.—The best remedy I ever saw applied was a linament of soap, made by mixing fresh slaked lime and sweet oil; it is an excellent article and should be in every family. So says a subscriber to the Farmer and Mechanic.

Cure for Diarrhœa.—A tea cup full of rice well browned and made into a beverage, will cure the most obstinate case. Take a cup full of the beverage once in 20 or 30 minutes until the third or fourth time, then wait an hour or two and repeat.—Ib.

Henry Morgan of Aurora, Cayuga Co., has recovered a verdict of $32 against David C. Stewart, late County Treasurer, for damages occasioned by the refusal of Mr. S. to furnish him with a copy of the Natural History of the State for which he had subscribed.

SUMMARY.

The difficulty among the Cherokees is assuming a serious character. Two men have been killed, and several others wounded. Indignation against a gang of desperadoes, is assigned as the cause, and it is said that a decree has gone forth to slay all the relations of the Starrs from two years old and upwards.

Mr. Christopher Sewell, of Boston, died a few days since from the effects of smoking segars to an immoderate extent. He had often consumed thirty a day, which pernicious practice brought on so great a debility, that he died from the rupture of a small blood vessel.

One hundred ladies of Washington have subscribed $5 each, to be expended in the purchase of wood to be distributed amongst the poor during the winter.

The exports from Ohio, of its various productions, are expected to reach 910,000 barrels of flour, and pork; cattle, wool, &c., amounting to $11,800,000, and this is regarded as a low estimate.

From fifty to sixty thousand pounds weight of lead mineral have been raised by eight miners in one day in Illinois. The mineral sold at $22 per thousand. Taking fifty-five thousand as the amount raised, it would make the product of one days labor of eight men, one thousand two hundred and ten dollars. This is the most profitable day's work ever performed in the mines.

The Journal of Commerce states that the quantity of Onondaga salt made last year at the State Salines was 3,127,500 bushels. Mr. Spencer, the writer of the letter of which an extract was published in the Journal, was late Superintendent of the Salines. Mr. Spencer expresses the opinion that he can make salt at the Saltville, (Va.) Springs, at a cost not exceeding 5 cents per bushel, and that he can make coarse salt similar to Turk's Island, for a cost little exceeding that price.

A specimen of paper made from broom corn stalks has been shown in Philadelphia. The Philadelphia Inquirer alludes to it as an excellent article, remarkable for toughness, flexibility and body, and another important matter, offered at a very low rate.

Some enterprising citizens of Springfield, Ill., at the head of whom is Senator Semple, are forming a company to run a line of steam prairie cars between Alton and Springfield. They have been engaged for some time in experimenting upon the feasibility of the project, and entertain full confidence that they can run a car over the ground at the rate of ten miles an hour, drawing four times the weight of the engine.

The profits of the house of Rothschilds for the last year, amounted to more than one hundred and twenty millions francs, and its accounts, when last balanced, showed an active capital of 720 millions of francs, or about 145 millions of dollars. This house has made forty millions francs profit on the shares it held in the great Northern railroad.

The Brooklyn Eagle publishes the call of the 'Long Island State Convention,' who are invited to meet at the house of Samuel Vunck, Prospect Hill, to take such measures as will be necessary for immediate action for making Long Island a State independent of the State of New York—the number of inhabitants on the Island being nearly equal to that of Delaware and Rhode island together.

Within the week fifteen hundred bushels of potatoes have arrived in this city from England. It is said that at the present prices the shippers realize a very handsome profit. We are fully of the opinion that farmers should not depend too much on getting high prices for their produce next spring.

A most dangerous counterfeit of the Mexican Dollar has made its appearance, and is well calculated to deceive even good judges of coin. The counterfeit consists of two plates of silver, of the value of 12 1-2 cents each, over a piece of copper or brass. The plates are distinct from the copper; the base and pure metals are not mixed, and hence the counterfeit will stand the trial of chemical agents. The mint marks, figure, &c., are of course stamped upon the pure silver plates, which are joined on the edge of the dollar so neatly as to defy scrutiny. They are of the date of 1845.

Quite a fierce newspaper controversy is now going on in Alabama, about the bearings of Negro-Trading, economically viewed, and the propriety of the passage of a law in that State to prohibit the introduction of slaves. One of the great arguments alledged in favor of such a law is, that the "negro-trader monopolizes the whole market, and to all intents and purposes, is protected, while a suffering debtor is thrown heels over head out of the market and left to the rigid exactions of the law."

The amount of money received at the land office at Green Bay in September, was $13,307. In October, $24,718. This is something after the fashion of the memorable days of 1837.

About $25,000 had been paid in at the Dubuque Land Office for land, mostly by actual settlers, during the first twelve days of the last month. There is a continual stream of emigration to and through Dubuque, from Eastern and other States, which terminates on the fertile vacant lands of Dubuque and the adjoining counties.

In St. Louis, Mo., there are thirteen saw mills in operation, propelling eighteen saws, and which supply weekly, about 300,000 feet of boards.

A magnificent gray Eagle, measuring six feet from the tip of each wing, was captured near Van Wie's Point, a few days since. It was a noble bird, and sufficiently felt its importance, as those who ventured too near it could feelingly assert.

An India rubber factory in Providence manufactures 600 pairs of shoes daily. The India rubber being first mashed, is dissolved in camphene, and passed several times between two iron rollers. It is then run off in a very thin web, by passing it between heavy rollers upon cloth, where it is kept in place until several layers are made, so as to obtain the desired thickness. During this operation the material is kept warm by steam. One girl makes from 10 to 15 pairs of men's rubber shoes per day after the material is prepared.

PLAINFIELD FAMILY SCHOOL.

THIS Institution will commence its Winter Session on Monday the 27th of November. The course of instruction embraces all the solid branches of education, and is designed to prepare boys for college or mercantile pursuits. The French and Spanish languages, both written and spoken, are also taught on the most approved principle. References and other particulars will be given on application to J. O. MAURIAC, Principal.

DIED,

At Bowentown, N. J., Sept. 30, 1845, Ammorilla, relict of Dea. Jedediah Davis, in the 77th year of her age. She made a public profession of the name of Christ, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Shiloh, N. J., Nov. 1804, nearly 41 years ago. She survived her husband more than 16 years. Many are living who can attest to her prompt and punctual attendance on the means of grace and the ordinances of God's house. For nearly a year before her death, she was prevented from attending by ill health and increasing infirmity; for the last two weeks of her life she was entirely helpless. She departed in an easy and tranquil manner, like one going to sleep. In her was seen an example of a remarkably meek and quiet spirit, adorning the profession she had made, and exemplifying in her life the precepts of the gospel of Jesus her Redeemer. A lasting memorial of her, and her beloved partner in life, will remain with the Church, in the form of a silver cup used at the Lord's table presented by them, with their names engraven thereon, A. D. 1820, and corresponding with one presented by Hannah Marten of Newport, R. I., A. D. 1751.

In Shiloh, N. J., Oct. 15, of congestive fever, Phebe, wife of Caleb S. Hall, in the 35th year of her age. She was a member of the Shiloh Church, and well adorned her profession.

In Shiloh, about the same time, Abigail, daughter of Lewis F. Randolph, deceased, in the 16th year of her age.

In Shiloh, on the 6th inst., Reuben, son of Abel S. Tomlinson, in the 18th year of his age.

Berlin—Jared Green $2; Thomas Davis $1.

☞ Our friends will have noticed, that our receipts for a few weeks past have been alarmingly small—too small by far to meet our current expenses. Many thanks are due to those subscribers whose remittances at an early period in the volume have enabled us to go on thus far comfortably; and we trust that those who have not made their remittances, will only need to have the subject suggested in order to secure for it their prompt and cheerful attention. We are on the eve of closing the old year and beginning the new. What better time could be selected to square up old accounts and begin new ones? Will our delinquent friends let us hear from them on this subject?

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

The 2d Semi-Annual Session of the Central Association will be held with the first church in Verona, on the third and fourth days of the week, Jan. 6th and 7th, 1846. Introductory discourse by Eld. G. M. Langworthy, or Eld. Elias Burdick, his alternate. There will be two Essays or Tracts presented for examination. One on Communion, the other on Baptism. All Missionaries employed by the Association will then make their reports, and farther action will be taken relative to Missionary Operations. The subject of obtaining legal protection in the enjoyment of the Sabbath, from the Legislature, will probably come before the Association. The Agent of the American and Foreign Bible Society has given notice that he will be present, and with leave will present the claims of that Society. A full attendance is very desirable.
JAMES BAILEY, Rec. Sec.
DeRuyter, Nov. 27, 1845.

NOTICE.

A Quarterly Meeting will be held with the Church in Scott, N. Y., commencing on the 6th day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in December. The churches associated, and other churches, and brethren are invited to attend.

Miscellany.

AUTUMN.

With what a glory comes and goes the year!
The buds of spring, those beautiful harbingers
Of sunny skies and cloudless times, enjoy
Life's newness, and earth's garniture spread out;
And when the silver habit of the clouds
Comes down upon the autumn sun, and with
A sober gladness the old year takes up
His bright inheritance of golden fruits,
A pomp and pageant fill the splendid scene.

There is a beautiful spirit breathing now
Its mellow richness on the clustered trees,
And, from a beaker full of richest dyes,
Pouring new glory on the autumn woods,
And dipping in warm light the pillared clouds.
Morn on the mountain, like a summer bird,
Lifts up her purple wing, and in the vales
The gentle wind, a sweet and passionate wooer,
Kisses the blushing leaf, and stirs up life
Within the solemn woods of ash deep-crimsoned,
And silver beech, and maple yellow-leaved,
Where autumn, like a faint old man, sits down
By the way side a-weary. Through the trees
The golden robin moves. The purple finch,
That on wild-cherry and red-cedar feeds,
A winter bird, comes with its plaintive whistle,
And pecks by the witch-hazel, whilst aloud
From cottage roofs the warbling bluebird sings,
And merrily, with oft-repeated stroke,
Sounds from the threshing-floor the busy flail.

O, what a glory doth this world put on
For him who, with a fervent heart, goes forth
Under the bright and glorious sky, and looks
On duties well performed, and days well spent!
For him the wind, ay, and the yellow leaves,
Shall have a voice, and give him eloquent teachings.
He shall hear the solemn hymn, that Death
Has lifted up for all, that he shall go
To his long resting-place without a tear.

LONGFELLOW.

Massilon's Sermons.

I see it announced in the Herald, that this invaluable volume of sermons has been published by Wait, Pierce, & Co., of Boston. So far as I know this is the first American edition, and I think the public owe a debt of gratitude to the publishers. The English prints are so rare and dear, that but few libraries contain these rich productions.—Massilon was one of the most eloquent preachers of any age, or country; and his published volume of sermons is among the richest, and best, viewed in every aspect, in the English language.

First, He dwells on the most solemn and practical questions in his discourses; on salvation—on the small number of the saved—on the uncertainty of righteousness in a state of lukewarmness—on evil speaking—on the delay of conversion. These are only specimens selected from a large catalogue, equally practical and important. It is with feelings of deep hnmiliation, that I turn from the mystical pulpit efforts of modern times, couched in cabalistic terms, written in classic style, redundant in figure, florid in language, dealing in dew drops and rainbows, and moonshine, rather than the practical saving truths of the gospel, to Massilon a French CATHOLIC BISHOP.—And this plainness is the more to be admired when we reflect that he was preaching before the dissolute court, of the most dissolute people of the world, the courts of France.

Secondly. Massilon cannot be imitated, his sermons, I ought rather to say, cannot be borrowed. He will fill you with noble thoughts, fire you with zeal, rouse your minds to an uncommon degree of energy, impress you with the awful solemnity and importance of gospel truth, and the ministerial work, but no sane man would think of attempting to play the plagiarist with him. His sermons are not made up of detached thoughts, beautiful of themselves alone; but they are a solid masonry of truth, from which no port can be dislodged, without marring the beauty, the symmetry, and proportions of the superstructure.

Thirdly. He never seems anxious to be eloquent, nor even to be conscious of the fact that he is.

In his whole volume of sermons I believe there is not one line of poetry quoted, not one merely classical allusion, no expression or sentence used solely for ornament; but words are used as the mere vehicles and garnature of his thoughts. No quotations therefore do him full justice; to be appreciated he must be read from beginning to end. I have commenced his discourse on the small number of the saved, with an interest which has increased as I have proceeded—have finished with trembling—closed the volume, and paced my study wrapped in solemn thoughts, and fearing least "after having preached to others, I myself should be cast away," and yet I could not tell what particular passages affected me. The fault of many, called good, beautiful speakers, is, that they betray at every step a solicitude for favor, for applause. They seem far more concerned to conform to all the fastidious notions in pronunciation, in gesture, in gracefulness of action, than to pluck men from ruin. Massilon seems like one charged with an important message from God, and with solemn earnestness he hastens to deliver it.

Bear with me if I close this hasty notice with a quotation or two from his sermon on death.

"The earth is like a vast field of battle, where we are every day engaged with the enemy. You have happily escaped to-day, but you have witnessed the fall of many who, like you, expected to survive; to-morrow you again must enter the lists, and who has told you that fortune, so capricious in regard to others, to you alone will continue favorable? And since you at last must perish there, are you prudent in building a fixed and permanent habitation on the very spot, perhaps, intended for your tomb?

Place yourselves in any possible situation, there is not a moment but may be your last, and has actually been so to some of your brethren; no brilliant action but may terminate in the eternal shades of the grave. Herod is struck amid the foolish and servile applauses of his people; no day set apart for the solemn display of worldly magnificence, but may conclude with your funeral pomp; Jezebel was precipitated the very day she had chosen to show herself in her greatest pride and ostentation, from the windows of her palace; no festival but may be the feast of death; Belshasser expired in the midst of a sumptuous banquet." Again, addressing the proud and titled, he says:—"Visit the tomb of your ancestors, in the presence of their ashes, to meditate on the vanity of all earthly things. Go ask what now, in those dark habitations of death, remains to them of all their pleasures, dignities and splendor? Open yourselves these gloomy dwellings, and, reflecting on what they had formerly been in the eyes of men, see what they now are; spectres whose presence you with difficulty can support; loathsome masses of worms and putrefaction; such are they in the eyes of men, but what are they in the sight of God? Descend, in idea, into these dwellings of honor and infection, and choose beforehand your own place; figure yourself, in the last hour, extended on the bed of anguish struggling with death—your limbs benumbed and already seized with a mortal coldness—your tongue already bound in the chains of death—your eyes fixed, covered with a cloud of confusion, and before which all things begin to disappear—your relations and friends around you, offering up ineffectual wishes for your recovery, and augmenting your fears and regrets, by the tenderness of their sighs and the abundance of their tears; reflect upon that sight, so instructive, so interesting; you then, in the dismal struggles of that last combat, proving that you are still in life only by the convulsions that announce your death, the whole life annihilated to you, despoiled forever of all your dignities and titles, accompanied solely by your works, and ready to appear in the presence of God." Such is Massilon. But I have only given a taste of his rich dainties. I hope the preachers will avail themselves of the opportunity presented, to possess this choice production of a rich mind. [Tr. Wes.

THE POWER OF KINDNESS.—Fenelon was a Roman Catholic, and Archbishop of Cambria, in France. He was a man of the finest feelings, of the greatest benevolence, and he uniformly practised the law, "overcome evil with good." He was kind and affable to the lowly, mild and courteous to the ignorant, philanthropic to the miserable, and ever gentle both to friend and foe.—The consequence was, that he won all hearts. His diocese was often the theatre of war—but the English, Germans, and Dutch even surpassed the inhabitants of Cambria in their love and veneration for him. At such times, he gathered the wretched into his residence and entertained them; for his known goodness had surrounded him with a power which even contending armies could not resist; and the consequence was, that his dwellings were safe, even when town and villages were lying in smoking ruins around him. The following is an instance of his great kindness: He observed one day, that a peasant, who had been driven from his home, and to whom Fenelon had given shelter, ate nothing. He enquired the reason. "Alas! my lord," said the poor man, "in making my escape from my cottage, I had not time to bring off my cow, which was the support of my family. The enemy will drive her away, and I shall never find another so good." Fenelon, availing himself of his privilege of safe conduct, immediately set out, accompanied by a single servant, and drove her back himself to the peasant. By thus walking according to the law of overcoming evil with good, he gained the affection of all. The peasantry loved him as their father—and, long after his death, their tears would flow when they said, "There is the chair on which our good Archbishop used to sit in the midst of us; we shall see him no more." What a crown of unfading glory the law of love gave man.

LOVE OF GOD.

The love of God is the truest key of knowledge according to that sublime aphorism of a great man. "The love of God is the light of the soul. It brightens the soul." It brightens the understanding as well as warms the affections; clears the head as well as enlarges the heart; and give to the soul an open and clear view of the greatest and noblest truths, in nature. It is the best teacher and instructor in theory, the best expositor of scriptures; the best resolver of doubts; the best distinguisher of the will of God; the best decider of cases of conscience; the best moderator and composer of disputes and controversies in religion; and in one word, as "the fear of God is the beginning," so the love of God is the perfection and accomplishment "of wisdom."

EDUCATION OF FARMERS' DAUGHTERS.

In the families of many farmers there are too many unprofitable hands. In the changes which, since the introduction of extensive manufactories of cotton and woolen among us, have taken place in our habits of domestic labor, some of the internal resources of the farmer have been dried up, and new occasions of expenditure introduced. I cannot better illustrate this matter than by a recurrence to a conversation which I had with one of the most respectable farmers in this country. "Sir," said he to me, "I am a widower, and have only one daughter at home. I have gone to the utmost extent of my limited means for her education. She is a good scholar, and has everywhere stood high in her classes, and acquitted herself to the satisfaction of her teachers. She is expert in all the common branches of education. She reads Latin and French; she understands mineralogy and botany; and I can show you with pleasure some of her fine needle work, embroidery and drawings. In the loss of her mother, she is my whole dependence; but instead of waiting upon me, I am obliged to hire a servant to wait upon her. I want her to take charge of my dairy, but she cannot think of milking; and as her mother was anxious that her child should be saved from all hardship—for she used to say the poor girl would have enough of that by and by—she never allowed her to share in her labor; and therefore she knows no more of the care of the dairy, or indeed of housekeeping, than any city milliner; so that in fact I have sold all my cows but one. This cow supplies us with what milk we want, but I buy my butter and cheese. I told her a few days since that my stockings were worn out and that I had a good deal of wool in the chamber which I wished she would card and spin. Her reply was in a tone of unaffected surprise, 'Why, father! no young lady does that; and besides, it is so much easier to send it to the mill and have it carded there.' 'Well,' I continued, 'you will knit the stockings, if I get the wool spun?' 'Why, no, father! mother never taught me how to knit, because she said it would interfere with my lessons; and then if I knew, it would take a great deal of time, and be much cheaper to buy the stockings at the store.'"

This incident illustrates perfectly the condition of many a farmer's family, and exhibits a serious drawback upon his property, and a great impediment to his success. The false notions that prevail among us in regard to labor, create a distaste for it: and the fact that, if the time required to be employed on many articles of household manufacture be reckoned at its ordinary value, the cost of making many articles of clothing would exceed that for which they could be purchased at the store, is deemed a sufficient reason for abandoning their production at home. In many cases, however, the time is turned to no account, but absolutely squandered. But the clothing, if not made, must be bought; and they who might produce it, must be sustained at an equal expense, whether they are at work or are idle.—Fourth Annual Report American Central Board of Education.

FALL WORK.

Cattle yards and Cattle—Haul into your yards a full supply of road scrapings, marsh mud, peat, mould and leaves from the woods, and whatever other perishable substances you can collect,—spread the whole over, taking care to have the outer edges higher than the centre. As soon as your pastures may become scant, confine your cattle in your yards of a night, taking care to feed them with some good succulent provender. It should be a main object with every farmer to have comfortable sheds or stables provided for his cattle, as by being kept dry and warm during the inclement weather of winter, much less food will answer.

Orchards.—As soon as your apples are gathered, prepare the following mixture and give your trees a painting—take in the proportion of 2 gallons of soft soap, 1 lb. of flour of suphur, and 1 lb. of Scotch snuff, mix the whole together, and apply it to the body and roots of trees above ground. This will not only destroy the eggs of inscets, but prevent injury from mice and rabbits.

Transplanting Orchards.—So soon as the leaves fall will be the time to plant out your orchard. In the selection of kinds be careful to get the best varieties and to buy from some well established responsible nursery man, in whose honesty you can confide Grounds intended for orchards should if possible, be ploughed twice, the second ploughing to be accompanied by the subsoil plough.

Working Horses, Mules and Oxen.—As the pastures no longer afford a full bite, let these valuable creatures be housed, well fed, and cared for. Animals that work should always receive generous treatment.

Ditching and Draining.—The time is favorable for these operations, and all who have lands which are too wet ordinarily for healthful culture, should go to work and have them forthwith ditched and drained. By so doing, the texture of such soils will be changed, and their capacity for production increased from 30 to 50 per cent, according to the degree of their present wetness.

Sheep.—If you have not already provided yourself with good covered folds for your sheep, do so at once. Sheep which are kept dry and warm will subsist upon one third less provender and yield much better fleeces than if suffered to endure the winter's frosts and snows unprotected.

Buckwheat.—Harvest your Buckwheat—as soon as dry thresh out the grain, and carefully put away the straw, adding a peck of salt to each ton; it will make excellent provender.

Out-houses of all kinds.—Let these be cleaned and white-washed.

Fall ploughing.—Stiff clays are always the better for fall ploughing, provided the ground is not wet when ploughed.

Corn Stalks.—Save these for provender for your cattle, if cut into short pieces and steamed, they are as good as clover hay for cattle.

Roots of all kinds.—Gather and put away these before the frost has a chance of injuring them.

Fences, Gates and Barns.—Submit these to close examination and thorough repairs.

[American Farmer.

"MORT! MORE MORT!"—Mr. ———, a mason by trade, having worked hard all the week, was disposed, while at church on Sunday, to refresh himself by a snooze. He had kept awake till the preacher had progressed some in his sermon, when he fell into a sound sleep, and dreaming in his sophorific obliviousness that he was about his work, he cried out, "Mort! more Mort!" The effect upon the congregation may be imagined. THE OFFICE OF SCHOOLMASTER.

FROM THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ZSCHOKKE.

It was with a real feeling of inspiration, that I entered upon the career of a school master, to me so venerable, in which I hope to become the herald of a noble era. Whoever nature herself has ordained for the instruction of youth, whoever feels himself willing to encounter, for the sake of the calling, thanklessness, contempt, and mortification, to him the dust of the schoolroom will be the noblest halo of glory. It was not, however, such considerations as these, it was the sight of my pupils themselves, which most roused in me the energy of zeal. I saw in them the repetition of my orphan childhood, for these children, transplanted into a foreign air, far from the familiar faces of home, among preceptors and tutors, instead of fathers and mothers, were almost orphans. The most perfect schools, academies and seminaries, are, after all, but necessary evils, miserable substitutes for a parental home. It is a very unnatural condition for children to be deprived of the little care and pleasures of comfort, sympathy, and confidence of domestic life. On this very account, I clung with the warmest affection to my adopted children. I pitied my own childhood in them, and easily became their playmate, their confident, the inventor of all their sports and plans, the guide of all their walks and excursions, the protecting genius of their busy and leisure hours.

MODES OF SALUTATION.—Greenlanders have none, and laugh at the idea of one person being inferior to another. Islanders near the Phillippines take a person's hand or foot and rub it over their face. Laplanders apply their nose strongly against the person they salute. In New Guinea, they place leaves upon the heads of those they salute. In the Straits of the Sound, they raise the left foot to the person they salute, passing it gently over the right leg, and thence over the face. The inhabitants of the Phillippines bend very low, placing their hands on their cheeks, and raise one foot in the air, with the knee bent. An Ethiopian takes the robe of another, and ties it about himself so as to leave his friend almost naked. The Japanese take off a slipper. Two negro kings on the coast of Africa salute by snapping the middle finger three times. The inhabitants of Carmene, when they would show a particular attachment, open a vein and present their blood to their friend as a beverage. If the Chinese meet after a long separation, they fall on their knees, bend their face to the ground two or three times, and use many other affected modes. They have also a kind of ritual, or academy of compliments, by which they regulate the number of bows, geneflexions, and words to be spoken on any occasion. Ambassadors are said to practice these ceremonies forty days before they appear at court.

TARTAR MARRIAGES.—A writer of the Cincinnati Chronicle says, in describing the peculiarities of the marriage ceremony in Tartary, that the preliminaries being settled, the nuptials are celebrated in the following manner. The bride, covered with a veil having hid herself for some time behind a screen in the room, comes forth and walks around with a grave and solemn gait, while some young girls bring her bread and honey; the bridegroom quickly enters, kisses her and exchanges rings, after which she bears the name of betrothed girl. She then returns behind the screen, when the married women put on the cap of a matron, which is much handsomer, and is supposed to be more fascinating than that which she wore before the betrothed. In the evening, when the bride and bridegroom are about retiring, the lady is obliged to pull off her husband's boots as a sign of her subjection to his will! If the husband becomes dissatisfied with his wife, he needs but to tear off her cap of a matron, and the sign is a complete divorce. The lady immediately returns to her father's house, where she is received with kindness. From this it appears that it is much easier to get rid of than catch a Tartar!

EDUCATING THE MASSES.—The idea of instructing and elevating the masses belongs to modern times; it opens up new doctrines to the world. The ancient legislators would not have comprehended it; the legislators of the middle ages would only have seen in it an impiety, as they considered that knowledge ought to belong only to the church; consequently, no people, up to the present time, has produced all that it might produce—I do not say in wisdom or in virtue, but merely in intelligence. This is a sublime spectacle which was wanting on the earth, and which is now preparing for future generations.

SENSIBLE ADVICE.—Some lady thus sensibly advises her sex:—The young married woman who would continue to exercise the same influence over the husband, that she formerly did over the lover, must make use of similar means. Too many young women imagine that they need no longer study to please when they have secured the husband; that they need no longer wear a happy smile on his approach, nor study neatness and taste in their daily apparel, but on the contrary meet him at every turn with a peevish fretfulness, and with apparel in disorder and neglect. Think on these things, young women, and by acting on them you will secure happiness to yourselves as well as to your husbands; you will never regret it.

AMERICAN WOMEN.—De Tocqueville, in his recent work, speaking of American women, says:—As for myself I do not hesitate to avow, that, although the women of the United States are confined within the narrow circle of domestic life, and their situation is, in some respects, one of extreme dependence, I have no where seen women occupying a loftier position; and if I were asked, now I am drawing to a close of this work, in which I have spoken of so many things done by the Americans, to what the singular prosperity and growing strength of that people ought to be attributed, I would reply—to the superiority of their women.

Robinson describes a fruit which grows on the shores of the Dead Sea, as resembling externally a large smooth apple or orange, fair and delicious to the eye, and soft to the touch; but on being pressed or struck, it explodes with a puff, like a bladder or puff-ball, leaving in the hand only the shreds of the rind and a few fibres. So it is with many specious theories, pompously and confidently proposed, each as the sovereign panacea of the world's ills. [Ohio Ob.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
IRA SAYLES, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics
GURDON EVANS, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. HARTSHORN, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. STILLMAN, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. MAXSON, Preceptress, Instructress in French. Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense. SAMUEL RUSSELL,

SOUTHERN ABYSSINIA—NO. 3.

Travels in Southern Abyssinia, through the country of Adal to the Kingdom of Shoa, during the years 1842 and 1843. By CHARLES JOHNSTON, M. R. C. S.

ABYSSINIA IS AN IMPORTANT FIELD FOR CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

All the eastern coast of Africa, and the interior nations included within the tropics, to the western coast, are known to have a numerous population, without the saving knowledge of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, and now without a single evangelical missionary to open up to them the knowledge of the way of life. No other large portion of the world is at the present day so much passed by as this, no man caring for their souls. Abyssinia, at the present, has only a traditional Christianity, and is resting under a wretched weight of dark superstition. She has within herself, however, some important elements for moral renovation. Her ancient language, the Geez, or old Ethiopic, is the parent language of a number of modern tongues, spoken by a large part of that benighted population whose ancestors formed part of the ancient Empire. Of this language, Mr. Johnston says:—"The Geez character, as a syllabic alphabet, is the most correct of any with which I am acquainted, and the best suited for conveying exact sounds."

In this language the sacred Scriptures exist in parchment manuscript, a portion of which has been printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the English Church Missionary Society, which would be a great assistance to the missionary scholar who should engage in the work of rendering them into modern languages. In this he would be farther assisted by the possession of Ludolp's Grammar and Lexicon of the ancient language in Latin, and a grammar and dictionary of the modern language in English, with the four gospels printed in Amharic—all to be had in London. And such is the affinity between the modern languages, that Mr. Johnston found a man from Berberaah, on the banks of the Nile, in Upper Egypt, who made himself perfectly understood in the Affuh language spoken by the Dankalli tribes around Tajoura.

South and west of Abyssinia, there are dwelling numerous distinct kingdoms, who are supposed, from their physiological characteristics, to be all of one race, which is called the Galla, and who were all originally pagans; but a portion of them are now Christians, and a part Mahommedans. Of these Mr. Johnston says:—

"One of the most remarkable traits of the Galla people is, the facility with which they appear to adopt the religious creeds of their neighbors. . . . It is very interesting, remark how readily the Galla people adapt their natural habits to the circumstances in which they are placed. . . . . This moral principle, however, whatever it may be, seems to promise an abundant harvest of converts to the zealous and intelligent missionary, who shall first appear as the apostle of Christianity among them."

We have been accustomed to regard the Mahommedan part of the world as almost hopelessly opposed to Christian efforts; but Mr. Johnston appears to think, that if Christianity were presented to them in its primitive simplicity, they would be a ready and willing people to receive it. He derives the origin of these people from countries farther in the interior; and of the pagan part of them, he says:—

"They worship a limited number of principal deities. Waak however, appears to be the supreme God, who made the world, and every inferior deity. Waak has no visible representative, but is every where, and exists in every thing. 'Waak segallo,' (God knows,) invariably expresses ignorance of a fact, and the best definition of him I could ever get from the most informed Galla; I ever conversed with upon the subject was, that he was the unknown God. Waak is, I think, the only deity proper to the Galla people. . . . They have derived some knowledge of one or two of the principal saints worshiped by the Greek Church, (Abyssinian,) and according to their situation with respect to the Christians of Abyssinia or the pagans of Zingera, so is their religion modified by the errors or absurdities of their neighbors."

In connection with this view of the circumstances of the interior nations of Eastern Africa, Mr. Johnston gives information and conjectures of the deepest interest to ourselves in connection with our projected mission.

Major Harris supposed the river Gibbee, which rises northwest of Shoa, flowed into the Ghocab; but Mr. Johnston obtained very satisfactory information which proves it to be a branch of the Nile, and he has so laid it down on a map accompanying these volumes. The Ghocab he identifies with the Whabbee, which, as Major Harris represents, enters the Indian Ocean at Juba, under the equator; or, otherwise, he says it must be the great southern river that rises four or five degrees southwest of Shoa, and which flows into the Indian Ocean by many mouths about three degrees south of the equator; the principal of which appears to be that at Lamoor. This is called the Kalli.

"No traveler gives any account of this river, though certainly it is a most important one in connection with our future intercourse with the Highlands of Abyssinia. It is, as its name, Kalli, implies, a river of the black people, as the Assabi, or Zebbee, of the table land above, belongs exclusively to the country of a red race. The Portugese name, Kil limancy, is merely the addi ion of a word, signifying river in the Shankalli language, to the original Arian term Kalli. The sources of this river are upon the southern scarp of the Abyssinian table land, in the same manner as the tributaries of the Hawash arise upon the eastern border. . . . . A considerable degree of interest attaches itself to this river, and I could wish to see the attention of our geographers and politicians directed to its examination. All the red Abyssinian slaves, after a month's journey through the country, about the upper part of its course, are then embarked and carried down this river to Lamoor, to be carried away and disposed of in the Asiatic markets,

"There must, in fact, in this situation, be a most available road into the very centre of the continent of Africa, for I have seen Nubian slaves, who had been in the service of Zaid Zaid, Imaum of Zanzibar, that corroborated this statement respecting the transit of slaves across the table land of Abyssinia, from Sennaar to Lamoo on the Indian Ocean, and so to the market of Zanzibar.

"It is by this channel also, that Abashee colonies on the Malabar coast, of which Major Jervis has written some notices in a late volume of the 'Bombay Geographical Society's Journal,' are accredited. Those of the native Christians on the same coast whom I have seen myself, are decidedly of Abyssinian origin, and perhaps that religion may have been introduced into India by missionaries from that country. It was singular, that when an important and expensive political mission was about being sent into Abyssinia, some inquiries were not made respecting this southern route, along which a considerable intercourse at the present day exists between India and Abyssinia."

I suppose the Christians to whom Mr. Johnston here refers are the same of whom Dr. Buchanan speaks in his Christian Researches, where he says:—"It is probable that the Christian faith has been known in India since the times of the apostles; but we have authentic historical record for the following particular:—'When the Portuguese first arrived in India, they were agreeably surprised to find a hundred Christian churches on the coast of Malabar; but when they became acquainted with the purity and simplicity of their doctrine, they were offended.' They have preserved the Bible in its purity; and their doctrines are, as far as the author knows, the doctrines of the Bible. Besides, they maintain the solemn observance of Christian worship, throughout our Empire, on the seventh day; and have as many spires pointing to heaven among the Hindoos, as we ourselves."

Mr. Johnston's theory respecting their origin is that they are altogether Asiatic. We shall however keep this in mind, and hope for farther information respecting that people, whose faith and patience have been sorely tried in times past for keeping the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus.

These volumes throw before us wide and interesting fields of labor, and encourage us to expect that we shall soon find a field where our missionaries may enter upon the work of African regeneration with safety and success. If Shoa should be inaccessible by the Adal country, our own government have commercial relations with the Imaum of Muscat, whose colonial possessions extend to the very mouth of the Kalli river, which Mr. Johnston considers so important for a southern route into the interior of Africa; and at this time the United States Government has a consul resident at Zanzibar. We need only faith in God, and consecration to the work which our blessed Redeemer enjoined upon his people, and important stations will be open as fast as we are prepared to occupy them.

S. D.

GOLDSMITH IN LONDON.—Goldsmith's first residence in London, after his wanderings on the continent, was at a chemist's, Fishstreet Hill—he set up as a physician—could not live by it—accepted the ushership of a classical school at Peckenham, that he might have the means of subsistence—returned poor to London after a few months—contributed articles for the Monthly Review—rented a miserable lodging near the Old Bailey, the approach of which was by Break-Neck Stairs, where Bishop Percy visited him in a wretched room with one chair—there, as a bookseller's hack, he translated, compiled and edited, wrote prefaces and reviews, leading articles and squibs—his labors were incredible. Here he wrote the Essay on Polite Learning, and many other elegant and graceful things, which (as Bell justly remarks) have embalmed his memory forever in the grateful hearts of posterity. Years after this he became acquainted with Dr. Johnson and Sir Joshua Reynolds, and Edward Burke and Bishop Percy were his faithful friends. He soared at last into gay lodgings—gave suppers—and took some comfort. But bailiffs haunted him, small debts oppressed him, the fear of jail was ever before his eyes, his tailor's bills were as terrible as spectres to romance readers, and the innocent, gentle, playful, warm-hearted Oliver Goldsmith found a refuge in—"Death."

Were children accustomed from infancy to hear nothing but correct conversation, there would be but little need of their learning arbitrary rules of grammar—they would naturally speak and write correctly. Hence it is, that children of educated people are generally so much more easy and graceful in their conversation than the children of the uneducated. Our language, like our manners, is caught from those with whom we associate; and if we would have the young improve in this important part of education, we must be careful that they hear no vulgarism from us.

WATCHMAN! WHAT OF THE NIGHT?

"Watchman, tell us of the night,
What its signs of promise are?"

In yonder quiet dwelling, with vision bounded by the walls of a sick room, lies a Christian philanthropist. It is long since he has known active communion with the busy world. As the year is about to close, he looks out from the loop-hole of his retreat, and breathes the fervent inquiry, "Watchman, what of the night?" The murmuring of voices is heard in the distance, and a messengar approaches, saying, "Friend, of what wouldst thou gain intelligence? Dost thou inquire for the prosperity of Zion? Does thy heart linger by her fruitful fields, and abide by her desolate places?"

"Yea, thou hast judged rightly—first in my affections are the interests of Zion—dearest to my soul, loved more than all things earthly—

"If e'er my heart forget
Her welfare or her woe,
Let every joy this heart forsake,
And every grief o'erflow.
* * * * *
Mine the God whom she adores,
Her Redeemer too is mine."

Tell me of her conquests—acquaint me with her defeats and triumphs. I am nearing the celestial city. Angels beckon me hence. My home is on high. My friends and kindred, hopes and treasures, all are there. And ONE is there, who "saw me cast out in the open field of death," and as he looked, he healed and bade me live.—My faith apprehends him as the chiefest among ten thousand, the One altogether lovely. His love embraces a world—His offers of mercy are extended to the chief of sinners. Tell me, if thou knowest, who, during this waning year, hath believed his report? To whom has the arm of the Lord been revealed?"

Christian Pilgrim—would that I could gladden thee with a better report. But thou must know the truth. Far and wide 'Zion's hearths are desolate.' Her harps have been silent long. An enemy strong and mighty hath broken down her walls. Few of her sons and daughters wear untarnished, the livery of heaven. Few come to her solemn feasts. Few inquire at her altars the way of life. Dying men—those for whom Jesus groaned and bled, have turned from him in scorn, and hewn out to themselves broken cisterns that can hold no water.—There are weary and aching hearts, sad and care-worn visages, and scores with gay exterior, who rush for pleasures that continually elude pursuit, or grasp for wealth or fame, that whether attained or otherwise, plants deep the sting of disappointment; all, all reiterate the great truth that MAN IS A SINNER AND NEEDS A SAVIOUR; that nothing but to know God, and enjoy his presence, can satisfy the cravings of a deathless spirit. During the year the Death gate has been uplifted, and through it crowds have passed to endless bliss or woe. The watchman and their flocks have beheld this scene, and while some whose faith has enabled them to set a truer value upon things eternal, have grieved over mind thus lost for eternity, and exclaimed in the language of the prophet, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughters of my people," blood-guiltiness has stained the skirts of others, and marred their right and title to the tree of life, and an inheritance in the holy city.

But, in the midst of this moral darkness, God has not forsaken his disobedient and rebellious subjects. He has tried and proved, but he has not cast away his people. "Having loved his own which were in the world, he loves them unto the end." The year has been crowned with his goodness. Countless mercies from his hand have fallen like the drops of the morning, and to the eye of faith He has hung athwart the moral heavens, a bow of promise, beautiful as "the showery arch." The movements of his providence foretell a brighter day. The unchanging promises of his word indicate that retrogression among his chosen disciples, is not to be lasting—that the tide of death is to be rolled back—the prey delivered from the spoiler—the nations and kingdoms, possessions and talents of earth, are to be consecrated a willing offering to Him who shall reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet.

The moral enterprises of the day, report progress. Temperance is achieving new victories—pressing its way straight through the camp of its enemies, and though the wily foe still arrays his forces in the face of day, defeat is inevitable. The principles, the measures, and the laborers in this sacred cause, so far as they are right, command the conscience of the nation, and the co-operation of all the good—and so, although the wheels move more tardily, will it be in due time in relation to moral purity. Notwithstanding all that may be regarded as adverse, the records of the year prove conclusively that the cause is onward. The results of recent Legislative enactments in the states of Michigan, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Connecticut, are signs of promise. The increased list of petitions presented at the last session of the New York Legislature, the number and standing of the signers from the Metropolis, and other great centres of influence, indicate unequivocally, the rising tone of public sentiment.

The best portions of the secular and religious press are exerting a wide-spread and certain influence on this behalf. We learn by papers from Buffalo, Toronto, and elsewhere, that Grand Juries are moving in this matter. In some sections of the country the stronger sex are also coming to the rescue. A political paper from Syracuse, announces that 400 gentlemen of the place, (all voters,) have recently enrolled their names upon a moral reform pledge, requiring purity of heart and life, and united efforts to promote obedience to the laws of God. These too are signs of promise, for which the friends of reform may well thank God, and take courage.

Slavery—that direst scourge of virtue and humanity though seeking with eager haste to plant its iron hoof upon a broader territory, is nevertheless writhing amid its chains, and the public heart is beating with deeper and still deeper throes for the down-trodden and the dumb, The day of its doom is approaching. The God of the oppressed has heard their cry, and when he shall arise to judgment who shall contend with him?

The utterances of the Tract, Bible, and Missionary enterprises—the cause of education, and every kindred effort are "peace on earth, and good will to man"—and if the lever of prayer, and strong faith in God, shall guide and control them, each and all will be as ministering spirtis to the true interests of Zion, and though assailed by opposition, will continue their blessed influences until the welcome echo shall resound from land to land—

"Traveler! Lo, the Prince of Peace, Lo, the Son of God is come."

Friend—thou mayst live, or die, with the peace of God ruling in thy soul, for Zion's King shall surely live to bring deliverance to his people. "The government is upon his shoulders." He will work and none shall hinder, until he shall have finished the superstructure that his hand is rearing, and placed upon it "the top-stone, with shoutings of grace, grace unto it."

Adv. Moral Ref.

From the Youth's Monthly Visitor.

WHEN SHALL WE PRAY?

Pray at the early dawn,
When the dew is on the flowers,
And offer to Heaven as incense pure,
The morning's rosy hours.
Pray when the heart is calm and free,
And the fetters of earth are cast from thee.

Pray at the noontide hour,
'Midst the weary toils of life—
So shalt thou gather strength and power
To succor thee in the strife.
Pray when thy burden is hardest to bear,
And thy heart is throbbing with anxious care.

Bend low in the dewy eye,
And pour out thy spirit in prayer,
And the voice that spake to the troubled sea,
Shall whisper sweet comfort there.
The tempest of passion shall sink to rest,
And the sunlight of heaven illumine thy breast.

Pray when thy cup of joy
Is sparkling to the brim;
Pray when with base alloy
The gold of life is dim.
Prayer shall win thee a treasure untold;
Better than treasures of silver or gold.

'Mid sunshine and shadow,
'Mid pleasure and gloom,
In the morning of life,
On the verge of the tomb—
Pray, ever pray, and good angels beside thee,
Shall watch o'er and shield from the ills that betide thee.

AN ALLEGORY.

From Beecher's "Lectures to Young Men."

We are repeatodly warned against the strange woman's HOUSE.

There is no vice like licentiousness, to delude with the most fascinating proffers of delight, and fulfil the promise with the most loathsome experience. All vices at the beginning are silver-tongued, but none so impassioned as this. All vices in the end cheat their dupes, but none with such overwhelming disaster as licentiousness. I shall describe by an allegory, its specious seductions, its plausible promises, its apparent innocence, its delusive safety, its deceptive joys,—their change, their sting, their flight, their misery, and the victim's ruin.

Her HOUSE has been cunningly planned by an EVIL ARCHITECT to attract and please the attention. It stands in a vast garden full of enchanting objects. It shines in glowing colors, and seems full of peace and full of pleasure. All the signs are of unbounded enjoyment—safe, if not innocent. Though every beam is rotten, and the house is the house of death, and in it are all the vicissitudes of infernal misery; yet, to the young it appears a palace of delight. They will not believe that death can lurk behind so brilliant a fabric. Those who are within, look out and pine to return: and those who are without, look in and pine to enter. Such is the mastery of deluding sin.

That part of the garden which borders on the highway of innocence is carefully planted. There is not a poison-weed, nor thorn, nor thistle there. Ten thousand flowers bloom, and waft a thousand odors. A victim cautiously inspects it; but it has been too carefully patterned upon innocency to be easily detected. This outer garden is innocent;—innocence is the lure to wile you from the path into her grounds;—innocence is the bait of that trap by which she has secured all her victims. At the gate stands a comely porter, saying blandly: Whoso is simple let him turn in hither. Will the youth enter? Will he seek her house? To himself he says, "I will enter only to see the garden,—its fruits, its flowers, its birds, its arbors, its warbling flowers!" He is resolved in virtue. He seeks wisdom, not pleasure!—Dupe! you are deceived already; and this is your first lesson of wisdom. He passes, and the porter leers behind him! He is within an Enchanter's garden! Can he now return, if he wishes?—he will not wish to return, until it is too late. He ranges the outer garden near to the highway, thinking as he walks: "How foolishly have I been alarmed at pious lies about this beautiful place! I heard it was Hell: I find it is Paradise!"

Emboldened by the innocency of his first steps, he explores the garden further from the road. The flowers grow richer; their odors exhilarate; the very fruit breathes perfume like flowers; and birds seem intoxicated with delight among the fragrant shrubs and loaded trees. Soft and silvery music steals along the air. "Are angels singing?—Oh! fool that I was, to fear this place; it is all the heaven I need! Ridiculous priest, to tell me that death was here, where all is beauty, fragrance, and melody! Surely, death never lurked in so gorgeous apparel as this! Death is grim, and hideous!" He has come near to the strange woman's HOUSE. If it was beautiful from afar, it is celestial now; for his eyes are bewitched with magic. When our passions enchant us, how beautiful is the way to death! In every window are sights of pleasure; from every opening, issue sounds of joy—the lute, the harp, bounding feet, and echoing laughter. Nymphs have descried this Pilgrim of temptation;—they smile and beckon. Where are his resolutions now? This is the virtuous youth who came to observe! He has already seen too much! but he will see more; he will taste, feel, regret, weep, wail, die! The most beautiful nymph that eye ever rested on, approaches with decent guise and modest gestures, to give him hospitable welcome. For a moment he recalls his home, his mother, his sister-circle; but they seem far-away, dim, powerless! Into his ear the beautiful herald pours the sweetest sounds of love: "you are welcome here, and worthy! You have early wisdom, to break the grounds of superstition, and to seek these grounds where summer never ceases, and sorrow never comes! Hail! and welcome to the House of pleasure!" There seemed to be a response to these words; the house, the trees, and the very air, seemed to echo, "Hail! and welcome!" In the stillness which followed, had the victim been less intoxicated, he might have heard a clear and solemn voice which seemed to fall straight down from heaven: COME NOT NIGH THE DOOR OF HER HOUSE. HER HOUSE IS THE WAY TO HELL, GOING DOWN TO THE CHAMBERS OF DEATH!

It is too late! He has gone in,—who shall never return. He goeth after her straitway as an ox goeth to the slaughter; or as a fool to the correction of the stocks . . . and knoweth not that it is for his life.

Enter with me, in imagination, the strange woman's HOUSE—where, God grant you may never enter in any other way. There are five wards—Pleasure, Satiety, Discovery, Disease, and Death.

Ward of Pleasure.—The eye is dazzled with the magnificence of its apparel,—elastic velvet, glossy silks, burnished satin, crimson drapery, plushy carpets. Exquisite pictures glow upon the walls, carved marble adorns every niche. The inmates are deceived by these lying shows; they dance, they sing; with beaming eyes they utter softest strains of flattery and graceful compliment. They partake the amorous wine, and the repast which loads the table. They eat, they drink, they are blithe and merry. Surely, they should be; for after this brief hour, they shall never know purity nor joy again! For this moment's revelry, they are selling heaven! The strange woman walks among her guests in all her charms; fans the flame of joy, scatters grateful odors, and urges on the fatal revelry. As her poisoned wine is quaffed, and the gay creatures begin to reel, the torches wane and cast but a twilight. One by one, the guests grow somnolent; and at length, they all repose. Their cup is exhausted, their pleasure is forever over, life has exhaled to an essence, and that is consumed! While they sleep, servitors, practised to the work, remove them all to another Ward.

Ward of Satiety.—Here reigns a bewildering twilight through which can hardly be discerned the wearied inmates, yet sluggish upon their couches. Overflushed with dance, sated with wine and fruit, a fitful drowsiness vexes them. They wake, to crave; they taste, to loathe; they sleep, to dream; they wake again from unquiet visions. They long for the sharp taste of pleasure, so grateful yesterday. Again they sink, repining, to sleep; by starts, they rouse at an ominous dream; by starts, they hear strange cries! The fruit burns and torments; the wine shoots sharp pains through their pulse. Strange wonder fills them. They remember the recent joy, as a reveller in the morning thinks of his midnight madness. The glowing garden and the banquet now seem all stripped and gloomy. They meditate return; pensively they long for their native spot! At sleepless moments, mighty resolutions form,—substantial as a dream. Memory grows dark. Hope will not shine. The past is not pleasant; the present is wearisome; and the future gloomy.

The Ward of Discovery.—In the third ward no deception remains. The floors are bare; the naked walls drip filth; the air is poisonous with sickly fumes, and echoes with mirth concealing hideous misery. None supposes that he has been happy. The past seems like the dream of the miser, who gathers gold spilled like rain upon the road, and wakes, clutching his bed, and crying "where is it?" On your right hand, as you enter, close by the door, is a group of fierce felons in deep drink with drugged liquor. With red and swoln faces, or white and thin; or scarred with ghastly corruption; with scowling brows, baleful eyes, bloated lips and demoniac grins;—in person all uncleanly, in morals all debauched, in peace, bankrupt—the desperate wretches wrangle one with the other, swearing bitter oaths, and heaping reproaches each upon each! Around the room you see miserable creatures unappareled, or dressed in rags, sobbing and moaning. That one who gazes out at the window, calling for her mother and weeping, was right tenderly and purely bred. She has been baptized twice,—once to God, and once to the Devil. She sought this place in the very vestments of God's house. "Call not on thy mother! she is a saint in Heaven, and cannot hear thee!" Yet, all night long she dreams of home, and childhood, and wakes to sigh and weep; and between her sobs, she cries "mother! mother!"

Yonder is a youth, once a servant at God's altar. His hair hangs tangled and torn; his eyes are bloodshot; his face is livid; his fist is clenched. All the day, he wanders up and down, cursing sometimes himself, and sometimes the wretch that brought him hither; and when he sleeps, he dreams of Hell; and then he wakes to feel all he dreamed. This is the Ward of reality. All know why the first rooms looked so gay—they were enchanted! It was enchanted wine they drank; and enchanted fruit they ate; now they know the pain of fatal food in every limb!

Ward of Disease.—Ye that look wistfully at the pleasant front of this terrific house, come with me now, and look long into the interior of this Ward; for here are the seeds of sin in their full harvest form! We are in a lazar-room; its air oppresses every sense; its sights confound our thoughts; its sounds pierce our ear; its stench repels us: it is full of diseases. Here a shuddering wretch is clawing at his breast, to tear away that worm which gnaws his heart. By him is another, whose limbs are dropping from his ghastly trunk. Next, swelters another in reeking filth; his eyes rolling in bony sockets, every breath a pang, and every pang a groan. But yonder, on a pile of rags, lies one whose yells of frantic agony appall every ear. Clutching his rags with spasmodic grasp, his swoln tongue lolling from a blackened mouth, his bloodshot eyes glaring and rolling, he shrieks oaths: now blaspheming God, and now imploring him. He hoots and shouts, and shakes his grisly head from side to side, cursing or praying; now calling death, and then, as if driving away fiends, yelling, avaunt! avaunt!

Another has been ridden by pain, until he can no longer shriek; but lies foaming and grinding his teeth, and clenches his bony hands, until the nails pierce the palm—though there is no blood there to issue out—trembling all the time with the shudders and chills of utter agony. The happiest wretch in all this Ward, is an Idiot;—dropsical, distorted, and moping; all day he wags his head, and chatters, and laughs, and bites his nails; then he will sit for hours motionless, with open jaw, and glassy eye fixed on vacancy. In this Ward are huddled all the diseases of PLEASURE. This is the torture-room of the strange woman's House, and it excels the inquisition. The wheel, the rack, the bed of knives, the roasting fire, the brazen room slowly heated, the slivers driven under the nails, the hot pincers,—what are these to the agonies of the last days of licentious vice? Hundreds of rotting wretches would change their couch of torment in the strange woman's House, for the gloomiest terror of the inquisition, and profit by the change. Nature herself becomes the tormentor. Nature, long trespassed on and abused, at length casts down the wretch; searches every vein, makes a road of every nerve for the scorching feet of pain to travel on, pulls at every muscle, breaks in the breast, builds fires in the brain, eats out the skin, and casts living coals of torment on the heart. What are hot pincers to the envenomed claws of disease? What is it to be put into a pit of snakes and slimy toads, and feel their cold coil or piercing fang, to the creeping of a whole body of vipers!—where every nerve is a viper, and every vein a viper, and every muscle a serpent; and the whole body, in all its parts, coils and twists upon itself in unimaginable anguish? I tell you, there is no inquisition so bad as that which the Doctor looks upon! Young man! I can show you in this Ward worse pangs than ever a savage produced at the stake!—than ever a tyrant wrung out by engines of torment!—than ever an Inquisitor devised! Every year, in every town, die wretches scalded and scorched with agony. Were the sum of all the pain that comes with the last stages of vice collected, it would rend the very heavens with its outcry; would shake the earth; would even blanch the cheek of Infatuation! Ye that are listening in the garden of this strange woman, among her cheating flowers; ye that are dancing in her halls in the first Ward, come hither; look upon her fourth Ward—its vomited blood, its sores and fiery blotches, its purient sweat, its dissolving ichor, and rotten bones! Stop, young man! You turn your head from this ghastly room; and yet, stop!—and stop soon, or thou shalt lie here! Mark the solemn signals of thy passage! Thou hast had already enough of warnings in thy cheek, in thy bosom, in thy pangs of premonition!

But ah! every one of you who are dancing with the covered paces of death, in the strange woman's first hall, let me break your spell; for now I shall open the doors of the last Ward. Look!—Listen!—Witness your own end, unless you take quickly a warning!

Ward of Death.—No longer does the incarnate wretch pretend to conceal her cruelty. She thrusts—aye! as if they were dirt—she shovels out the wretches. Some fall headlong through the rotten floor,—a long fall to a fiery bottom. The floor trembles to deep thunders which roll below. Here and there, jets of flame spout up, and give a lurid light to the murky hall. Some would fain escape; and flying across the treacherous floor, which man never safely passed, they go, through pitfalls and treacherous traps, with hideous outcries and astounding yells, to perdition! Fiends laugh! The infernal laugh, the cry of agony, the thunders of damnation, shake the very roof and echo from wall to wall.

Oh! that the young might see the end of vice before they see the beginning! I know that you shrink from this picture; but your safety requires that you should look long into the Ward of Death, that fear may supply strength to your virtue. See the blood oozing from the wall, the fiery hands which pluck the wretches down, the light of hell gleaming through, and hear its roar as of a distant ocean chafed with storms. Will you sprinkle the wall with your blood?—will you feed those flames with your flesh?—will you add your voice to those thundering wails?—will you go down a prey through the fiery floor of the chamber of death? Believe then the word of God: Her house is the way to Hell, going down to the chambers of death, . . . avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away!

I have described the strange woman's House in strong language, and it needed it. If your taste shrinks from the description, so does mine. Hell, and all the ways to Hell, when we pierce the cheating disguises and see the truth, are terrible and trying to behold; and if men would not walk there, neither would we pursue their steps, to sound the alarm, and gather back whom we can.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 18, 1845.

LAW AND GOSPEL.

NUMBER SIX.

Since the fourth commandment specifies, in language perfectly free from ambiguity, a particular day as the one, which God would have us to keep holy; there must be some other end of the sabbatic institution besides bodily rest and spiritual refreshment. For, for these purposes, one day would answer as well as another. It would be desirable, however, that some authority should fix the day, in order to prevent that confusion in society, which would be sure to obtain, if it were submitted to conventional arrangement. The endless variety of opinions among men; the different casts of their minds, by reason of which one day would appear more illustrious to one class on account of some event that had happened on it, and another day more illustrious to another class, on account of some other event;—would, considering the obstinacy with which human nature adheres to a favorite dogma, forever prevent uniformity. Hence, if there were no other reason, why the law should specify the day, this would be sufficient; for God is not the author of confusion, but of peace.

But in giving the Sabbath God had a more important end in view, than simply the prevention of confusion; for even this may sometimes be necessary. Matt. 10: 34. He had an end similar to that which he had in enjoining Baptism, the Lord's Supper, the Passover, the Feast of Tabernacles, or any other commemorative institution. It was to establish a perpetual MEMORIAL of his wisdom, power, and goodness, as displayed in the work of CREATION. Such being the end of the Sabbath, it could not be fixed on any other day than the seventh day of the week. But before proceeding to prove this, it may be well to show the importance of observing such a memorial.

Its importance is evinced by the argument it yields in favor of the reality and truth of Natural Religion. By Natural Religion we mean that system of religion, of which the Moral Law is an exact transcript; which, as we have already seen, lies in a recognition of God as our Creator, and grows out of the relation, which we bear to him as his creatures.

But how does the Sabbath afford an argument for Natural Religion? It is like a monument, upon which is inscribed the fact, that Jehovah made the world in six days, and rested on the seventh. Hence it bears witness to the great fact, which lies at the bottom of all religion. But as the force of the argument from monumental or commemorative institutions is not obvious to every one, we will enlarge upon it a little.

Suppose a foreigner, landing on our shores at Boston, should, on making his excursions to survey the country, come into the vicinity of Bunker's Hill. He beholds a lofty column, and wonders what it is. He approaches, and begins to read the inscription; from which he learns, that a memorable conflict took place there between the soldiers of Great Britain and the citizens of this land, with which commenced the rupture, that finally led to the entire separation of these colonies from the mother country. Does that man doubt, for a moment, the truth of the fact thus brought before him? Let it be supposed that he never read the fact before in books, and that no living witness is at hand to corroborate it; so that he has no opportunity to obtain any other proof of it, than what is there before his eyes. Nevertheless he does not doubt. He reasons in this way; that had not the event really taken place as there recorded, the monument could not have been erected. A whole community could never be brought to unite in erecting such a lasting testimony to a downright falsehood. Or, should an individual erect it, they would not suffer it to stand. The very boys of the streets would demolish it. He is therefore firmly convinced, that the event did actually transpire. He wants no better evidence.

Commemorative institutions are of a like nature with monuments; they afford the same kind of evidence. The yearly celebration of the fourth of July is, in itself, an evidence of the truth of the fact which gave rise to it. It speaks out the great fact, that the United Colonies of this country did, on the fourth of July, 1776, declare themselves free and independent states. Should some one, a hundred or a thousand years hence, start a doubt whether such an event ever occurred, all that would be necessary by way of removing the doubt, would be to show, that every year this celebration had been kept up. It could not have originated from nothing. There must have been some event at the bottom of it; and that event must have been of a nature congenial with the ceremonies, which have ever since distinguished it.

Now observe the wisdom of God in the appointment of commemorative institutions. They are not given, as some think, merely to assist the mind in the comprehension of spiritual things, nor as mere forms by which to express our allegiance to God; but to serve as so many strong and invulnerable arguments for the authenticity of revelation. In this view it appears to us, that those who reject the ordinances, are doing much to impair the evidence, by which the Book of God is authenticated.

Take the ordinances of the Lord's Supper and Baptism by way of illustrating our idea. The former commemorates the death of Christ; the latter his burial and resurrection. These are the great facts, on which the whole scheme of Christianity is built. We know, that these ordinances are now celebrated by Christians; we know, that they have been so celebrated from our earliest recollection. The testimony of our fathers proves, that they were celebrated by the generation immediately preceding us. If we continue to trace it back, history shows that they have been continually observed by each generation of Christians from the resurrection of their Master downward. Now as these ordinances could not have originated from nothing, and must have originated in some circumstances congenial with the formalities, which have always distinguished them, we hence arrive at the conclusion, that Jesus Christ did give his flesh for the life of the world—that he did pour out his blood for his people—that he was actually buried—and that he did rise again from the grave. Thus these ordinances confirm the truth of Christianity. They are not intended to assist the mind to understand, that by the death and resurrection of Christ the soul is saved; for that is made abundantly clear in other ways. Nor are they intended as mere forms by which we shall confess allegiance to our God; otherwise it were of little importance what particular form were used; and, as the cant expression is with regard to baptism, "a drop is as good as a fountain." But they are intended to hold up to view before the world the evidence for Christianity, by constantly bearing witness to the great facts on which it is built.

In like manner the Passover, together with the other commemorative institutions of the Old Testament, attests the authenticity of Judaism. Not a period in the whole history of the Hebrews can be found, that this institution was not regarded. In every generation their children were asking, "What mean ye by this service?" Even children knew that it meant something, and their inquiries always led to a recital of the history of their great deliverance, and their separation as a holy nation to the Lord.

But where is the ordinance, that attests the truth of Natural Religion? Where is that monumental institution, upon which is inscribed the great fact, that Jehovah created the world in six days and rested on the seventh?—that ordinance which bears witness against Atheism, by declaring that the world and they that are therein sprang not into existence by chance?—which testifies against Idolatry, by declaring that Jehovah made all things himself, and called not to his aid any of the false gods of the heathen—where is it? Judaism had its ceremonies;—Christianity has its ordinances; but Natural Religion—that religion which is developed in the Moral Law—has it nothing to attest its authenticity? Infidelity abounds; Paganism covers more than four-fifths of the earth; and yet, according to fashionable theology, Christians must not keep up the institution which speaks out against these desolating errors! Nay, they must even give vantage ground to infidelity by nicknaming the institution, and with a sanctimonious scowl denouncing those who keep it as Judaizers. "Let us have nothing in common with that most odious brood of the Jews," said Constantine; and truly Christians of the present day bear witness that they are his children.

The great importance, then, of the Sabbath—the principal end of its institution—is this; that it is an ordinance, which proclaims to an infidel and heathen world, that there is but one God, who made the earth and created man upon it, whose hands have stretched out the heavens, and commanded all their hosts; who created not the earth in vain, but formed it to be inhabited. It thus proclaims that, which is a necessary item, not only of the Jew's, but also of the Christian's faith. Heb. 11: 3.

BAPTISM A JEWISH RITE.

Some time ago, Major M. M. Noah published in the New York Tribune a series of articles illustrative of certain laws and usages of the Hebrew nation, in the course of which he stated that Baptism was a Hebrew rite. He has since been publicly requested to give his evidences of the truth of the statement, and his opinion of the origin of the rite of Baptism. This he has done through a late number of the Tribune, from which we gather the following.

Circumcision and Baptism, according to Mr. Noah, were the initiatory rites for the admission of Hebrew children into the established religion; and these two rites were from the earliest periods inseparable, although not both of the same divine authority. The Baptism of John in the Jordan, which many have regarded as the original of baptism, was not a new practice, but the induction into a new faith. In proof of these statements, he quotes Maimenides, who is regarded as high authority both among Jews and Christians, and who says, "Israel was admitted into the covenant by three things; by Circumcision, by Baptism, and by Sacrifice. Circumcision was in Egypt; baptism and sacrifice were in the wilderness before the giving of the law."

The origin of Baptism, Mr. Noah dates from the time of Jacob, when he received into the church the young women of Sichem, and other heathens who lived with him. The command to them to "put away strange gods, be ye clean, and change your garments," is referred by Eben Ezra to that purification which was connected with baptism. This view, Mr. N. thinks, is corroborated by the fact that the heathen who became converts to the religion of the Jews, were admitted by circumcision and baptism, which were regarded as inseparable.

In regard to the manner of administering the rite of baptism, Mr. Noah says, the candidate was placed in the water, in company with a man duly appointed to the office, who first instructed him in some of the weightier obligations of the law, and then "plunged him in, so that every part of the body was immersed, not the tip of a finger being left exposed; hence the difference between sprinkling and immersion in baptism."

—Such are the opinions of Mr. Noah, who will be regarded by most persons as a candid witness, and one not likely to be influenced by the various theories which the baptismal controversy has developed. In reading these opinions, several questions very naturally arise, which the unlearned and ignorant may be puzzled to answer. In the first place, they will be troubled to answer the question, If baptism and circumcision were both necessary for admission into the ancient church, how comes baptism now to be represented as having taken the place of circumcision? In the second place, they will not know what reply to make to the question, If in the old economy all who were circumcised and baptized became thereby members of the church, why do modern teachers baptize persons whom they refuse to admit as members of the church? In the third place, they will be puzzled to dispose of the question, If baptism originally consisted in plunging the candidate, so that every part of the body was immersed, why do modern administrators of the ordinance substitute for such plunging the mere sprinkling of a few drops of water upon the candidate? On behalf of such simple-minded Christians as may have occasion to answer these questions, we would thank some of the doctors of divinity whose practice has given rise to them, for a satisfactory solution of the difficulties.

CURIOUS CUSTOM.—In looking over the proceedings at the anniversary dinner of the New York Hebrew Benevolent Society, we were struck by the mention of a custom which was new to us, and will be new, we presume, to many of our readers. It is described as follows:—"On the conclusion of the dinner and dessert, the President announced that it was customary to sell the honor and privilege of saying the blessing, to the highest bidder, for the benefit of the poor, which was purchased by Abraham J. Jackson, Esq., for thirty-five dollars, and by him given to Lyon Levy, Esq., who said the grace, after the manner of the German and Polish Jews, with impressive effect."

PUSEYISM IN BOSTON.—They have a Puseyite controversy progressing, it seems, in the city of Boston. A new church, known as the "Church of the Advent," has introduced certain innovations in the form of the communion table, the decorations of golden candlesticks, a large wooden cross by which the table is surmounted, and the posture observed by the officiating clergy of facing the altar. Against these innovations, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Eastburn, prelate of the diocese of Massachusetts, has issued a public declaration, expressive of his disapprobation of these Romish ceremonies and outward signs.

LEGISLATION IN FAVOR OF SUNDAY.

We have already given some account of the discussion upon this subject, which took place at the recent "Sabbath Convention" in Philadelphia. We are glad to notice, as one of the results of this discussion, that some of the religious papers have been led to speak out plainly their sentiments in regard to the matter. The following paragraphs are copied from a long editorial article in the last number of the Christian Observer, a Presbyterian paper published in Philadelphia:—

"The subject of CIVIL ENACTMENTS, to prevent the desecration of the Sabbath, or to promote its observance, involves two important questions: 1st. Is it consistent or right, under the constitution of our country, which secures to every citizen perfect freedom of conscience and opinion and practice, in religion, for the State to enact a law, imposing a penalty for profaning or desecrating the Sabbath, as a divine institution? If the fundamental law of the land says to the people, "you may believe and practice whatever religion you choose, or no religion at all," and promises to protect their worship, or their neglect of worship, can the legislator, under this law, which he is sworn to obey, rightfully say to the people, "you shall not pursue your ordinary labors on the Sabbath—it is a divine institution, and if you profane it, you must bear the penalty due to evil doers?" Believing, as we do, that the Constitution is right in protecting religious freedom, in its wide sense—notwithstanding the gross abuse of it by unprincipled and reckless men—we do not think it consistent to ask the State to inflict any penalty on the Sabbath-breaker, or to attempt to restrain him from worldliness on the Sabbath, by its enactments. We would leave him and his offences, after doing all in our power to persuade him to regard the authority of the divine law—to be judged by its Great Author, who will render to every man according to his works. * * * *

"There is another, and in some respects a more important question, connected with this subject. Is it wise or expedient to EMPLOY THE PENAL STATUTES OF THE STATE to persuade men to observe the Sabbath? Is it expedient to have recourse to this kind of power, to reclaim men from sin and error in religion, or to promote their reception of the truth? On this question, we concur in the views expressed by Dr. Bethune, Mr. Atwood, and others of the minority of the Convention. We deprecate the interference of State legislation on any question touching the religious faith or practices of the people, as injurious to the interests of true religion. In our youth we witnessed a practical illustration of the virtue of penal statutes to enforce the observance of the Sabbath, in favorable circumstances. The officer charged with this duty was a near relative, who performed the service required by his oath, as kindly perhaps as fidelity would permit. The developments of the experiment were exhibited in cunningly devised falsehoods, to deceive the representative of law, and schemes to evade it, or subvert its authority. After a thorough trial in that part of New England, among a people of Puritan origin, trained from their cradles to reverence the law, the experiment was given up as hopeless. The old Adam of our fallen nature was found to be too strong, to be corrected in its religious faith by penal statutes. If the State law had not virtually died, it might have killed the Sabbath."

EXTRACT FROM A PRIVATE LETTER.

The following extract from a private letter of a friend in Western New York, contains a suggestion so general in its application that we venture to copy it.

"Elder A. has just been holding a debate upon the Sabbath question with the Rev. Mr. C., a Presbyterian clergyman. Elder A. defended the true doctrine of the Sabbath with ability and energy, and showed himself to be master of the question. As for Mr. C., I thought he managed the subject very well. But I always pity a Protestant in his defence of Sunday, because he has so little to do with the Bible, and so much to do with the Fathers—so little to do with proof, and so much to do with assertion. . . . . Blessed be God, the glory of Sunday is departing, and the honor of the true Sabbath is appearing."

AN INTERESTING RELIC.

Among the curious manuscripts deposited in the British Museum at London, is one entitled, "A copie of a Bull, given by the hollie Father the the Pope, whereby men are permitted to have two wyves, for the multiplienge of the Romysh Church, or hollie Catholiques." It is addressed to the king of France, and dated October 8, 1582—a time when the Huguenots, by their successful wars, had greatly thinned the armies of the Pope. It would not much surprise one to find such a proclamation issuing from a political leader in a time of great emergency; but to meet with an instrument of this kind from the head of the holy Catholic Church, the vicegerent of Christ on earth, is truly surprising and noteworthy. Here is an extract, containing the most interesting portion of the bull, given literatim et verbatim, as translated from the Latin into English in 1582:—

"The goode peopell of the Catholicke's belief are almost ruined, destroyed, and dryven awaye, by an infinite number of hell-hounds, called Protestants, that swarme in these daies like beese, who, by their murthers and cruelties have brought our goode children and christians into an almost utter desolation—which is the cause that we, by the ripe and good deliberation of our councell, by our absolute power and special grace, and in consideration of the evils aforesaid, and to the end that the worlde may be replenished with catholickes, that may hereafter oppose and make resistence against these Turkishe infidells, Hugonots, and therefore have ordeyned, and due ordeyne by these presents, that all men, of what condicion soever they be, except priests of the Church only, shall, upon pain of excommunication, take and marry two honest women, and those such as may be apt to conceve and beare children, for and to the ende to multiplie the worlde againe with Catholickes, which are sore decayed,—and, moreover, we do ordeyne that this dispensacion shall continue for the space of one hundred yeres. Furthermore, we will ordeyne and command, that if anie of these wyves cannot agree together, the husband shall put her away that is most troublesome, only giving her her apparel, and nothing els: and we do permit, by the authoritie aforesaid, that the same man may take another, such as he shall lyke.

"Geven in our great Church of St. Peter at Rome, the 8th of October, and of our Popedom the 8th year."

GREAT RESULTS FROM SMALL BEGINNINGS.—The Prosestant Half-Orphan Asylum of this city held an exceedingly interesting Annual Exhibition on Wednesday of last week. Among the speakers on the occasion we notice the names of Dr. Reese and Dr. Alexander, both of whom spoke of the exercises and of the institution in terms of strong commendation. The following is said to be a true account of the origin of this charity. It ought to warn us against despising the day of small things, and encourage us to hope much from any effort prompted by Christian benevolence:

"A worthy woman was left a widow with two small children. Her only resource was to obtain a servant's place, which she did; but the mere board of her children absorbed all her earnings. Beside, there was no fit place where they could be boarded, even at so ruinous an expense to their mother. The matter so interested the lady with whom she lived, that after conversing with some of her acquaintances, it was determined to make an effort to provide for half-orphans. The beginning was very small. It was a matron in a basement, with three children. The institution has grown rapidly and interested intensely all who have become familiar with it; so that now an hundred and fifty or two hundred children are accommodated in the house belonging to the Association, with some half-dozen well-educated and energetic ladies to superintend and instruct them. The order, neatness and maternal kindness which pervade the whole establishment would almost make one wish that half the children in town were there. Since the commencement of the Asylum, more than six hundred children have enjoyed its benefits. Many have been returned to their parents; about two hundred have been put out to trades and other employments. There has not been a death in this house for a year and three-quarters, and the joyous countenances of the children indicated perfect health at present.

HAMILTON LITERARY AND THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTION.—We have received a Catalogue of the officers and students of this institution for 1845–6, from which we learn that the whole number of students is 221. Of these, 28 are in the Theological Department; 146 in the Collegiate Department, and 46 in the Academic Department. The advantages of the institution are not now restricted, as they formerly were, to candidates for the ministry, but may be enjoyed by any person of good moral character. We notice, however, that a large majority of the students have the sacred office in view.

CASSIUS M. CLAY.—A correspondent of the Evening Journal, writing from Danville, Ky., under date of Nov. 24, says he has just had an interview with Cassius M. Clay, who has been suffering lately from the effects of a cold, on which account he was about starting for a warmer climate, and would probably spend the winter in Cuba.

REVIVAL IN ADAMS.—We rejoice to learn, by a letter from Bro. Charles Potter, that the labors of Bro. Giles M. Langworthy, in Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., have been greatly blessed during the past fall. A gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit has been enjoyed, as the result of which backsliders have been reclaimed, sinners converted, and some twenty persons added to the church by baptism.

BAPTIST MISSIONS.—The Baptist Board of Foreign Missions have officially announced, that the subscriptions necessary to extinguish the $40,000 debt have been secured. This announcement will be most gratifying to the friends of the Board. We trust it will be the means of giving new energy to their operations.

"A NUT FOR THEOLOGIANS."—Under this heading, we find in an exchange paper the following paragraphs, which we copy as an another illustration of what we said last week about the tendency of arguing from accidents:—

"I perceive by the newspapers, that the Rev. Dr. Beecher, of Cincinnati, met with serious injuries to his person on a Sunday evening recently, by his carriage running away, whereby it was dashed to pieces, and the Dr. pitched on his back with great violence and laid senseless for forty-five minutes; and for several hours more breathed with difficulty, &c.

"Now, as the Reverend Divine, was riding on Sunday, (the Christian Sabbath, as he and his Christian brethren call it,) contrary to the prohibitions of Moses, I ask whether it was merely an accident, a calamity, a judgment, a punishment, or a wise Providence?

"Had it been an Infidel, or a No-del, we would have been favored with homilies on the violation of the Sabbath without stint. But as it is the Rev. Dr. Beecher, one of the great guns or cannons of the church, I am anxious to know in what light his brethren view this catastrophe."

PROTESTANTISM IN FRANCE.—The news from France in regard to religious movements is exceedingly interesting. A reformation is said to be progressing in some places, much like that of the sixteenth century. Rev. Dr. Baird writes:

"In the single Department of Haute Vienne, through the labors of a single missionary, six churches have been gathered, and have received pastors, on whose ministrations 6,000 persons, more or less, attend. Near the town of Sens, five parishes, through their Mayors, have called for Protestant pastors, and thirty-nine more are longing for an evangelical ministry. An agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society in France, writes from another place, that Protestant worship might be established in forty communes in his neighborhood. A French paper says that there are an hundred places where evangelical ministers are now called for, and the number will rapidly increase."

UNEQUIVOCAL.—The venerable Dr. Lyman Beecher, speaking of Slavery and of those who hold that it is not a sin, says:—

"Enslaving men, in the first instance, is by their doctrine sinful; but he that takes up and perpetuates the wrong thus begun, is guilty of no wrong, though the curse of slavery is thus sent down through all the slave's posterity to the judgment day! Will some of them tell us at which link in this horrid chain, the wrong loses its nature and becomes right? I tell you that at whatever link the slaveholder lays hold for the purposes of slaveholding, it will attract the electricity of God's wrath, that shall burn to the lowest Hell!"

JOHN B. GOUGH.

This eloquent champion of the temperance cause is again in the field, giving battle to the enemy at whose hands he has suffered so much. He spoke on Wednesday evening, the 10th inst., before a crowded meeting, at the Tremont Temple in Boston. The papers represent him as rather feeble in bodily health, and considerably exhausted by his effort at speaking. The following sketch of his speech, which we copy from the Boston Traveler, will sufficiently exhibit his present feelings, and satisfy every candid mind, that the circumstances of his recent fall should not be made an insuperable barrier to his personal efforts on behalf of the temperance cause:—

"Mr. Gough occupied but a few minutes. He said he did not stand there to explain his position, or the circumstances of his recent misfortune; he had already done that in his written communications to the public, and to his brethren in the church. He stood there in the dignity of an honest man. He knew that he had not betrayed the temperance cause, but had himself been betrayed by wicked men. He felt a full conviction that his character would yet be cleared up. But what was he? The cause of temperance was the cause of God, and he was no more than a bubble on the breaker. If a workman fell from the staging of a building which he was engaged in erecting, did that destroy the building? No more would his fall, the cause in the building up of which he was engaged. * * *

"He appeared, he said, before the public a more determined and uncompromising enemy to strong drink, than he ever before was. What he had experienced during the past few months of bodily and mental suffering, had but made him a more determined foe to intemperance.

He then went on to argue against the traffic in ardent spirits, on the ground, which the dealers asserted, was the truth to him, viz: that he had voluntarily and deliberately sacrificed all his prospects, and all his hopes, his standing in society, and everything that he held dear in life, for the paltry gatification of drinking at the intoxicating cup. Now, said Mr. G., if this be true, as the dealers in strong drink say it is, what a picture does this very case show of the nefarious nature of their business? What is their business, but to form this all-powerful appetite, and to pander it when formed?—an appetite which is sufficiently powerful to make a man sacrifice everything of value for the sake of indulging it? Such is the rum-seller's business. Can honest men, and benevolent men, deliberately and understandingly follow this business?"

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

But little was done in Congress last week, and we shall therefore occupy but little room with an account of the proceedings

In the SENATE, several memorials were presented against the admission of Texas into the Union as a Slave State. The subject of appointing a printer for the Senate was under discussion, but seems to be difficult to dispose of, because the party printers are opposed by J. E. Dow & Co., who have proposed to execute the printing for 20 per cent. less than the prices paid during the last Congress. The following officers of the Senate were duly elected, viz: Mr. Dickens, Secretary; Robert Beale, Doorkeeper; Mr. Holland, Assistant Doorkeeper. A Message was received from the President, communicating from the government of the State of Texas, duplicate copies of the Constitution formed by the people of Texas. The Committee on Foreign Relations was filled up, consisting of Allen, Cass, Archer, Sevier, and Atherton. On Thursday the Senate adjourned over to Monday.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, a large number of petitions were presented by John Quincy Adams and others, protesting against the Annexation of Texas as a Slave State. A joint resolution for the admission of the State of Texas into the Union, was introduced, twice read, and made the special order of the day for Tuesday, Dec. 16th. The appointment of Chaplains was brought up, whereupon Mr. Pettit, of Indiana, commenced his old opposition to the appointment, and the subject was not disposed of. Mr. Rockwell presented the Resolutions of the General Assembly of Connecticut on Rhode Island affairs, in condemnation of the Texas proceeding, and censuring John M. Niles for voting for Annexation, contrary to the voice of the people. The various standing committees were appointed; that on Foreign Affairs consisting of C. J. Ingersoll, Pa.; Rhett. S. C.; Payne, Ala.; G. Davis, Ky.; Cobb, Geo.; Smith, Ct.; Cullum, Tenn.; Smith, Ia.; Perry, Md. On Thursday the House adjourned till Monday.

SPLENDID IRON BRIDGE OVER THE NEVA.—Messrs. Bury, Curtis, and Kennedy, the celebrated engineers of Liverpool, have received instructions from the Emperor of Russia to construct an iron bridge of powerful dimensions to be erected over the river Neva at St. Petersburg. This river is at present crossed by three bridges of boats only, and in the winter season the damage done to them by the ice is so considerable that it has been determined to erect the bridge in question; and it is probable at a future time the other two will be replaced by bridges of iron. The length of this bridge is 1078 feet, and will consist of seven arches—the centre one being 156 feet span; and the three on each side 143 feet, 125 feet, and 107 feet, respectively. A separate arch at one end will be devoted to a swivel-bridge, 70 feet wide, by which vessels can be admitted to the custom house. Total weight of iron in this enormous structure will be nearly 10,000 tons, or about five times the quantity which was employed in the Menai bridge; the cost of the iron alone will exceed £100,000.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY, C. W.—We learn from the best authority, that the entire stock of this company has been taken in England by a few of the leading capitalists, and that 15 per cent. on the entire amount, $6,000,000, has been paid up. That fact alone, shows that it is not, and will not be, in the hands of speculators. The stock commands a high premium in London, and is at 6 per cent. advance at Hamilton.

Arrangements are now making to commence operations by the 1st of December, and the road is to be in full operation in the autumn of 1848! This is nearly equal to the present English mode of making and furnishing an entire line of 92 miles in 12 months and a few days, by one contracting firm.

This road is to commence at Windsor, opposite Detroit, and pass through London to Hamilton, 190 miles, and then probably be continued to Fort Erie, opposite Buffalo, or to Niagara Falls direct, and pass over on a suspension bridge, just below the cataract—thus uniting the interest of both Buffalo and Rochester. This is a magnificent project, and it will be a fine opportunity to make a first rate investment of capital, and a beautiful display of engineering skill, and of mechanic arts.

THE FACTORY GIRLS OF LOWELL.—There are 6,320 female operatives at Lowell. Of these, Massachusetts furnishes one-eighth, Maine one-fourth, New Hampshire one-third, Vermont one-fifth, Ireland one-fourteenth, and all other places, principally Canada, one-seventeenth. 2,714 are connected with some Sunday school, either as teachers or scholars; 2,276 are church members; 527 have been teachers in common schools. The average wages of the operatives is about $2 per week, besides board; the sums earned range from 75 cts. to $4 85. They have $1,000,000 in the Savings Bank, at Lowell.

A HARD CASE.—The following case of real misery inflicted by our still extant imprisonment for debt law is related in the True Sun:—

"A poor tailor named Domini Caris, a German, who knows scarcely sufficient English to answer 'yes' and 'no,' with six children, three of whom are too young to support themselves, (their mother died five years ago,) was taken from home and locked up for costs of court. Three of his children were left at home with food for one day only, without fuel, or the means of obtaining it. Two of these children, under twelve years of age, came to see their father at the prison the other day. The old man (he is about sixty years of age) burst into a flood of tears, brought them to the stove to warm their shivering limbs, and divided with them his scanty meal. The other prisoners soon learned their story, and two men divided their rations with the children, and collected a small sum of money to procure them fuel and meat. It is to be hoped that before these articles are exhausted, the Prison Association, or some other benevolent aid, will rescue them from cold and hunger.

The vote in favor of a State Convention in N. Y. was very large, the majority being more than 180,000.

GREAT PIGEON ROOST.—The Miner's Express, published at Dubuque, Iowa, notices a wonderful pigeon roost in the forks of the Maquokity, Jackson county. It is three miles long, and half a mile in width. There can be no estimate made of their numbers. Their roosting places are about a mile distant from their nests and feeding places, being three in number, and each one covering a section of land; and, in passing to or from, they darken the air with their numbers, break down young trees with their weight, and hundreds are killed by getting entangled in the falling limbs and branches. The people kill them with clubs, and their noise is so loud that when a gun is fired among them, the report cannot be heard, and a person can stand in one place and shoot all day, the birds returning as soon as you can load.

LIBERALITY TO SLAVES.—A wealthy gentleman named Nicholas Worthington, died a short time since in Howard District, Maryland. He was the owner of a large number of slaves, all of whom were manumitted by his will, with the exception of five superannuated negroes who are to live upon either of two estates mentioned, as they may choose, and who are to be supported without labor the remainder of their lives. The slaves of sixteen years of age are to be free in six months; the younger ones are to be free when they attain that age, and until then they are the property of their mothers. Two of his slaves receive their freedom immediately, to one of whom is given $2000, and to the other $500. Sixteen others receive 150 acres of land, and others receive various sums of money.

GIRARD COLLEGE.—At length, says the Daily Keystone, the Orphans who were to be benefitted by the munificient bounty of Mr. Girard, may exclaim, "We see land!" The college is nearly finished. Badly managed as the legacy has been, still the building is almost ready for the reception of students. Crowds daily promenade upon the roof, which affords them a fine panoramic view of the environs of Philadelphia. The roof is marble. It is composed of square tiles of marble, about forty inches square, and is so nearly flat, that you walk upon it without difficulty. The roof is about one hundred feet from the ground. The building is surrounded by a Corinthian colonade that surpasses most of the achievements of modern art.

DR. HOUGHTON.—A St. Clair (Michigan) paper states, on the authority of J. Houghton, jun., that all hopes of ever recovering the body of his lamented brother have ceased. A steady search was made for some fourteen days, but to no purpose, notwithstanding the water where the boat upset was scarcely four feet deep in calm weather. An undercurrent that exists at that spot has undoubtedly carried the body to the depth of the lake, over which the rude tempest will forever chant the wild requiem of his melancholy fate. We may be permitted to mention an interesting fact in relation to this melancholy calamity, which we learn from the same source. At the time of the adventure which closed Dr. Houghton's eventful career in the waters of Lake Superior, he had with him in his canoe his faithful little dog so often described in the papers by the letter-writers of that region. About an hour after the upsetting of the boat, the dog came into Eagle River, much bruised by being dashed against the rocks, and his strength nearly exhausted, in which condition he remained for several days, and yet would frequently hobble along the bank of the lake to the scene of the fatal catasthrope, and there howl for hours, as though he would call forth his master from the depth below.

STATISTICS OF CRIME IN LONDON.—There are 12000 children training in crime and graduating in vice; 3000 receivers of stolen property; 4000 annually committed to prison for crime; 10,000 living by gambling; 20,000 by beggary; 30,000 practising theft and fraud. To feed all this depravity, three millions' worth of spirituous liquors are employed, producing in one year 23,000 drunkards reeling through the streets; 150,000 drinkers of spirits; 5000 temples of debauchery; 150,000 Sabbath-breakers; and the statistics of evil are ever on the increase.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.—The committee of the National Temperance Society, have appointed a sub-committee to consider and report on the propriety of holding a World's Temperance Convention, at London, in June, 1846. That time was selected on account of a resolution having been adopted by a meeting of ministers and laymen of Liverpool, to have a general conference of the various sections of the Christian church assemble in London at the same time.

THE GREAT CITY.—London, upon an average, the last ten years, has paid annually $48,840,000 in custom duties, or nearly half the whole amount of revenue raised from that department. There are 2,000 merchants and brokers within half a mile of the Exchange. The water companies supply 237,000,000 hogsheads every year, and the gas companies 10,000,000 cubic feet of gas, every twenty-four hours. In 1839, there were sold in Smithfield market 180,780 head of cattle, and 1,500,000 of sheep. The London newspapers consume 10,000,000 stamps annually. The steamboats carry 10,000 passengers every day. There are 10,000 miles of railroad, stretching from London into every part of the kingdom, completed at the expense of $222,000,000. There are 58 canals, which cost about $20,000,000. The business of the London bankers alone, averages $333,000,000 a month! The wealth of mind possessed by that wonderful city is not put down by McCulloch, nor the weight of human degradation.

AN ODDITY.—The following colloquy took place a few mornings since between a justice and an unmitigated loafer. "What's your name?" "Thomas I. Cann." "Where do you live?" "Where I can." "How do you live?" "How I can." "Very well," said the Justice, "I can send you to Blackwell's Island, do you think you can live there, Thomas?" "I can, for I've tried it," said the fellow, and he was led off.

GOOSEBERRY AND CURRANT.—The Gooseberry and Currant require a rich, friable soil, which should be well cultivated and manured. The Gooseberry will grow vigorously and produce very fine fruit if planted at the north side of a paling or open fence and about two feet distant from it, or if planted beneath the partial shelter of a peach or plum orchard, as the full rays of the sun burn the fruit and arrest its growth. Both Gooseberries and Currants should be pruned in Autumn and thd weak shoots cut away and this is the proper period for digging around them, and for enriching them where the soil requires it. [Wm. SUMMARY.

The average price of flour in the month of January, for forty-two years, from 1796 to 1837 inclusive, was $7,50 per bbl. In 1796 it rose to $12,50, in 1801 to $11,50, in 1805 and 1811 to $11,00, in 1812 to $12,50, in 1813 to $13,50, and in 1837 to $11,00. The lowest price in these 42 years, was $4,00, in 1821.

A trial of considerable interest took place at Fredrick, Md, last week, in which Miss Bobit, a respectable young girl, residing near that place, was the plaintiff, and a young man named Toms, the defendant. The charge was an aggravated case of seduction. On Friday the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the young lady, giving her $2800.

The Chief of the New York Police, has reported to the Mayor 302 houses of ill-fame, with the names of the occupants.

The widow of Joe Smith writes from Nauvoo to the N. Y. Sun that she is left with a family of small children, without any means of giving them an education, for there is not a school in the city. She adds:

"I must now say, that I never for a moment believed in what my husband called his apparitions and revelations, as I thought him laboring under a diseased mind; yet they may all be true, as a Prophet is seldom without credence or honor, excepting in his own family or country; but as my conviction is to the contrary, I shall educate my children in a different faith, and teach them to obey and reverence the laws and institutions of their country."

Mr. Richardson, known as having undertaken an Anti-Slavery Mission to Morocco, has, on a similar errand, penetrated the Great Desert as far as Ghadames, the grand commercial depot of Northern and Central Africa. His principal object is to collect statistics in relation to the slave trade. In the face of many dangers he has arrived safely at Ghadames.

At an auction sale of Chinese Fancy Goods on Tuesday, a large number of our fashionable ladies and gentlemen were present, and the bidding was sharp and eager The assortment of shawls was particularly large and fine, and they went off, the best of them, at prices averaging from $150 to $425. The tables, Chess boards, Vases, &c. &c. all sold high. One pair of very splendid vases went for $310.

In old times, when slavery was sanctioned in Massachusetts, a wealthy lady residing in Gloucester was in the habit of giving away the infants of her female slaves, a few days after they were born, as people are accustomed to dispose of a litter of kittens. One of the neighbors begged an infant, which, in those days of comparative simplicity, she nourished with her own milk, and reared among her own children. This woman had an earnest desire for a brocade gown; and her husband not feeling able to purchase one, she sent her little nursling to Virginia and sold her, when she was about 7 years old. Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, Dec. 15.

FLOUR AND MEAL—There continues to be a good demand for flour for shipment at $6 31¼, but holders generally decline selling at that rate. We hear only for shipment of sales 500 bbls. for London at $6 37½. The market for common descriptions is nominally 6 25@6 37½. Rye flour is in demand; sales at 4 37½@4 50. Corn meal is very scarce. Jersey and Brandywine bbls are worth 4 12½ @4 50; hhds Brandywine 18 00. We notice further sales Yellow Meal at 1 37½; White is more firm, and worth 1 62½@1 75; Buckwheat is 4 00@4 50 per bbl, and more plenty; bags 2 00 per cwt.

GRAIN—Wheat continues dull, and we notice a sale of 400 bushels at 1 25. For a parcel of Long Island 1 32 was asked. Corn is in demand for shipment, and about 10,000 bushels Southern have been bought, to arrive, at 80@81c weight. Sales 500 bushels Jersey at 80c. In Barley there is but little doing. Sales 1200 bushels at 65c. Rye is 80 @81c. delivered, with moderate sales. Canal Oats are dull at 46@50, and Southern at 44@45c.

HAY—There is but little afloat, and in store good parcels are held at 1 00 per cwt. The demand is not large. There is no shipping demand at present rates.

PROVISIONS—There is still a fair demand for Old Prime Pork, and sales 400 bbls were made supposed at $10 50. Mess is nominally $13 50. Sales 100 bbls sour Prime at $9 75. Beef continues in demand, and Country brands are quoted at 5 25@5 50, and 3 25@8 50. Beef Hams are worth about $10 00, and in demand. Lard is quiet. City 8¾@9c. For Cheese there is more inquiry, and prices have rather an improving tendency. Sales 500 to 800 boxes at 7¼c. for shipment. Sales 400 packages Butter for the East at 14@19c. Western Dairy; Ohio is 12@12½c. for good lots. Pickled Meats are not very plenty, and dull. We quote Smoked Hams 10@11c.; Shoulders 7@7½c.; Smoked Beef 7c.

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

The 2d Semi-Annual Session of the Central Association will be held with the first church in Verona, on the third and fourth days of the week, Jan. 6th and 7th, 1846. Introductory discourse by Eld. G. M. Langworthy, or Eld. Elias Burdick, his alternate. There will be two Essays or Tracts presented for examination. One on Communion, the other on Baptism. All Missionaries employed by the Association will then make their reports, and farther action will be taken relative to Missionary Operations. The subject of obtaining legal protection in the enjoyment of the Sabbath, from the Legislature, will probably come before the Association. The Agent of the American and Foreign Bible Society has given notice that he will be present, and with leave will present the claims of that Society. A full attendance is very desirable.

Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences The apparatus will be farther increased at the commence ment of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition. per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

BROKEN VOWS.

Men vow to Him who rules on high,
And to him for protection cry;
When tempest howls, and thunder rolls,
Then fear alarms their deathless souls.

Vows truly solemn they will make,
When dashing billows o'er them break,
Their lives they ask the Lord to spare,
And then they vow they will him fear.

But when he calms the raging sea,
They do not bow to him the knee;
They break the solemn vows they made
When lightning flashed, and tempests raged.

Those vows men make in trouble, will
One day their hearts with sorrow fill;
It will be then too late to say,
I now my broken vows will pay.

God does remember every vow,—
And though you scoff and trifle now
With judgment and an awful hell,
There, those who break these vows must dwell.

Now is the time to pay your vows,
His bow of mercy round you throws
Its golden rays, O, heed this bow,
And God will grace on you bestow. P. S.

SUFFERINGS OF A SHIPWRECKED CREW.

From an English Paper.

Many will, no doubt, recollect that the slave schooner Felicidale, of unhappy and infamous celebrity, after being the scene of the treacherous murder of the British officers and crew who had charge of her as a prize, a crime for which the perpetrators are now under sentence of death, was recaptured by her majesty's ship Star, and after being again manned by a small party of sailors under command of Lieut. Wilson, was despatched to Sierra Leone for adjudication. Fatality, however, dogged this vessel, which seems to have been the instrument and the scene of such an amount of crime and suffering.

She was suddenly upset in a squall, while on her voyage; but the vessel still floated, and the gallant crew, with wonderful skill and courage, rigged a raft from the spars and yards of the vessel as she lay submerged, and made sail for the coast of Africa, 200 miles distant. The sea broke over their frail raft, ferocious sharks glided around them as if expectant of their certain prey; but the gallant, fellows so far from being dismayed, very effectually turned the tables upon the monsters of the deep, and became the devourers instead of the devoured. They actually caught four of these horrible prowlers with no other resource but a bowling line and their own good arms, and by a singular combination of gallantry, hardihood and good fortune, by this means preserved their own lives. A brief summary of this extraordinary escape has been handed us from an authentic source, which is as follows:

On the 9th of March last, the Felicidale, a Brazilian two-topsail schooner fitted for the slave trade, was detained by her majesty's ship Star, and Lieut. Wilson was sent on board with four seamen of the Star, three Kroomen and two Brazilians to navigate her to Sierre Leone, for abjudication. On the 16th of March, in latitude 1° 18 N., and longitude 3° 20 W., at noon, Cape Three Points the nearest land, bearing N. N. E., distant 238, about 3 o'clock P. M., when under all sail, steering W. N. W., with a breeze from the south, a squall was observed coming up astern, and sail was immediately shortened; but the man at the helm instead of keeping her on the course she was steering, as he was ordered by Lieut Wilson to do, put the helm aport, and then brought her by the lee: the squall took her at the same time, and she turned over on her beam ends, and filled. The squall passed over in half an hour. No lives were lost. The whole number were huddled together on the gunwale. Having no boat, and fearing that she might not float long, the only expedient that occurred to them for saving their lives, was the construction of a raft, which was immediately set about; three of the seamen had knives, with which they began at once to cut away all the spars, canvass, and cordage that could be got at; the main boom was not obtained without great difficulty, and then only by the Kroomen diving and cutting the gear under water. Before dark they had succeeded in lashing the main yard, fore and fore topsail, topgallent and sail yards, studding sail booms, and gaffs, for a raft; it was shifted to leeward of the vessel, and all hands, ten in number, got upon it, apprehensive that the vessel might sink during the night. In the morning, finding the raft was hardly able to carry them all, the fore yard was added as outside spar, the main boom being on the other side, and the smaller spars amidships. The only provisions they could procure was a little putrid pork, no water, and a gallon and a half of spirit, which had been lashed on deck. Nothing else could be procured, for the Kroomen, though expert divers, were prevented by the slave deck from getting into the vessel. Having nothing but their light clothing, some canvass was taken from the sails to serve as protection against the weather, and all the small rope that could be procured was also placed upon the raft for the purpose of replacing the lashings, should they be long upon it. As much of the plank of the bulwarks as could be torn off was preserved for paddles to steer with, and for seats.

About 9, A. M.. of the 10th, finding the schooner had settled down considerably, and that nothing more was to be got from her, a mast and sail were rigged, and they cast off from the wreck with good spirits, in the hope of reaching the land. Having no compass, the sun by day and the stars by night were their only guide. For four days there was no appearance of rain, and all suffered much from thirst; and so few clothes had been saved, that in the day time they were scorched by the sun, and at night the cold was intense. From the weight upon the raft, and the circumstance of all the spars having their fitting upon them, it swam very deep, which kept them constantly immersed in water, and if they laid down, the sea washed over their heads; in fact the fore part of the raft was from two to three feet under water.

On the 5th day they caught a little rain-water, which served to revive every one; and on the 7th they obtained another, though more scanty supply. On the 9th day, two of the Kroomen were delirious from drinking salt water; and in the evening the quarter-master, from the same cause, notwitstanding they had been earnestly cautioned against it, and the inevitable consequences pointed out. The sharks which had followed them from the third day, began now to swarm around the raft, an attempt was successfully made to catch one; a bait was held out, and when a shark was in the act of turning to it, one of the Kroomen seized him by the tail, a rope was immediately made fast, and the men cut him across the back with their knives, which rendered him comparatively powerless, and by their united efforts it was dragged upon the raft. The blood and flesh revived them; and that day, the tenth from their leaving the wreck, it rained heavily, which enabled them to assuage their thirst, and fill the empty spirit cask half full of water. Nothing, however, could restore the Kroomen and the quarter-master, who were previously delirious. The next morning one of the Kroomen was found dead on the raft, the other two died during the day, and the quarter-master in the evening, giving them a fearful warning of the effects of drinking salt water.

The greatest care was taken of the water, a mouthful being served out three times a day in the heel of a shoe. They caught three more sharks, in the same manner as before, and some flying fish; the latter however, they could scarcely swallow, so parched were their throats; they found the sharks much more nourishing, and easier to eat. It rained once or twice afterwards, but the sea ran over their heads in such a manner, that they found it impossible to catch water. Their utmost efforts were now required, to keep the raft together; it often got adrift, and little rope was left to secure it. Their limbs were so swollen and ulcerated, and so little strength was left them, that they could scarcely move; the mast-head had fallen down, and they were unable to raise it, so that all hope of reaching the land began to fail them. Nevertheless, they were resigned and obedient.

On the third of April, one of the Brazilians died. In the evening of the 4th, after having been 19 days on the raft, they saw the land; the next morning it was out of sight again. Soon after day-light they saw a sail to leeward; she appeared to approach the raft, and the hope of being saved gave them strength to stand up and make signals, but in vain, for she shortly bore up and left them. They were then so weak, that had the raft reached the land, they were well aware that they must have perished in the serf. Another vessel now appeared in sight, and communicated with the one they had first seen. She then stood toward them, and their hopes once more revived; a boat was set out, and they found that they had been saved by her majesty's brig Cygnet, being then about thirty miles to leeward of St. Paul's. Four hours after they had been picked up, the other Brazilian died; he also had drank salt water. The conduct of the men was most exemplary throughout: and, under the providence of God, was mainly instrumental in saving their lives.

THE BEGGAR AND BANKER.

"Stand out of my way," said a rough voice under my window, one day, as I sat musing over the bustling scenes below me, at my lodgings.

"Your honor will please recollect," repied a sharp but somewhat indignant voice, "your honor will please recollect that I am a beggar, and have as much right to the road as yourself."

"And I am a banker," was retorted still more angrily.

Amused at this strange dialogue, I leaned over the case, and beheld two citizens in a position which a pugilist would denominate squared, their countenances somewhat menacing, and their persons presenting a contrast at once ludicrous and instructive. The one was a purse-proud, lordly-mannered man, apparently in silk, and protecting a carcass of nearly the circumference of a hogshead; the other ragged and dirty, but equally impudent and self-important a personage; and from a comparison of their countenances, it would have puzzled the most profound M. D., which of their rotundities were stored actually with good victuals and drink. Upon a closer examination. however, of the countenance of the banker, I discovered almost as soon as my eye fell upon it, a line bespeaking something of humor, and awakened curiosity, as he stood fixed and eyed his antagonist; and this became more clear and conspicuous when he lowered his tone, and said, "How will you make right appear?"

Said the beggar, "Why, listen a moment, and I will teach you. In the first place do you take notice, God has given to me a soul and a body just as good for all the purposes of eating, thinking, and drinking, and taking my pleasure, as he has you—and then you may remember Dives and Lazarus, as we pass. Then again, it is a free country, and here, too, we are on an equality; for you must know that here even a beggar's dog may look a gentleman in the face with as much indifference as he would a brother. I and you have the same common Master, are equally free, and live equally easy, are both traveling the same journey, bound to the same place, and have both to die and be buried in the end."

"But," interrupted the banker, "do you pretend there is no difference between the beggar and a banker?"

"Not in the least as to essentials. You swagger and drink wine in company of your own choosing—I swagger and drink beer, which I like better than your wine, in company which I like better than your company. You make thousands a day, perhaps —I make shillings, perhaps—if you are contented, I am; we are equally happy at night. You dress in new clothes—I am just as comfortable in my old ones, and have no trouble in keeping them from soiling: if I have less property than you, I have less to care about; if fewer friends, I have less friendship to lose; and if I don't make as great a figure in the world, I make as great a shadow on the pavement; I am as great as you. Besides, my word for it, I have fewer enemies, meet with fewer losses, carry as light a heart, and sing as many songs as the best of you."

"And then," said the banker, who had all along tried to slip in a word edgeways, "is the contempt of the world nothing?"

"The envy of the world is as bad as the contempt. You have, perhaps, the one, and I share the other. We are matched there, too. And besides, the world deals in this matter equally unjust with us both. You and I live by our wits, instead of living by our industry; and the only difference between us in this particular worth naming is, that it costs society more to maintain you than it does me. I am content with a little, you want a great deal. Neither of us raise grain or potatoes, or weave cloth, or manufacture any thing useful: we therefore add nothing to the common stock: we are only consumers; and if the world judged with strict impartiality, therefore it seems to me I would be pronounced the cleverest fellow."

Some passer-by here interrupted the conversation. The disputants separated apparently good friends, and I drew in my head, ejaculating, somewhat in the manner of Alexander in the play, "Is there no difference between the beggar and the banker?"

But several years have since passed away, and now both these persons have paid the last debt of nature. They died as they lived, the one a beggar and the other a banker. I examined both their graves when I next visited the city. They were a similar length and breadth, the grass grew on both alike, and nothing appeared to distinguish the difference between the "Beggar and the Banker."

A Tiger Hunt.

A young man had been killed and devoured the day before the hunt here described and his brother and sister engaged in the hunt to seek revenge The writer says,

'On the morrow, before it was yet daylight, we commenced our march, reinforced by the brother and sister of the murdered Malay, who vowed in person they would be revenged on the offending panther or tiger. The dogs in our front we kept close together, penetrating a thick forest, which our guides told us we should not be long before we passed through. Arrived at a spacious open plain, we sat down to breakfast; but the tiger did not allow us much leisure. At the first frightful growling the dogs, which we had been told were courageous, slunk behind us, their tails between their legs, and with looks imprinted with the most stupid fright. Neither the whip nor stick, neither menaces nor caresses—nothing could move them on, and we resolved to pass before them. A second frightful growl, shorter and more loud, told us that the tiger was approaching; we looked to our primings, and put ourselves in order of battle, the Malay three paces in advance, his sister by his side, each armed with a pistol and an iron spear or harpoon; the point of steel being barbed. At length the creature appeared. It was a beautiful full grown tiger, his glossy coat striped like a zebra. He appeared with half open and foaming month, more surprised than frightened at our presence; stood stock still at first, issuing forth deep and deafening growls, his eye-balls flashing fire, and licking his lips with a rough red tongue. He was a magnificent sight.

We made some steps towards him, he made some few towards us; and all at once, as if ashamed of their pusillanimity, the dogs, without being excited to it, ran and placed themselves in our front, eager and silent. At the sight of them the tiger drew back, and elongated himself like a serpent, whipping his flank with his tail, and shaking the foam from his mouth. He took no notice of us, no more than if we had not been present—the dogs were to be his first victims, who dared to bay him. They advanced together at first, then separated to attack the ferocious beast before, behind, and on the flanks. The tiger kept his eye on the most daring of the dogs, and in a moment he had one enemy the less—the dog was crushed at a single bite. We wished to help the others, who had drawn back a few steps, but the Malay made a sign of the hand to reserve our fire; he wished to lasso the animal himself. His sister showed great intrepidity and sang froid; with her vigorous hand she held her spear before her, and I remarked that the yellow color of her face became gradually of a red tint, nearly of copper.

The field of battle was not above fifty paces at most in extent. At the call of Malay, and the impetuous look of the sister, the dogs renewed the attack on all sides with great courage—the redoubtable quadruped crushed his opponents one after the other with his claws. The conflict was bloody; he, too, was bleeding from numerous wounds, became more furious from his smarting wounds. All the dogs were hors de combat, three alone survived and seemed to implore our aid; the Malay advanced, we followed and fired; the tiger roared, made an attempt to leap, but fell to the ground like an aerolyte. The young girl discharged her spear, which left rankling in the wound; another general volley gave the animal his coup de grace.

A Lucky Boy.—A poor boy in Nashville, Tenn., lately found a small but beautiful stone among some muscle shells, on the banks of the river, and put it in his pocket, not knowing or thinking of its value. Soon after, he chanced to expose it to view, when a gentleman proposed to send it to Philadelphia to ascertain its value. It proved to be a genuine pearl, weighing 18 grains, and worth from $500 to $1000.

Rowland Hill.

The above is a picture of Rowland Hill, a minister of London, England. He was a man of great talents and of great benevolence, but was ecentric; that is, what childen call odd. The picture looks rather odd, but it is no more so than was the man it represents. We cannot tell half the stories we have heard about this pious, yet strange divine.

It is said that his cook and his coachman quarreled about going after some milk, which she needed to prepare the breakfast. She wished the coachman to go after the milk, and he refused because he was hired to take care of the horses and drive the coach. Mr. Hill ordered the coachman to bring up the coach, which was done; then he ordered the cook to take her pitcher and get into the coach; then he compelled the coachman to drive her to the place where the milk was obtained and back again. This ended the dispute.

Mr. Hill once obtained the services of Dr. Chalmers on an important occasion, in which he felt a very great interest. He was very anxious that Chalmers should make a great effort. The Doctor began very moderately, and Hill felt very uneasy, thinking he would make out nothing. Chalmers gradually rose and fired up with his subject, carrying Hill along with him, until he gave a mighty stroke of his eloquence, when Hill, losing his self possession, cried out at the top of his voice, "Well done Chalmers!"

He was on his way to his church one Sunday evening, and overheard two young men talking. One said to the other. "come let us go and hear Old Hill to-night, he will make real fun for us." Hill passed on and went into his pulpit, and the young men came in and took their seats directly opposite in the front of the gallery. Mr. Hill took for his text, "the wicked shall be turned into hell and all the nations that forget God;" and fixing his eyes on the young men he exclaimed, "there will be fun for you, young men." So through the whole sermon, every little while he repeated the same words. Once he quoted the words, "And in hell he lifted up his eyes being in torment," and then fixing his eyes upon the young men, he exclaimed, "there was fun for you, young men."

Mr. Hill died in 1833, aged 89 years.

Little Mary.

BY MRS. C. B. P. WITHERELL.

'O, mother,' said little Mary Doane, one morning as she ran into the house, after having been out to feed her chickens; 'O, mother, I have just thought what I shall do with my chickens next fall.'

'Why, my dear, I thought you had settled that matter long ago,' replied the mother.

'Yes—no, I thought once I should buy a nice muff for next winter, but I do not care anything about that now.'

'Why not, my love?'

'O, because the one I have now is good enough, till I shall be two or three years older.'

'So it is, my dear; but what has altered your mind so suddenly?'

'I will tell you, mother, if you will promise to let me do as I wish with my chickens.'

'Why, you know, my child, that I told you that you might do what you pleased with them.'

'Yes, but you did not think that I should give them away.'

'Give them away! and do you wish to give them away, Mary?'

'Yes, mother, if you are willing.'

'Well, that is certainly a new idea. To whom do you wish to give them, my love?

'But will you promise me, mother?'

'I do not like to promise you unconditionally. But if it is right and proper, I shall have no objections.'

'Well, you know that you sent me down to Mrs. Grove's yesterday, to carry her some tea.'

'Yes.'

'When I went in she was trying to read in the Bible. But she said she had only a small Bible, and the print was so small and her eye-sight was so poor now, that she could hardly read it at all.'

'Poor woman.'

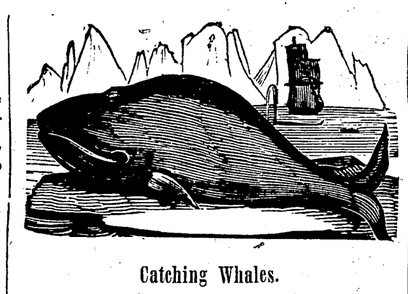
'Well, when I was coming home, I could not help thinking of her, and how much comfort she would take if she had a Bible with good large print, like ours, for you know, mother, that reading the Bible appears to be her greatest source of comfort, now that Mr. Grove is dead. Well, when I was feeding my chickens this morning, I thought of her again, and something seemed to whisper to me that I might buy her a nice large Bible with my chickens, if I would do without the muff, and so I thought if you was willing I would do so.'

Mrs. Doane pressed her little daughter to her bosom, and tenderly kissing her, assured her that she was perfectly willing that she should purchase the Bible as she had proposed.

Little Mary was delighted, and seemed almost impatient for the time to come when her chickens would be ready for the market. But the time came at last, and Mary's father took the chickens to market, and returned with a beautiful large Bible.

Mary immediately carried it down to Mrs. Grove, who was so much pleased that she wept for joy. She thanked Mary over and over again, and assured her that as long as she lived she would pray that the richest of heaven's blessings might be showered upon her. Mary returned home happier than ever before, and on entering her chamber, found a beautiful muff, on which was fastened a little billet containing these words—

'To give to the poor is to lend to the Lord.'



Catching Whales.

The above picture represents the whale fishery. The whale is brought up to full view, while the ship is seen at a distance. A little to the right of the ship may be seen the boat, very small. In the vicinity of the ship may be seen a great number of icebergs, that is, mountains of ice floating in the ocean. The process of taking whales is, to send a man to the mast head to look out for whales. When he sees one, he cries out, giving the direction at which he is from the ship; when near enough they start in a boat, and when they get near they harpoon the whale, that is, they throw a barbed iron which sticks into the whale. To this harpoon, is fastened a long rope, and when the whale feels the harpoon, he darts off, or dives down, and the rope is spun out with great speed. Sometimes the whale continues after he has got the whole rope out, when, to prevent having the boat drawn under, they cut the rope. The rope is coiled in a tub to prevent its getting fast to the boat, or being tangled as it is drawn out by the whale. Once the rope got looped round a man's body, and he was drawn under water. While being dragged down, he got out his knife and cut the rope, but cut it above him, and still he went down till he cut the rope again, and then he came up and was saved. Sometimes the boat is dashed to pieces by the whale, when another boat picks up the men, but sometimes some are lost. We suppose the children all know that the oil we burn in our lamps is taken from the whale.

An Incident.—My sympathies were awakened, awhile ago, by the touching appeals of a little girl, who besought some friends to buy her paper-boxes. They responded to her call, and soon every box was sold. With an instinctive delicacy, which should ever be observed with tiny children, as well as with those of "larger growth," they manifested no curiosity as to her object. Taking her little store of money, she repaired to a confectioner's, and purchased a glass of jelly, for her sick mother. The transparent yellow nutriment had attracted her attention, and she longed to buy some. Having no means, she devised the plan of making boxes. Many an eye moistened at this delicate attention, and the discovery of this generous trait in the daughter, was to the mother ample compensation for a long and dangerous illness.

A Retort.—Masson, Regent of Trinity College, had asked one of his friends to lend him a book, which he wished to consult, and received for answer, "that he never allowed his books to go out of his room, but that, if he chose to come there, he was welcome to read as long as he pleased." Some days afterwards this pedant applied to Masson for the loan of his bellows, who replied, "that he never allowed his bellows to go out of his room, but that, if he chose to come there, he was welcome to blow as long as he pleased."

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PUBLISHED AT NO. 9 SPRUCE ST.

VOL. II—NO. 27. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 25, 1845. WHOLE NO. 79.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE ORIGINAL SABBATH UNCHANGED;

OR,

THE CONTINUING OBLIGATION OF THE SEVENTH DAY, AND THE UNAUTHORIZED SUBSTITUTION OF THE FIRST, AS THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

BY JAMES A. BEGG, GLASGOW, N. B.

SECTION II.

Signification of the word Sabbath, and the various senses in which it is used.

Having exhibited the value and importance of the divine institution of the Sabbath, and the Lord's purpose of blessing by it, before proceeding farther, it may be proper to notice the meaning of the word Sabbath, used as the name or title of the day which is to form the subject of our inquiry. In its strict primary signification, it is universally admitted, that the Hebrew word of itself simply means "rest," as succeeding previous work. It is, therefore, in scripture, applied, directly or by implication—

1. In a special manner, to the seventh day of the week, as the day of God's rest from creation work. "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hollowed it." Exod. 20: 2.

2. In a sense more general, the name of Sabbaths is given to several of the other stated assemblies and festivals appointed for observance by the Israelites. These are enumerated by the Lord to Moses, and recorded in Lev. 23: 25, where the weekly Sabbath is first named. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them concerning the feasts* of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, even these are my feasts. Six days shall work be done; but THE SEVENTH DAY is the Sabbath of rest, an holy convocation; ye shall do no work therein; it is the Sabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings." Lev. 23: 1—3. "These are the feasts of the Lord, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons. In the fourteenth day of the first month, at even, is the Lord's passover; and on the fifteenth of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord; seven days ye must eat unleavened bread. In the first day ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein. But ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord seven days; in the seventh day is an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein." Ver. 4—8. Although the name Sabbath is not here expressly used, it is distinctly implied in the injunction to "do no servile work therein." This sanctifying of the first and seventh days of the passover is more fully stated in a parallel text. "No manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you." Exod. 12: 16. As God's creation has had appointed for all a more frequent memorial in the weekly Sabbath, so has his mighty interposition in Israel's behalf, when he delivered them from Egypt, the annual memorial of the passover, with its two sabbatic rests. It is farther commanded, "And none shall appear before me empty." Exod. 22: 15. The injunction of their giving was absolute; but each man's appreciation of the divine goodness was to dictate the value of the gift.

3. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf of the first fruits of your harvest unto the priest; and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord to be accepted for you; on the morrow after the Sabbath the priest shall wave it, and ye shall offer that day when ye wave the sheaf, an he-lamb without blemish, of the first year, for a burnt-offering unto the Lord. And the meat-offering thereof shall be two tenth deals of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the Lord, for a sweet savor; and the drink-offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of an hin. And ye shall eat neither bread nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the selfsame day that ye have brought an offering unto your God; it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, in all your dwellings. And ye shall count unto you, from the morrow after the Sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave-offering, seven Sabbaths shall be complete; even unto the morrow after the seventh Sabbath, shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat-offering unto the Lord; ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave loaves, of two tenth deals; they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baken with leaven; they are the first-fruits unto the Lord. And ye shall offer with the bread seven lambs without blemish of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams; they shall be for a burnt-offering unto the Lord, with their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, even an offering made by fire, of sweet savor unto the Lord. Then ye shall sacrifice one kid of the goats for a sin-offering, and two lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace-offerings. And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the first-fruits, for a wave-offering before the Lord, with the two lambs; they shall be holy to the Lord for the priest. And ye shall proclaim on the self-same day, that it may be an holy convocation unto you, ye shall do no servile work therein; it shall be a statute for ever in all your dwellings, throughout your generations." Verses 9—21. There were thus two distinct feasts for the harvest, each having an important typical signification. They did, however, also possess a value in themselves as pressing upon the people of Israel, and as the evidence of their recognition of Jehovah as the giver of the harvest. Days of holy convocation, in which no servile work was done, afforded opportunity for social and public spiritual improvement of such seasons of holy festivity.

4. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a Sabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation. Ye shall do no servile work therein; but ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord." Verses 24, 25.

5. "Also, on the tenth day of the seventh month, there shall be a day of Atonement; it shall be an holy convocation unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls and offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord. And ye shall do no work in that same day; for it is a day of Atonement, to make an atonement for you before the Lord your God. For whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from among his people. And whatsoever soul it be that doeth any work in that same day, the same soul will I destroy from among his people. Ye shall do no manner of work; it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, in all yonr dwellings. It shall be unto you a Sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls; in the ninth day of the month, at even; from even unto even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath." Verses 27—32.

6. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, The fifteenth day of the seventh month shall be the feast of tabernacles, for seven days, unto the Lord. On the first day shall be an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein. Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord; on the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord; it is a solemn assembly; and ye shall do no servile work therein."

"These are the Feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, a burnt-offering and a meat-offering, a sacrifice and drink-offering, every thing upon his day; beside the Sabbaths of the Lord, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your free-will offerings, which ye give unto the Lord." Verses 33—38.

"Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a Feast unto the Lord, seven days; on the first day shall be a Sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a Sabbath. And ye shall take you on the first day, the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days. And ye shall keep it a feast unto the Lord seven days in the year. It shall be a statute for ever, in your generations; ye shall celebrate it in the seventh month. Ye shall dwell in booths seven days; all that are Israelites born shall dwell in booths; that your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt; I am the Lord your God. And Moses declared unto the children of Israel, the Feasts of the Lord." Verses 39—44.

In all these cases, holy convocations were enjoined, and servile work forbidden. As so many days and times to be sanctified by the Israelites, "beside the Sabbaths of the Lord," these appointed Feasts were in their seasons, at once the pledge of the Divine care, and the means employed by God for promoting and strengthening that faith in Him, which their observance demanded and implied. But the term Sabbath was also used in a more extensive sense, being applied to the land's lying at rest. Thus,

8. "The Lord spake unto Moses in Mount Sinai, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When we come into the land which I give unto you, then shall the land keep a Sabbath unto the Lord. Six years thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof, but in the seventh year shall be a Sabbath of rest unto the land, a Sabbath for the Lord; thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard. That which groweth of its own accord of thy harvest, thou shalt not reap, neither gather the grapes of thy vine undressed; for it is a year of rest unto the land. And the Sabbath of the land shall be meat for you; for thee, and for thy servant, and for thy maid, and for thy hired servant, and for thy stranger that sojourneth with thee, and for thy cattle, and for the beasts that are in thy land, shall all the increase thereof be meat." [Lev. 25: 1—7.

9. "And thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven Sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month; in the day of the atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof; it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family; a jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you; ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed. For it is the jubilee; it shall be holy unto God; ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field. In the year of the jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession."* Verse 8—13.

In all these cases, it is to be observed, that on the Sabbaths so appointed by God, cessation from servile labor was enjoined or implied; and that, when specific days, they were observed by holy convocations—that both of these seem essential to their due observance, and that from this circumstance they derive their name. And in accordance with what we have said of the weekly Sabbath, even the secondary Sabbaths, in the light of Heaven, take a form of blessing to the Israelites, rather than of bondage—relieving them frequently and statedly from ordinary occupations, and giving opportunity of nationally engaging in the worship of Jehovah—rejoicing in the reception of the Divine goodness, and giving to their joy a hallowed air and character. [To be continued

* I might here have added "the Sabbatism which remaineth for the people of God," but as the meaning of the only text in which this expression occurs is disputed, I refer it to a more advanced part of the argument, for more enlarged consideration.

* "Moadim properly means assemblies convened at an appointed time and place."—Bagster.

THE CAVE OF ADULLAM.

You will remember that it was in the cave of Adullam that David encamped, when he fled from Saul, and where a number of persons to the amount of four hundred, of such as were of broken fortunes and discontented minds, joined David, who became the captain over them, 1 Samuel 22. From the same cave, on a later occasion, we read of three mighty men of David, who were probably ambued with the same spirit of confidence in God as their captain, sallied forth, broke through the host of the Philistines, who were then encamped in the valley of Rephaim, and drew water out of the well of Bethlehem, that was by the gate, and took it and brought it to David, 2 Samuel, 23: 13—18. The approach to the cave is so dangerous and perilous, and when once in it, so safe and secure, that it at once explains why David selected it as one of his places of refuge, though the cave was in the face of his enemies, both of Saul and the Philistines. The path leading to the cave runs for some distance over a narrow slanting ledge of rock, that projects from the middle of a precipice of some thousands of feet deep, and where only one can pass at a time; so that the one who happens to be at the cave's mouth, if he chooses, may set at defiance an enemy, let his strength and numbers be ever so great, for the least resistance of him who is in the possession of the cave would send down his enemies one by one into the great gulf below. The extent of the cave has never yet, nor could be ascertained, in which not only four hundred, but a thousand times that number might hide themselves unperceived and unsuspected. Numberless passages are branching off in every direction, and those passages again ramify to the right and to the left without any kind of order and regularity, and so on. To venture any distance into the interior of the cave, without having a clue to take you back—which is generally a string, one end of which is secured at the mouth of the cave—is to surrender one's self to a sure and premature death. We provided ourselves with three thousand four hundred yards of strong twine, and after fastening one end of it at the entrance of the cave, and leaving two armed servants to watch against the probability of its being cut asunder by some straggling Arabs, which would be literally cutting the strings of our existence, we set out on our expedition, with lighted candles, allowing the twine to drag along as we went onward. We alighted in many chambers of various sizes, shapes, and appearances, and which fancy might picture magnificient cathedrals, palaces, amphitheatres, &c., the same being intervened by long, narrow, and low passages, which we had to crawl through, and on many occasions we had to be let down and drawn up again by Arabs, by the aid of ropes. I regret that the lateness of the day obliged us to return after having expended less than one fourth of our twine, and right glad were we to find ourselves safely back at the mouth of the cave; for should the string have been broken by some accident, we might probably have been buried alive. It would require days, and not hours, to explore the cave, which tradition extends to Hebron, four hours distant. The cave, evidently, has been formed by the action of water, either previous to or during the Deluge; ripples like that made by water, are observable throughout the cave. Probably the apostle, Heb. 11, refers to David, amongst others of the Old Testament saints who wandered in deserts, dens, and caves of the earth, nor is it improbable that David in this cave composed Psalms 57 and 142, as the headings imply. What support must David have derived, when driven to look for safety in flight and concealment, from the assurance of God's mercy and faithfulness, which he so touchingly celebrates in the close of the former Psalm; "For thy mercy is great unto the heavens, and thy truth unto the clouds." Psalm 57: 10. [Voice of Israel.

THE POET COWPER.

The most Christian of our poets is COWPER—the most evangelical in his theology, the most scriptural in his standard of right and wrong, and, abating the frequent satire, the most Christian in his tone. It would be difficult to find in prose, clearer or more simple statements of the great saving truths, than some which he embodied in his pleasant verse, whilst, with a forbearance the more admirable in a poet, he never overleaps the landmark of sacred truth for the sake of gathering bright flowers of fancy. His lofty morality is the legitimate result of his orthodoxy, and it is impossible to name another bard who keeps at a greater distance from all appearance of evil, or who eyes events and characters from so serene a pinnicle of personal virtue. His denunciations of fraud and falsehood, and avarice and cruelty, you see at once are the language of a man who himself is truthful, gentle, open-handed, whilst in the very style and manner of his composition there is something ethical. The limpid, happy course of its numbers, the playful benevolence that sparkles all over them, and the verdure which skirts them wherever they flow, have a benignant influence on the reader's mind, and are fitted to propitiate him into personal improvement. And this is, after all, Cowper's excellence as a Christian moralist, as it is the fairest province of didactic Christian poetry. He did what it is not easy in sermons to do. He pointed out the every day faults and infirmities of character with such precision and fidelity, that each might see as in a glass his own natural face; and with equal minuteness of detail, he specified those duties and graces which are not to be despised because they are little. Himself a lovely example of Christian amenity, his longer poems embody the maxims and the rules which might reproduce characters akin to his own wherever the spirit of the gospel reigns.

FAITH.

An individual well known to us, while standing in Fulton street the other day, was asked by a poor famishing ill-clad man, for relief. He said he had applied to the poor authorities in vain, and unless he got relief from some source very soon, he knew not what must become of him. The appeal reached the heart of the individual addressed, and would have reached his pocket, but, alas! it happened that it was just then empty. He bid the poor fellow wait a few minutes, and he would try to raise a small sum from individuals he was acquainted with in the neighborhood. He went, and after obtaining a few shillings, was returning, when he met a noble hearted fellow, to whom he said,—"Mr. S., I want a shilling or two from you for a poor fellow dying, almost, from want." Mr. S. searched his pockets for some time, and at length said—"Upon my word, I have not a cent about me. I am sorry." The other turned to go away, but was called back by S. saying—"Hold; I have found something—if it will be of any use to you, take it."

"But," replied the other, "this is a $2 bill. I cannot take it. I only wanted a quarter from you, at most."

"Take it along," was the reply, "and don't keep the poor fellow standing there famishing. It will get him something comfortable."

The individual departed with the money, but before he had got twenty yards returned, and said:—"Mr. S., I cannot take it. I know you have many calls, and turn none away, and this seems like robbery. I cannot take it."

"There you stand," replied Mr. S., "and perhaps the poor fellow has had neither bit nor sup to-day. You and I have had plenty; take it along. I shall be repaid fivefold for what I have given."

"But," said the individual, as he stood with the bill in his outstretched hand—"I would rather—"

"Pshaw! don't I tell you I shall receive fivefold for that; you know what the good book says—go and make the poor fellow happy, for a short time at least."

The individual was about to express his doubts, and urge him to receive back the money, when a third person stepped up and said, "Mr. S., I have owed you $10 for a long time, but until within one hour have not been able to pay you. I have unexpectedly received the amount of an old bill, and the first thing afterwards was to find and pay you." Mr. S. took the money, and he who paid it departed. The individual who still held the $2 in his hand, looked on in astonishment as he saw Mr. S. receive just fivefold, as he had predicted—as though it was a matter of course.

"What are you looking so astonished for?" said Mr. S., pleasantly. "Didn't I tell you I should receive fivefold! I knew it. If I had not stopped to talk with you, the man would not have found me, and the money would have been spent, doubtless, before to-morrow. Now go; don't keep the poor fellow out of his money any longer; and mind, always rely on what the good book says."

A HINT TO MINISTERS.—The New England Puritan remarks:—'It is a good custom of some ministers, on some Sabbath near the commencement of a new year, to preach a sermon with reference to the circulation among their people of religious newspapers—showing the importance of the right kind of religious reading, and commending to their notice such papers as they approve. In this way ministers may do an essential service to their people, and by a little effort accomplish much to the furtherance of their own work.'

BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATION.

FLIGHT OF THE EAGLE AND HER YOUNG.

In the book of Deuteronomy we have a beautiful and animated allusion to the eagle, and her method of exciting her eaglets to attempt their first flights, in that sublime and highly mystic composition called Moses' Song; in which Jehovah's care of his people, and method of instructing them how to aim at and attain heavenly objects, are compared to her proceedings upon that occasion. "An eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him." (Deut. 22: 12.) The Hebrew lawgiver is speaking of their leaving their eyrie. Sir H. Davy had an opportunity of witnessing the proceedings of an eagle after they had left it. "I once saw a very interesting sight above the crags of Ben Nesis, as I was going on the 20th of August in the pursuit of black game. Two parent eagles were teaching their offspring, two young birds, the manœuvres of flight. They began by rising from the mountain in the eye of the sun; it was about midday and bright for this climate. They first made small circles, and the young birds imitated them; they paused on their wings, waiting till they had made their first flight, and then took a second and larger gyration, always rising towards the sun, and enlarging their circle of flight, so as to make a gradually extended spiral. The young ones still slowly followed, apparently flying better as they mounted; and they continued this sublime kind of exercise till they became mere points in the air, and were both parents and children lost to our aching sight."

What an instructive lesson to Christian parents does this history read! How powerfully does it excite them to teach their children betimes to look towards Heaven and the Sun of Righteousness, and to elevate their thoughts thither, more and more, on the wings of faith and love; themselves all the while going before them, and encouraging them by their own example. THE JEWS IN POLAND.

The Jewish population in Poland is estimated a three millions—probably a low estimate. They seem to swarm in every place visited by the traveler, through two or three hundred miles of the country. Though in modern times their increase has been somewhat checked by the measures of different governments, yet from the Black Sea to the Baltic, from Odessa to Riga, Konigsburg and Dantzic, the Jews possess an influence and importance which they show nowhere else, and form a larger proportion of the population than in any other country.

In all the towns of these districts, the Jews are the only agents and brokers; and all the mercantile trades, except those of the carpenter and smith, are in their hands. No business is transacted without the aid of the descendants of Israel. Does a noble sell his corn to a merchant? A Jew is the agent. Is a family in want of a housekeeper, or cook, or even a tutor or governess? the vacancy is filled by means of a Jew. A Jewish broker is "part and parcel" of the establishment of every Polish nobleman, following his steps incessantly, in the towns his master is accustomed to visit, and without whom nothing can be done. So completely is this the case, that no purchaser can find a seller, and no seller a purchaser, without the help of a Jew. In short, the Jews must be employed, if the people would eat, drink, lodge, clothe themselves, or travel abroad; and they are equally needed for the sale of estates, or for obtaining loans in any form. Without them no one can borrow a single ducat, but with them a hundred thousand ducats may be as easily obtained as one. * * * *

The condition of the Jews is a perfect anomaly in the history of mankind. Wherever they appear, they are a "peculiar people." Marvelous indeed is the oneness they discover, clinging as they do, most tenaciously to their race. "I am a Jew," said one of them to Kinneir, "and never can be any thing but a Jew. We never have lost, and never can lose, our national character, by mingling with all nations among whom we have been scattered, and we ought never to lose it. We shall always be a distinct people. We may become Christians, but we can never become Gentiles."

THE BLIND BASKET-MAKER.

A blind girl once carried a considerable sum of money to the clergyman of the place in which she lived, and told him that it was her contribution to missions. The clergyman surprised by the amount, said to her, "you are a poor blind girl, and it is impossible that you can afford to give so much."

"True" replied she, "I am blind, as you see, but perhaps I am not so poor as you suppose. And I think I can show you that I can spare this sum and give it to missions, better than those who see."

The clergyman was surprised at this answer, and said he would be glad to hear how she could prove this.

"I am a kasket-maker," replied the girl, "and I am blind, I can make baskets in the dark just as well as in the light. I am confident that those girls who are not blind, must have spent more than this sum for light during the long evenings of last winter, in order that they might see their work. I am not subjected to this expense, and hence I can give what I have brought for the poor heathen and the missionaries."

DEATH-BED ADVICE OF WALTER SCOTT.—When Walter Scott was dying, he called his son-in-law, Mr. Lockhart, to him, and said:—"Lockhart, I may have but a minute to speak to you. My dear, be a good man—be virtuous—be religious—be a good man. Nothing else will give you any comfort when you come to lie here." The death-bed is a revealer of the heart. No man gives unwise advice or bad counsel here.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 25, 1845.

LAW AND GOSPEL.

NUMBER SEVEN.

Having shown what is the true end of the sabbatic institution, and having also shown its importance, we now undertake to prove, that it could not be fixed on any other day than the seventh day of the week.

The Sabbath is a memorial of creation. But is it a memorial of creation begun, or of creation finished?—of chaotic matter; or of that matter quickened, and rendered prolific by the Spirit of God?—of matter in shapeless confusion; or of that matter reduced to order, adapted to useful ends, beautified, and moulded into such forms, that all the work could be pronounced "very good?" If it were a memorial merely of the fact, that God brought chaotic matter into existence, the first day of the week would undoubtedly be the day appropriate to its celebration. But it commemorates more than this. It speaks out the fact, that Jehovah not only begun his work, but finished it;—that he not only heaped up chaos, but gave it life and shape, and garnished the whole work, so that it should utter forth his own glory. Hence the Sabbath could not be established on the first day of the week. It could not be established, until the whole work was finished. It must, consequently, come after the formation of man, which occupied the sixth day.

But the Sabbath is a memorial not only of the work, which Jehovah performed during six days, but also of the rest which succeeded it. As rest implies previous labor, so God's rest could not take place until his work was done; and as he chose to spend six days in work, it was therefore impossible for his rest to take place before the seventh day. The seventh or last day of the first week of time was the day that God rested. How is it possible for us to commemorate this rest on any other than the seventh day? Would the celebration of the Declaration of Independence in mid-winter be accounted a commemoration of that event? Even a tyro knows better. Will any one therefore undertake to tell us, that the rest of God—that rest which he observed after he had finished his works—may be commemorated on the first day of the week! It cannot be commemorated on any other than the seventh day. The moment you get upon any other day, you are celebrating something else than the rest or Sabbath of "the Lord thy God."

In celebrating the rest of Jehovah, we celebrate his work also; because rest implies previous work. Therefore Jehovah sanctified and set apart for man the rest-day, so that in its observance there might be an open and decided acknowledgement of him as the wise, powerful, and good Creator and Maker of all things. How clear, how evident it is, that God has sanctified—not a seventh part of time—but the seventh day of the week!

In face of the perfect transparency of the fourth commandment, which so unequivocally requires the observance of the last day of the week, there are men who pretend, that it may be obeyed by keeping the first day! Nay, with an infatuation that makes even our children stare, they claim that what they call the memorial of Christ's resurrection, is the same institution which God sanctified as the Sabbath at the beginning!! We are amazed at such effrontery; and when we see it practiced over and over again by titled doctors, who profess to have made this law their study, our soul is distressed. "We seek to know this, but it is too painful for us; until we go into the sanctuary of God." There we understand, that times and laws are given into the hand of the little horn, "until a time and times and the dividing of time." Dan. 7: 25.

In view of what we have offered upon the fourth commandment, is it not evident, that it recognizes the very same relation, which all the other commandments recognize? Wherefore, if the nature of Moral Law be, that it is founded in the relation of creatures to Creator, it necessarily includes the law of the Sabbath.

But some think, that they discover a marked difference between this law and the other precepts of the Decalogue. From scholastic theology they have learned something about positive institutions, which they suppose to be quite distinct in their nature from moral precepts. The Sabbath is, in their opinion, one of these positive institutions; and on this account they feel bold to set it aside, as not necessarily belonging to the moral law.

But what is the difference between a positive and a moral duty? If "the notion of a moral precept is, an obligation dictated by reason, and discoverable by the light of nature," as some maintain, we deny that the notion is correct. For, as we have shown in a former number, (No. 3,) human reason not being able by searching to find out God's nature, must therefore be altogether unable to determine what duties are fit and suitable to that nature. Reason CANNOT excogitate the duties of the Moral Law; for this law necessarily takes cognizance of God's nature;—a nature which no finite mind can comprehend. Hence the duties that are suitable to it, can be known only from revelation. It is only to some small and partial extent, that the moral code is ascertainable by reason;—to an extent just sufficient to leave men without excuse.

Let it be proved ever so satisfactorily, therefore, that the Sabbath is not discoverable by reason, still the marked difference between it and other duties of the Moral Law, is not thereby established.

If we take another distinction that is sometimes made, viz: that "moral duties are those, the reasons of which we see, while positive duties are those, the reasons of which we do not see,"—our inquiry will prove somewhat more satisfactory. The other duties of the Decalogue are enjoined, and though no particular reason be offered why we should obey them, we discover from the light of nature, and from our own innate constitution, that there are good reasons for doing so. But the Sabbath being enjoined, we see no reason from these sources why we should keep it; and we wait to know the reason; which is found in the fact, that God rested on the seventh day from all his works, and therefore blessed it, and sanctified it;—a reason, which we could not have excogitated ourselves.

Let it be granted, then, that there is a difference between the fourth commandment and the other precepts of the Decalogue—a difference marked in the manner now indicated—does it therefore follow, that this commandment is no longer obligatory? We deny that this conclusion follows: for,

1. It is a conclusion which is not taught in the Bible.

2. It is a legal maxim, that "as long as the reason of a law remains, the law itself remains." The reason of the sabbatic law now remains, and has all the force that it had when the law was first given.

3. The evident design of all positive institutions forbids the conclusion. Their design is to promote a more perfect conformity to the systems, to which they respectively belong. For example, Christianity is a system, to which it is desirable there should be as perfect a conformity as possible. In order to this, certain positive institutions—Baptism and the Lord's Supper—are connected with it, which remind one of the great facts, upon which the system is based; and by thus strengthening his faith in the reality and authenticity of the system, his conformity to it is rendered more perfect. The like remark might be made concerning the influence of the positive institutions connected with Judaism.

Now Natural Religion, or the Moral Law, has also its positive institution, which is just as necessary to the system, in order to promote a more perfect conformity to it, as Baptism and the Supper are to the system of christianity; or, as the Passover is to the system of Judaism. For it is an institution, which, by reminding us of the great fact, on which the system of Natural Religion is based, viz. the work of creation—strengthens our faith in it.

Hence it appears, that if the system, to which this positive institution belongs, is binding, the institution itself is binding. The positive institutions of Judaism are abrogated—not because they are positive, but—because the system itself is abrogated. But the system of Natural Religion is as binding as Christianity;—nay, binding antecedently to Christianity;—and if it had not been, and were not still binding, Christianity would be without meaning. *

WHO ARE THE ANABAPTISTS?—A statement is going the rounds of the papers, that the somewhat celebrated Mr. Newman, when he went from the English to the Romish Church, was re-baptized. The Romanists, it is said, do not deny the validity of the "Anglican rite," but advise re-baptism on the ground that the English clergy are so careless in administering the rite, that there is no knowing whether it is duly performed. Now it is well known, that the old Baptists denied that sprinkling was baptism, and therefore when a person who had been sprinkled wished to join them, they required him to be baptized; hence they were called by the Romanists Ana-baptists. The Romanists, on the other hand, admit that the rite of baptism as administered in the English church is valid, and yet they re-baptize those who come over to them from that church. In such circumstances, it is no longer a question, Who are the Anabaptists?

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF SLAVES.—Some months ago, this subject attracted considerable attention in South Carolina, and circulars were forwarded to planters and others in different parts of the slave States, for the purpose of collecting information respecting the actual state of things. The answers to these circulars have been published in a neat pamphlet form, and present some interesting facts. The Episcopal Methodists, it seems, have a larger number of colored communicants than any other denomination in the slave-holding States, the number belonging to that body being computed at 160,000. The Baptist denomination has the next largest number, and even the largest number in proportion to the white members. The Baptists have more colored churches, and more colored preachers, than all the other denominations put together. The Sunbury Association, on the sea-board of Georgia, has 4,444 colored members, and only 495 white members. It has seven colored churches, four ordained colored ministers, and employs two white missionaries to the negroes. Of the 60,000 members of Baptist churches in the State of Georgia, 45,000 are negroes. In view of such facts, surely Baptists ought to be free from prejudice against color.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.—A friend in Western New York, who sends us the names of several new subscribers, says:—"I have not gone out of my way to look up this business; but I am convinced, that there are not more than two-thirds as many of your papers taken by our people here as there ought to be, considering their numbers, their ability, and their need of such a paper in their families. If the interests of the paper did not require it for its support, the disadvantages which the people suffer from their own insensibility on the subject, would be a sufficient argument for a thorough agency to extend the circulation of the Recorder for the good it would do."

THE RT. REV. BISHOP POTTER, of Pennsylvania, met with a fall on Sunday last, by which one of his legs was broken, and some other bruises inflicted.

THE N. Y. CITY TRACT SOCIETY held its Nineteenth Anniversary at the Tabernacle in this city on Wednesday evening of last week. The reports of the different officers were read, and addresses were delivered by several clergymen. The report of the Society states that it sustains fourteen missionaries—one of whom attends to the shipping department; another to the German population, and twelve to the City, some having one ward under their care, and others two. The average number of visiters has been 1042; 848,571 Tracts have been distributed; 948 Bibles and 405 Testements supplied to the destitute; 1963 children gathered into Sunday and 309 into public schools; 168 persons gathered into Bible classes and 1862 induced to attend church; 1012 temperance pledges obtained; 1530 district prayer-meetings held; 35 backsliders reclaimed; 197 converted, and 135 converts united with evangelical churches.

SUNDAY LEGISLATION—NO. 1.

On the third and fourth instant, a Convention of the friends of the observance of Sunday for a Sabbath, called by a Committee of nine from the "Philadelphia Sabbath Association," assembled in the Musical Fund Hall—the number of delegates being 1159. The object of the movers in this Convention was to influence the State Legislature to pass other laws than those which already exist, to enforce the observance of the first day of the week, as is declared in the following preamble and resolutions, prepared and reported by the Commitee on Business, of which Judge Parsons was Chairman:—

"Believing that a proper observance of the Christian Sabbath is eminently calculated to promote the comfort and happiness of mankind in all their relations in life, and tends to the general tranquility of society, which with the blessing of God is also instrumental in fitting and preparing immortal beings for a more glorious inheritance hereafter, we deem it the duty of all whose benevolence prompts them to endeavor to ameliorate the condition of their fellow men, to exert the most effective means in their power for the accomplishment of objects so desirable. We likewise entertain the opinion, that every class of our fellow-citizens should be placed in circumstances, by the operation of general laws in the Commonwealth, so that all may enjoy those benign influences which flow from a sacred observance of the Lord's day. An object like this we think can never be obtained, while one portion of our citizens are permitted (perhaps under the sanction of legislative enactments) to prosecute their business extensively upon the Sabbath, thereby requiring those in their employ to perform servile labor on this sacred day, or be deprived of their place of employment if prompted by an intelligent conscience to refuse to work on the same; and this too, when others, known to have business equally extensive and pressing, are required by statutory laws now in force to abstain from a prosecution of any business on the Sabbath, and can make no such requisition on laborers in their employ.

We also believe, that while one class of citizens in the community are permitted to hold offices of honor and profit, and abstain from the performance of any duty on the Lord's day, (as they should, in obedience to Divine command,) it is unjust that another class of men holding other official stations equally responsible and important to the public, should be compelled, either by custom, or in obedience to law, to perform their official duties upon the Sabbath, or else, in cases where the incumbent, from convictions of conscience, declines acting on that holy day, he is compelled to resign the station which he fills with credit to himself and satisfaction to the public.

In the opinion of this Convention, all rules of society which operate with such manifest injustice among men, advancing the interest of some, oppressing the laborer, whose life is one of unceasing toil, and often driving from highly responsible stations the virtuous and the good, can never be long entertained when deliberately reflected upon by an enlightened community.

1. Therefore, Resolved, That we believe a faithful observance of the Lord's day, is not only in obedience to the commands of God, but is highly beneficial to the moral, social, and physical condition of man, and ensures the general tranquility of society.

2. Resolved, That we believe our railroads and canals ought not to be used upon the Sabbath, nor should officers under the State government, or in the employ of incorporated companies, be required to do any official act on that day.

3. Resolved, That our members of the Senate and House of Representatives, from the city and county of Philadelphia, be requested to use their influence at the next session of the Legislature, to procure the passage of a law for the discontinuance of the use of railroads and canals in the State on the Lord's day.

4. Resolved, That a committee of — be appointed to prepare a memorial to the Legislature, on the subject embraced in the foregoing resolutions, and also to correspond with the friends of the Christian Sabbath in other counties of the State, on the same subject.

5. Resolved, That this Convention cordially approve of the regard paid to the observance of the Sabbath by the House of Representatives of our State, at its last session, in closing their Hall on the Lord's day.

6. Resolved, That the industrious in the State who are dependent upon their daily labors for the support of themselves and families, and from the unreasonable demands of their employers are required to labor upon the Lord's day, have our deepest sympathy, and the assurance that we will use all proper means to relieve them from their unfortunate condition.

7. Resolved, That while the command of God is a sufficient, and should be the controlling motive for the universal cessation of secular affairs on the Sabbath, yet we rejoice to find that evidence of the most convincing character can be adduced to show that business supposed to require labor on the Sabbath, can be conducted with equal if not greater success, by resting on that day, and the attention of those engaged in the business of transportation is particularly invited to the official statements before this Convention."

These resolutions were taken up in order for consideration. After a slight debate, the first and second were adopted, and pending a debate which arose about the third, a motion to adjourn till 3 o'clock, P. M., prevailed.

The whole afternoon was taken up in the discussion of the third resolution, many of the members of the Convention affirming, that the law of the State, passed in 1794, is sufficient to cover all the objects sought by the friends of Sunday-keeping, if properly enforced, and others deprecating an appeal to legislative authority to promote a moral reform; the subject was therefore laid over to the next day.

An evening session being held, the fourth resolution was called up, when Judge Parsons moved to amend, by striking out all after the word "Resolved," and inserting as follows:—

"That a committee of nine be appointed to prepare a memorial to our Legislature, asking for the passage of a law, absolving all individuals in the employment of the State, on our railroads and canals, from the performance of any official acts, work, or labor, on the Lord's day—endeavor to procure the signatures of persons friendly to the object, and also to correspond with the friends of the Christian Sabbath, throughout the State, upon the subject."

The amendment was adopted, and after a lengthy discussion of the resolution as amended, the subject was postponed until to-morrow morning.

The Convention having assembled at 10 o'clock A. M., after the preliminary business was gone through, considerable discussion followed upon the fourth resolution, that being the order of the day, when, the Convention not being agreed upon the measure it contemplated, it was laid upon the table, and the third resolution again called up, which, after much debate and a variety of propositions for amendments and substitutes, was also laid upon the table.

The fifth, sixth and seventh resolutions, were then taken up and unanimously adopted.

Rev. Dr. Durbin, with a view to harmonize the conflicting views of members of the Convention, in reference to the third and fourth resolutions, proposed the following as an amendment to the Report of the Committee—being, in fact, a substitution for the third and fourth resolutions, just laid upon the table.

"Resolved, That in the opinion of this Convention, the provisions of the act to relieve canal and railroad companies from penalties for not performing certain acts on the Sabbath day, passed 11th of April, 1845, should be extended to the officers and agents on the lines of the public canals and railroads of the Commonwealth, and that we recommend to the citizens of the County to prepare memorials for this purpose to the Legislature, praying that the said law way be so extended."

Rev. Dr. Bethune opposed any such appeal to the Legislature from a Convention of this character. He was opposed, as a Christian man, to calling in the aid of law for the enforcement of religious duties. As a minister of the Gospel, he never could use any other instrument than truth for the accomplishment of Christian purposes. He would resist any attempt at interference with his religious privileges by the Legislature; and nothing was more to be deprecated than any such interference with the view to promote the objects contemplated by this Convention. There is also danger that in grasping at the shadow of something in this matter, we may lose the substance already in our possession—that in bringing the subject in this way before the Legislature, we may destroy the effect of the law of 1794. For the sake of the Sabbath itself—for the sake of the influence which the proceedings of this Convention may have upon the world—he hoped that farther progress on this question might be here arrested.

Rev. Mr. McCalla was opposed to excommunicating the Legislature—he was opposed to saying to them, that we will have nothing to do with them. He cited precedents to show that applications from ecclesiastical to legislative bodies, were no new things; and contended that this Convention had a perfect right to petition the Legislature, and sustained his position by sundry happy allusions to scripture history.

Rev. Mr. Brainerd replied to the arguments of Dr. Bethune, and forcibly and eloquently advocated the passage of the resolution.

At this state of the proceedings, a motion prevailed to adjourn till 3 o'clock P. M.

Met pursuant to adjournment, and on motion of Judge Parsons, the Convention agreed to proceed to the consideration of the amendment of Rev. Dr. Durbin to the Report of the Committee on the Arrangement of Business, but it was soon after postponed, to enable Mr. Ashmead to submit the following preamble and resolutions:—

"Whereas, it is generally known, that most of the daily papers in this city, are in the habit of violating the Sabbath, by the devotion of a large portion of the day to labor, and believing that the citizens of Philadelphia in no wise require of the proprietors of newspapers, and those connected with their establishments, to forego any of the sacred privileges of rest from labor on that day, which they themselves enjoy—therefore

Resolved, That a Committee of three be appointed to confer with the proprietors of the daily press, and ascertain how many, if any of them, are willing to abandon Sabbath labor.

Resolved, That in the judgment of this Convention, it is the duty of every individual who believes that the Sabbath ought to be observed by an entire abstinence from worldly labor, to refuse to subscribe for, or advertize in any newspapers which are published by proprietors who refuse to dispense with labor in their offices on the Sabbath." [Postponed indefinitely.] * * * * *

The consideration of Dr. Dubin's amendment to the Report of the Business Committee, was then resumed. A lengthy and very animated debate ensued, in which Rev. Messrs. Bingham, Durbin, Longmore, Chambers, Dennis, Bethune, McCalla, Cooper, Brainerd, Boardman, Kennard, Hodgson, Judge Parsons, Messrs. Cummings, Bradford, J. A. Brown, Ashmead, Chur, Walborn, Patterson, Stuart, Abbott, Cornman, Dock, Livensetter, and Sloanaker participated.

The first clause of the amendment was adopted by a nearly unanimous vote. The second clause was opposed by several, with great earnestness; and Rev. Mr. Cooper, with a view to test the feeling of the Convention, moved to lay it on the table. The motion was negatived—105 to 31.

Rev. Dr. Bethune then moved the following substitute for this clause:—

"Resolved, That this Convention, grateful for the good which has so far and so emphatically crowned the efforts of the friends of the Sabbath, will continue to trust to the Divine blessing for such an enlightenment of public sentiment, as will carry forward the great cause of sanctifying the holy Sabbath to all classes within the bounds of this Commonwealth, and throughout the land."

A lengthy debate ensued on this motion, and Dr. Boardman finally moved to lay both the amendment of Dr. Bethune and the second clause of the resolution of Dr. Durbin, to which it was intended as a substitute, on the table. The motion was negatived, 72 to 37.

The previous question was here called for, and ordered by the Convention, and the resolution of Dr. Durbin, in its original form, was adopted by a vote of 93 to 27.

The following, offered by Dr. Bethune, was ordered to be entered on the Minutes, as expressing the views of the minority:—

"The resolution offered by Dr. Bethune, was distinctly understood to express the views of gentlemen voting against the latter part of Dr. Durbin's resolution, as to the means which they are conscientiously justified in using as members of this Convention, they considering themselves to be assembled as delegates from Christian Churches, yet at the same time heartily desiring that no person be required to perform secular service during the Sabbath day, on the public works, or in any other way."

The following was also ordered, by a vote of the Convention, to be entered on the Minutes:—

"The Convention deem no other reply to the foregoing paper necessary, than the simple declaration that they consider themselves only as a civil, and not as an ecclesiastical body."

Rev. Joseph T. Cooper offered the following resolution, which was adopted:—

"Resolved, That in the opinion of this Convention, the friends of the Sabbath should encourage editors and proprietors of newspapers in their laudable efforts to conduct their establishments without an infringement upon the sacred hours of the Sabbath."

The following resolution was also adopted:—

"Resolved, That this Convention has heard with deep regret the fact that the Sabbath is so extensively desecrated in our city and suburbs; that those who suffer directly from this desecration have our deepest sympathy; and that we recommend to the ministers of the several churches of our city and districts, and the citizens generally, that they will use their efforts and influence to promote a more strict observance of the Sabbath."

Resolutions of thanks to the officers of the Convention, and trustees of the church, were adopted, and at about 11 o'clock P. M., the Convention adjourned sine die. Prayer by Rev. Dr. Bethune.

—Thus has ended another strong effort to secure for Sunday-keeping, what its advocates have neither truth nor moral power to accomplish without it, in a nation of men who think for themselves. As Sabbath-keepers, we have no sympathy with any efforts to enforce the observance of Sunday by legislative enactments. We would, however, chronicle all passing events which have an important bearing for or against the observance of GOD'S holy Sabbath; believing that we are called to bear testimony against so gross a perversion of divine truth, as is involved in the substitution of this "human institution," for that holy institution which Jehovah himself observed and enjoined upon mankind. Like all other human substitutes for divine appointments, Sunday-keeping is subversive of the original design of the Sabbath, and injurious to the cause of truth; and, as we shall attempt to show in a subsequent number, the efforts that are now being made to enforce its observance are religiously and politically wrong. THE YOUTH'S CABINET.—This popular periodical for the young has recently passed into new hands, and been changed from a semi-monthly quarto into a beautiful monthly magazine. The number for January, being the first of the new series, comes to us with 32 large octavo pages, printed on fine paper, with entire new type, and embellished with numerous elegant engravings. It has also a beautiful cover, and a steel vignette title-page which is really one of the prettiest things of the kind we have seen. Its present Editor is Rev. FRANCIS C. WOODWORTH, who has already shown himself admirably qualified for the office. Its publisher, D. Austin Woodworth, we are certain, from this specimen of his workmanship, is a man of ingenuity and taste. We do not know of a better Christmas Gift for a youth, than a year's subscription to the Youth's Cabinet. Terms $1 per annum, or 10 cents a single number. Address Rev. Francis C. Woodworth, Clinton Hall, 135 Nassau st., N. Y.

Mr. JUDSON, the Baptist missionary, has recently received intelligence of the death of a son whom he left in the care of friends in Burmah. He is also himself suffering from sickness, which has prevented his fulfilling several of his appointments.

The receipts of the American Colonization Society for the month of November amounted to the sum of seventeen thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven dollars.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

In the SENATE, considerable time was spent last week in a debate on Oregon, California, etc. Resolutions were under discussion and passed unanimously, to inquire into the state of our national defences, upon which several very warlike speeches were made. Notice was given of a bill to organize a United States government over Oregon. The Senate elected Messrs. Ritchie & Heiss their printers. On Thursday, a joint resolution was introduced, and read for the first time, advising the President of the United States, forthwith to give notice to the Government of Great Britain, that the Government of the United States will, in virtue of the second article of the Convention of the 6th August, 1827, relative to the joint occupancy of Oregon Territory, and after the expiration of twelve months from the day on which such notice shall have been received by the Government of Great Britain, annul and abrogate that Convention. The Senate adjourned over from Thursday until Monday.

—In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, great numbers of petitions, numerously signed, were presented from a majority of the States against the annexation of Texas as a Slave State. A memorial was presented from ex-Governor Ellsworth, and 208 other citizens of Hartford, Ct., praying Congress to submit propositions to other Governments for a Congress of Nations.

The special order of the day for Tuesday was the Resolutions on the admission of Texas. After considerable debate upon points of order, and consequent confusion, the final vote was taken, and the joint resolution passed by the House, "That the State of Texas shall be one of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever." Yeas 141; Nays 56.

The Naturalization Laws were under consideration in the House, and there was plenty of debate, but no action on the subject. A Bill was also introduced to protect American citizens residing in the Oregon Territory.

Mr. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, introduced a series of resolutions, which were laid over for debate, to the effect that the differences between the United States and Great Britain on the subject of Oregon, are still a subject of negociation and compromise; that it would be dishonorable to this age and both nations if a war should grow out of the question; and that if no other mode of adjustment remains, a resort to arbitration should be had.

The House adjourned on Friday till Monday.

FOREIGN NEWS—15 DAYS LATER.

The steamship Acadia, which reached Boston on Friday last, brought advices from Liverpool to the 4th inst.

The news is important in many respects, and more particularly as it exhibits the general feeling in England with respect to the settlement of the Oregon question. The desire seems to be for peace, and it is hoped that no serious consequences will be realized. Notwithstanding this hope, it cannot be disguised that the warlike tone of American journals respecting the claims of the United States to the whole of the Oregon Territory had aroused the British press and Government. The former had come out boldly, declared that Great Britain could not and must not under any circumstances, relinquish her rights in this territory, while the latter, in the shape of Cabinet Councils, had, instead of opening the ports, as was expected, for the admission of foreign grain, been very active, according to report, in preparing for war. The greatest activity prevailed at all the dockyards, and immense warlike preparations were being made—such as had not been known for many years.

The President's Message was looked for with the greatest anxiety. It was argued that upon the sentiments contained in this document depended the chances of war or peace between Great Britain and the United States.

Lord John Russel has come out in favor of a repeal of the Corn Laws, and Lord Morpeth has joined the League.

The failure of the potatoe crop in Ireland, the rapid decay of potatoes in that country, and the threatened famine there, were subjects which alarmed not only Ireland, but England.

Ireland.

The potatoe disease, the threatened famine, and Repeal, are the three great topics which occupy attention in Ireland.

The Irish farmers are, in many districts, withholding their grain in the markets, in the hopes of a considerable advance in its price. Many of them are raising money on usurious terms to meet their engagements, while not a few plead the potatoe disease and the low prices to their creditors, as sufficient excuses for time.

The accounts are conflicting respecting the potatoe crop. Some journals say that the crop is an average one—other journals admit this statement to be correct, but assert that nearly the whole crop will be destroyed, before Christmas, by the rot, or disease that has attacked the potatoes.

At the weekly meeting of the Repeal Association, on the 24th ult., nothing of particular importance transpired. The weekly rent was £158. At the Repeal meeting on the 1st inst., Mr. Fitsgerald, M. P., took the Chair. The rent, including large sums from New Brunswick, was £262. Mr. Smith O'Brien's speech was a warlike harangue about England and the United States.

France.

The French Journals are discussing the present position of England and America, and the summary of their opinions seems to be, that the row between John Bull and his cousin Jonathan is "a family quarrel, which will end as family quarrels generally do, in kissing and hugging. Almost all intelligent men, however, are of opinion that, be the consequences what they may, England will not recede from the position she has taken up.

Some sensation has been created in the fashionable world by the suicide of the Duc de Saulx-Tavanues, peer of France, and head of one of the most ancient and principal families of France. Losses in the Bourse were falsely said to be the cause of that rash act; the real reason is understood to have been the rejection of his alliance by an English lady.

Poland.

Several arrests were effected in the kingdom of Poland, more especially in Warsaw and its vicinity, on account of the discovery of an extensive conspiracy. A plot in Posen had its origin in Warsaw. In addition to the keys for entering the powder magazine, and the Government Treasury, the conspirators had secured the means of admittance to the fortifications, which it was intended to blow up. The peasantry around Posen were to unite with those of Poland, and civil war would have blazed forth in all its fury. The conspiracy was discovered and frustrated.

New Zealand.

Intelligence has been received, via Bombay, of a third repulse sustained by the British troops in New Zealand. The official account of the disaster is contained in a despatch from Colonel Despare commanding the 99th regiment, to Governor Fitzroy, dated July 2nd, from the camp before Heke's Pah (or stockade.) From this despatch it appears that the repulse occurred in an attempt made to carry the fortified position of Heke; the loss of the British troops was very severe; one-third of the men actually engaged fell in the attact. Amongst the casualities are three officers killed and three wounded.

Miscellaneous.

The King of Prussia has issued a circular protesting strongly against reports that he was favorable to the emigration of Prussians to the United States. He is strongly opposed to such emigration, recommending the people to stay at home, telling them they can find occupation enough in the Western provinces.

The new religion of Ronge continues to make progress in all directions. The church of Rome, now thoroughly frightened, is taking measures to oppose it.

The Russian government has issued another ukase against the Jews—forbidding them to sell wine or spirits in the empire.

The names of several divines are published as having seceeded from the Protestant to the Roman Catholic Chnrch. It is expected that Dr. Pusey will abstain entering the Roman priesthood, but will become a lay member of it.

Two or three suicides have lately been committed by parties who have been driven to the act by their pecuniary embarrassment arising from railway speculation.

During recent violent tempests off the coast of Norway, eleven pilots lost their lives in attempting to board vessels in want of their aid.

A house, near Westminster Abbey, in which Coxton printed his first book, fell down the other day to the great consternation of the inhabitants.

The birth-place of Sir Walter Scott, in College Wynd, Edinburgh, is now a public house.

It appears from a recent discovery, that Shakspear's widow, after his death, married a man named James.

The packet ship Joshua Bates arrived at Liverpool in less than 15 days, the shortest passage on record, says the Liverpool Times, for a ship under canvass.

ARREST OF ALEXANDER J. TIRRELL.—This individual, charged with the murder of Maria A. Bickford, at Boston, has at length been arrested, after all hopes were given up, as it was supposed he had left the country. A police officer in New Orleans obtained information by a private letter, that he had embarked for that city under the name of Dennis. He immediately laid the facts before the Recorder, and obtaining the assistance of officer Trescazes, chartered a pilot boat and set sail for the Gulf. They boarded several vessels, but could not find the name of William Dennis among the list of passengers, and began to think their information was incorrect.

At last a vessel hove in sight, and on nearing her she proved to be the ship Sultana from New York. They boarded her, and upon inquiring of the Captain whether he had a passenger named Dennis, received an affirmative reply—but neither he, the mate, nor any one else, could tell which of the passengers was Dennis. Mr. Bowditch, a Custom House officer, being aboard, called the roll of the passengers; when the name of Dennis was called, a good-looking man, in a rough blue pilot-cloth suit, with a glazed cap on his head, stepped out. Youennes said, "Sir, I want you." "What for?" inquired Dennis. "There is no occasion for any conversation; I suspect you know," replied Youennes. "Have you got a warrant?" inquired Dennis. "Yes!" was the reply. "Let me see it." "Here it is," said Y., producing it and handing it to him; "are you satisfied?" "Yes."

There was nothing found upon his person but a revolving pistol, with every barrel loaded and capped. His trunk contained nothing at all. On the way up he endeavored to jump overboard, but was prevented by the officers. He has since his arrival in the city maintained the most gloomy silence, scarcely answering the officers who have occasion to address him, and passing the whole of the day in a lethargic state.

OPPOSITION RAILROAD.—An opposition project to the Utica and Schenectady Railroad has been started, and the Argus states that application will be made to the Legislature, at its next session, for an act to incorporate a company with two millions five hundred thousand dollars, to construct a railroad between the cities of Schenectady and Utica, to be run upon the South side of the Mohawk, so far as the directors shall, after actual survey, deem practicable and proper; or for an act authorising the Schenectady and Troy Railroad Company to such road, and increasing its capital therefor, two millions five hundred thousand dollars. The road to be laid with an iron rail, no part of which shall weigh less than 60 pounds to the yard."

THE "BLACK LAWS" OF OHIO.—A late number of the Cleveland Herald contains a sermon preached in that city on Thanksgiving day, Nov. 20th, by Rev. S. C. Aiken, a popular and faithful clergyman of that place. Mr. A. instead of a phillippic against the sins of either ancient or modern Rome, the Hindoos, or any other far off nation, appears to have complied with the injunction of a trite and pithy maxim, and "looked at home"—or, to use a figure of the good Book, has sought to "pull the beam out of" the eyes of his own immediate constituents. The subject of his address was the Laws of Ohio in respect to colored people—better known as the 'Black Laws'—which have so long been suffered to stand as a foul blot upon the statute books of the State.

SINGULAR.—We mentioned recently the sudden death of John W. Ramsey, a clerk for Mr. W. Warner, No 286 Bowery, concerning which we have since learned some very singular circumstances. The young man was taken ill about 6 o'clock in the evening last Saturday, and a dose of peppermint and brandy was given him, which in similar attacks had proved beneficial. He soon fell into an apparent sleep, in which state he remained till 3 o'clock of the morning, when Mr. Warner retired to bed. At 7 o'clock he was found apparently dead, and so pronounced by Dr. McClellan, who was called to him. On Monday, after an inquest was held, Mr. Warner left the city with the corpse, for Greenville, near Newburg, in this State, the residence of the parents of the deceased. On Sunday the face of the corpse was very much swollen, and his limbs and joints stiffened; but on taking the body from the coffin on Tuesday, the swelling had disappeared, the face had assumed a more natural appearance, and the limbs and joints were as supple as life. Mr. Warner then learned from the parents, that when only 6 years of age, John was supposed to have died from a similar epileptic attack, but strange to relate, while being laid in his coffin preparatory to burial, signs of life were discovered, and he was miraculously resuscitated. A few years after, an aged relative of his, who was pronounced by the physicians to have died in a like fit, after being kept for ten days, was restored to consciousness, and is now enjoying excellent health. The parents fondly entertain the hope that the supposed deceased may again experience a similar resuscitation; at all events, they are determined not to bury him at present. [Tribune.

SUMMARY.

The author of a pamphlet recently published in England, states that the soil of that country which in the year 1775 belonged to about 240,000 proprietors, in 1845 was owned by about 30,000, and that there is every reason to believe that this process of accumulation in the hands of a few, has been going on with fearful rapidity from 1815 to the present time.

A flock of sheep numbering 900, got frightened recently at Rome, in this State, by the locomotive, broke from the pen in which they were confined, and huddled together on the ice near the Sluice Way, at Lynch's Mills. The ice gave way, and some three hundred were drowned.

The Philadelphia American Advocate states that sixteen pairs of twins have recently been born in one of the wards of the city of New London, Conn. No wonder that this city has increased sixty-five per cent in five years.

A subscriber to a paper, in sending his advance subscription money, writes to the editor—"I wish to pay for my paper in advance, for I never like to read an editor's paper as well as I do my own."

The Methodist Christian Advocate states, that a few days ago, as Mr. Craig Vanmeter, of Pittsgrove township, Salem county, N. J., was in the act of descending an old well, in a bucket, the wall caved in both below and above, and buried him at the depth of about 30 feet. The wall caved in about 7 o'clock in the morning; and at 5 o'clock in the afternoon he was found alive and but very little injured, the stones having formed an arch over his head.

The supply of Anthracite coal, which has been brought to market this year from the Pennsylvania mines, now slightly exceeds two millions tons. In 1844, the quantity was 1,631,669 tons; thus we have an increase in favor of the present year of about 400,000 tons. It is estimated that the whole amount of coal, Anthracite and Bituminous, mined in the State the present year, will reach three millions and a half of tons.

We learn from the Pittsburg American, that the Mayor of that city has received from Capt. John Percival, Commander of the U. S. frigate Constitution, in China, the sum of nineteen hundred and fifty dollars, as the contribution of the officers and crew of that vessel in aid of the sufferers by the late disastrous fire in Pittsburg.

The wife of Mr. Morse, member of Congress from Louisiana, was delivered of a son on board the steamer Cincinnatus, while accompanying her husband to Washington. The boy was named Cincinnatus, in honor of the steamer.

A Mrs. Ward, of Richmond county, Ky., recently died at the age of one hundred and eleven years. Mrs. Ward witnessed many of the exciting scenes of the Revolution, and has for many years drawn a pension as the widow of a revolutionary soldier.

It is known that the Audubons, father and son, are getting up a work on the animals of America, similar in execution and as elaborate in detail as the great work of the elder Audubon, on the birds of America.

The Massachusetts Ploughman states that from Boston to the single town of Roxbury, there now run hourly, twelve coaches, capable of carrying from 20 to 30 passengers. The number of horses on this route alone is about 125. If Boston had continued without railways it could not support so many omnibuses.

Large fires are raging in different parts of Arkansas, Kentucky, and Tennessee, among the grass, cane and undergrowth—the smell of which renders traveling by some of the roads unplesant and sometimes painful.

Mr. Joseph Kay, of Camden county, West Jersey, came to his end in a singular manner recently. He went into his stable with a lantern, which so frightened his two mules that they rushed upon him and trampled him to death.

A colored woman was found dead in the streets of Portland on the morning of the 12th. She had frozen to death the night before, while in a state of intoxication. Who did the deed, Mr. Rumseller?

An Indian lately obtained entrance to a house in Cincinnati occupied by a lady named Honneby, who, hearing a noise, sprang from her bed and beat the depredator out of the house with a poker.

No man or woman is fully educated, if not accustomed to manual labor. Whatever accomplishments they possess, whatever their mental training, a deduction must be made for ignorance of that important chapter of the world's great book.

The Chinese have the art of dwarfing trees, and will cultivate a pear or apple tree, perfect in all its parts, and yet not exceeding a foot in height; and what is still more strange, they will raise from them at pleasure, fruit either of the usual size, or of a size proportioned to the diminished growth of the tree.

JESSE E. DOW, one of the editors of the Washington U. S. Journal, is on trial upon an action for false imprisonment brought against him by a free colored man.

We noticed in our last that on Tuesday no less than five hundred and twenty-three emigrants, principally from Germany, had arrived, and we thought this a goodly number; but on the day following no less than eight hundred and fifty-one came in, a great portion of them embarking at Bremen and Havre. There is room for them in Texas and the West. [N. O. Pic. Nov. 28th.

A few nights since (says the Globe,) a gentleman living in the Third Ward found three children under 13 years of age sleeping in an old box, near Washington Market. Like dozens of others, they picked up a living as they best could by running errands, carrying baggage, &c. and at night they crawled into some box of pile of straw to sleep.

An affray took place at Vicksburgh, Ohio, a few days since, at a tavern, which resulted in the murder of John Biscoe, Esq. a planter, by a barkeeper named Garret. Mr. Biscoe, it is said, was formerly a member of the Senate from Louisiana.

A gentleman connected with Lake Navigation stated yesterday that of his own individual knowledge he knew of eighty persons who had lost their lives on the Lakes since the opening of navigation in the spring.

The President's Message was expressed from Wheeling to Cincinnati, a distance of 250 miles, in 15 hours, 45 minutes.

There are some stores on Foster's Wharf, Boston, which are covered with BRICK in the place of slates? The roofs are double boarded, then covered with tarred paper laid on with hot pitch, shingle fashion, three thicknesses, or separate layers. The bricks are embedded in hot pitch, which rises between the joints and meets a coat of sand, forming a solid mass, which has much the appearance of a sidewalk. The bricks are an inch and a quarter in thickness. There can be no doubt of those buildings being fire-proof, we should imagine!

The New York Baptist Recorder contains a notice of a revival at Cross River, N. Y. Up to the 3d ult. there had been about 40 conversions. The work is powerful, and the conversions very clear. The ages of the converts are from 12 to 50 years, and they are from the most intelligent and influential families.

The Presbyterian of the West states that there are about 2,000 colored persons in Cincinnati, who own real estate, besides other property, which is valued at $150,000. They have recently established a paper entitled "The Colored Citizen," which is said to be edited with considerable ability.

Curran, the impassionate and brilliant Irish orator, said—"The only inheritance I could boast of from my poor father, was the very scanty one of an unattractive face and person, like his own, and if the world has ever attributed to me something more valuable than face or person, or than earthly wealth, it was because another and a dearer parent gave me a fortune from the treasures of her mind."

HEATHEN SUBSCRIBERS.—A Sandwich Island paper says that for a whole year it had but one delinquent subscriber. Will some of our subscribers just compare their remissness in this respect, with the promptness of the heathen?—British Colonist.

MARRIED,

In Westerly, R. I., on the 8th inst., by Eld. Daniel Coon, Mr. GEORGE A. LANPHEAR and Miss ANGELINE CLARKE, all of Westerly.

DIED,

In Hounsfield, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the 25th of August, 1845, Mrs. LUCY MAXSON, wife of Benjamin Maxson, aged 44 years. About five weeks previous to her death she was violently attacked with a disease of the stomach, which baffled the skill of the best physicians, and terminated in her dissolution. Although her sickness was exceedingly painful, she endured it with Christian fortitude and resignation. Death released her from bodily suffering to which she had been subject for several years.

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 9th inst., of a cancer, Mr. JONATHAN BURDICK. Bro. Burdick made a public profession of religion in early life, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Newport, R. I. Subsequently he removed to Hopkinton, and joined the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in that place, of which he remained a member until his death, which he met with joy and gratitude. Although his disease was at times painful in the extreme, yet divine grace enabled him to endure patiently unto the end, when we trust he was taken from sorrow and pain to the joys of the church triumphant.

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

The 2d Semi-Annual Session of the Central Association will be held with the first church in Verona, on the third and fourth days of the week, Jan. 6th and 7th, 1846. Introductory discourse by Eld. G. M. Langworthy, or Eld. Elias Burdick, his alternate. There will be two Essays or Tracts presented for examination. One on Communion, the other on Baptism. All Missionaries employed by the Association will then make their reports, and farther action will be taken relative to Missionary Operations. The subject of obtaining legal protection in the enjoyment of the Sabbath, from the Legislature, will probably come before the Association. The Agent of the American and Foreign Bible Society has given notice that he will be present, and with leave will present the claims of that Society. A full attendance is very desirable.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
IRA SAYLES, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics
GURDON EVANS, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. HARTSHORN, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. STILLMAN, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. MAXSON, Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

President of the Board of Trustees

Miscellany.

THE DAUGHTER'S REQUEST.

My father, thou hast not the tale denied;
They say that, ere noon to-morrow,
Thou wilt bring back a radiant and smiling bride
To our lonely house of sorrow.
I should wish thee joy of thy coming bliss,
But tears are my words suppressing,—
I think on my mother's dying kiss
And my mother's parting blessing.

Yet to-morrow I hope to hide my care,
I will still my bosom's beating,
And strive to give to thy chosen fair
A kind and courteous greeting.
She will heed me not in the joyous pride
Of her pomp, and friends and beauty.
Ah! little need has a new-made bride
Of a daughter's quiet duty.

Thou gavest her costly gems. they say,
When thy heart first fondly sought her:
Dear father, one nuptial gift, I pray,
Bestow on thy weeping daughter.
My eye, even now, on the treasure falls
I covet and ask no other;—
It has hung for years on our ancient walls:
'Tis the portrait of my mother.

To-morrow, when all is in festal guise,
And the guests our rooms are filling,
The calm, meek gaze of those hazel eyes
Might thy soul with grief be thrilling;
And a gloom on thy marriage-banquet cast,
Sad thoughts of their owner giving,
For a fleeting twelvemonth scarce has passed
Since she mingled with the living.

If thy bride should weary or offend,
That portrait might waken feelings
Of the love of thy fond departed friend,
And its sweet and kind revealings;
Of her mind's commanding force uncheck'd
By feeble or selfish weakness,
Of her speech, where dazzling intellect
Was softened by Christian meekness.

Then, father, grant that at once, to-night,
Ere the bridal crowd's intrusion,
I remove this portrait from thy sight
To my chamber's still seclusion.
It will nerve me to-morrow's dawn to bear,
It will beam on me protection,
When I ask of Heav'n in my faltering prayer
To hallow thy new connexion.

Thou wilt waken, father, in pride and glee,
To renew the ties once broken,
But nought upon earth remains to me
Save this sad and silent token.
The husband's tears may be few and brief,
He may woo and win another,
But the daughter clings in unchanging grief
To the image of her mother.

MOUNT VESUVIUS.

The Editor of the "Savannah Georgian" gives a minute description of the crater, &c., in the following letter from Naples, under date of February 7th.

"Naples and its environs contain several royal palaces, enough of them to impoverish a nation. The town palace is a massive structure, without much pretension to beauty of general design, though some of the rooms are said to be elegant. There is another palace at Portici, which is inferior to the others, and never occupied. Then comes the palace of Cesso di Monte, in a most delightful position. It is poorly furnished, though it contains many large pictures which serve to fill up the vacant walls.—The structure itself is a noble one, and it has on one side a very beautiful park, not unlike the grounds around Shoenbrunn.—The most magnificent of all the palaces, however, is that of Cacesta, about sixteen miles from Naples. It stands in a noble plain, which is bounded on one side by the snow-covered mountains of the Abonzzi.—The palace is an enormous pile, all unfurnished, and exhibits another instance of the mad passion for castle building, to which most Kings seem subject. Its exterior presents a large quadrangle, but when you go inside, you find there are four distinct courts, all of which are visible from the central portico. The staircase is one of the finest in the world. Nothing can exceed its simple and grand beauty, with the frescoes representing the seasons, &c., above. It conducts to a vestibule of the finest white marble, supported on eight clusters of columns of breccia as handsome as that in the Representatives' chamber at Washington.

As you look from the palace towards the mountains, you see a succession of lakes and water-falls terminating in what appears to be a column composed of the fanciful figures of Dolphins, Neireids, Tritons, &c. This is the white foam of cascade, which is made to tumble down the rocks. It is one mile and a half distant from the palace, and the deception is complete. This water scenery extends through the middle of the grounds. The whole forms an enchanting scene. There are on all sides gardens, copses, summer houses amid the lakes, and in one place a miniature fortification with a wet ditch. The beginning of the cascade is the termination of an aqueduct that brings the water from the mountains. It is twenty-seven miles long, and it pierces two mountains and crosses one valley by a bridge on three tiers of arches so immense as to rank with the finest works of the kind constructed by the Romans. This aqueduct is two hundred feet high, hence it will be seen that no masonry could resist the enormous pressure which would be caused by carrying the water through a curved channel along the natural surface of the ground.—While we speak of the want of science of the Romans, it is well to remember that this work was constructed as late as the year 1759 by the engineers of Charles III., is, apparently, built without a proper knowledge of hydraulics. This great work was made to bring water to the pleasure grounds of Casesta, and the people had to pay for it. Lately it was desirable to increase the quantity of water brought into Naples, and the present monarch generously spared a portion of the Casesta water for a consideration in money.

I have spoken of buried cities, but the greatest wonder is Mount Vesuvius, the source of so much desolation. Strange as are the phenomena of burning mountains, the vast eruptions of this one astonish more than any others by their magnitude. It is almost incalculable, the prodigious quantity of volcanic matter that has been ejected, and still its ability to furnish more seems to be great as ever. These materials cannot all come from the recesses of the mountain. There must be an extensive underground region, subject to volcanic action, from which a great part of the materials are drawn. We saw it under favorable circumstances. Mounting horses near Portici, we ascended for nearly two hours, most of the time through charming vineyards, when we arrived at the Hermitage, or rather at the base of the steep cone, near which it is situated. Here we dismounted and worked our way up the steep ascent, among the masses of lava, stones, scoria, &c. The gentlemen of the party helped themselves, but the ladies were each aided by a strap fastened round the body of a man who preceded them. To this strap they held fast, and it was of material service to them.—The ascent was difficult and fatiguing. In rather less than hour we stood upon the summit of the mountain, or in other words, on the edge of the great crater, which, it must be observed, was the original one. And here, let me remark, that I have seen no modern descriptions answering to the actual appearance. All the accounts speak of this as the actual crater of the volcano, from the edge of which you look into a gulf one thousand feet or more deep where the most active combustion takes place; nothing is farther from the reality. The diameter of this crater, is variously estimated at half or three-quarters of a mile, which is near the truth, so that we are to conclude that nearly all this vast cavity is filled up by the volcanic action of late years, the actual mouth of the crater retiring more and more inwards, and rising by the accumulation of substances thrown out till it is nearly on a level with the edge of the great crater, on gaining the edge of which you see before you an almost level circular plain, within which, near the centre, a much smaller cone is thrown up, from which the smoke and flames actually proceed.

Strictly speaking, there are at present the traces of the edges of four distinct craters. The largest, or outside one, is not continuous, but it extends around three-fourths of a mountain, from which it is separated by deep valleys. The highest point of it is called Somma, and this desolate peak is united to the next highest on the opposite side (Pedmeutina) by an irregular and craggy ridge, the composition of which shows its volcanic origin. This was a portion of the crater described by Strabo near the beginning of our era. The great eruption of '79 probably changed this crater into one something like the one I have first described, and this must have continued till a very recent date, though not probably without serious modifications. Passing over a sandy region, wild and sterile, with blocks of lava here and there the surface emitting at various points sulphurous smoke, you come to the edge of a third crate, not more than eight hundred or one thousand feet in diameter, and in the centre of this a cone has been thrown up, which is strictly the fourth or inner one of all. The space between the two is of itself almost a crater now, as indeed it was a few years since.—The whole of the surface is covered with the stream of the lava which flows out almost every day. In various places very active jets of smoke are thrown out with some noise. The surface of the congealed lava on which you walk is hot, too hot to walk on in some parts, and the red hot lava glows through a thousand fissures into which the lava cracks on cooling. The melted lava which you see beneath is sometimes twelve or fourteen feet—sometimes not more than three or four inches below the crust on which you walk, while in some places where it flows, the crust is just beginning to form—one of the guides raising up with his cane the thin crust near us, the red stream flowed out to a distance of ten feet in a few minutes—a miniature representation of one of those formidable great eruptions. Stones of considerable size being thrown upon this dense liquid floated out half in it. In this state the lava takes distinct impressions of coins, &c., and we made some. One of the ladies of our party, stooping down to make an impression of a copper coin, had her dress destroyed in an instant. The dress fell over one of the fissures, and was of course at once ignited. The consequence might have been serious had it not been discovered on the moment.

We now prepared to ascend the small cone containing the actual crater. The summit was not more than eighty or one hundred feet above us, perhaps less, but the feet sank amidst the loose ecoriæ and cinders, and to advance was very difficult.—As we neared the orifice, the sound became more and more terrible. The action was like a heavy and labored respiration, made at intervals of about one or two minutes, and was violent in proportion to the quantity of gases that found vent. The sound was not unlike that of a high pressure engine, except that it had more volume and did not break upon the ears so sharply. We thought we were on the windward side, but the guide was wrong, or the wind changed.—We struggled forward as well as we could in the face of the smoke, which occasionally came whirling down into our faces, when a tremendous volume of it came towards us, enveloping us in darkness. It remained so long before it was blown away, that we are almost suffocated. It was positively fearful, yet ludicrous. All the party inhaled the sulphurous acid gas, which irritated the lungs and made respiration almost impossible. Here we were in the midst of the smoke, not able to see each other or the ground, all coughing most violently. It was now becoming a serious business. The lady in my charge had passed from coughing to deep and loud respirations, which I suppose were the precursor of positive suffocation. She had lost all power of action, and taking her under one arm, I made my way down, not knowing or caring much where I went so I got out of the smoke, so intense was the suffering. The greatest relief I ever experienced, was to find myself in the pure air again. Our faces were all flushed and smoked, and the fur hats of the gentlemen had assumed a very lively red, from the contact of the gas.

The gentlemen now made another attempt. We had gained the edge of the crater, but could not see into it, for the smoke, which soon rolled towards us, caused us to make a hasty retreat. A third attempt was no more successful, and we had started homeward, when we thought another chance presented itself on the other side of the cone. We made a sudden rush towards the edge and looked in, after which we retired some distance, but now finding that we were properly on the windward side, we kept our ground not far from the crater.—Soon the ladies were seen scrambling up to us, and they were so frantic to see it, that it was impossible to restrain them. They bounded forward like deer to the rim of the crater, and enjoyed the rather dangerous advantage of viewing the sublime horror of the phenomenon. The edge of the crater was not more than seventy or eighty feet in diameter, the inside forming a hollow cone with its vortex downwards. It was in one side of this cone, in an orifice nearly circular, of not more than twenty or twenty-five feet in diameter, that the flames and melted lava burst forth. This lava separated into fragments when it flew into the air, glowing brightly, and so flexible as to change its form when in the air. When the respirations were loudest these irregular masses shot up into the air forty to sixty feet, while occasionally they were ejected as high as one hundred feet. The mouth of the crater appeared to be directed somewhat from us, so as to throw most of the ejected matter towards the opposite side of the cone, though some of it fell not more than ten feet from us. Thus our position was a dangerous one, and in looking in, we went rapidly forward, staid a minute, keeping watch in the air, and then retreated a little to renew the examination, till we were quite content. Our attempts had been rewarded by seeing this horrid gulf perfectly, and with the exeeption of a Germnn gentleman, ours was the only party that succeeded on that day.

We now prepared to descend. A walk of twelve or fifteen minutes brought us to the edge of the crater first described, which I am sure those who have visited Vesuvius ten or twenty year since will recognise as the edge of the crater at that time, or perchance they may say, that it is the one which I have described as being eight hundred or one thousand feet in diameter, that surrounds the cone in which is the present crater with the flowing lava between them. As for the fragment of the greatest exterior one, I have only alluded to it to explain the probable condition of the volcano in the beginning of the Christian era. I have enlarged upon this subject, because I have never heard the actual appearance of Vesuvius described even here, in conversation, much less seen it in modern books. We descended to the place where our horses were, through a bed of ashes a little to the North of the place where we went up. I may here add that Vesuvius is unusually active at present. Every night from Naples a lurid light may be seen, sometimes mounting up above the summit as much apparently as twenty feet in its highest elevation. Allowance being made therefore for the distance of eight miles at which it is seen, the jet of flame may be sometimes one hunered feet high or more. We saw none of the stones ejected so often described. The power of the volcano to eject these substances is prodigious beyond belief. Measurements by the theodolite prove that a column of boiling water and stones have been ejected to a height of more than half a mile, while other conjectures, and even measurements, go as far as ten thousand feet or near two miles. One positive proof of its immense power is, that some have been thrown into the sea, a distance of more than four miles from the crater—though I believe that these were all pumice stones, and the wind may have aided the volcano. I have forgotten to say that the rim and inside of the interior cone was quite yellow from the deposite of sulphur, while without it was black, but had occasional yellow incrustations."

MY COUNTRY.

BY REV. CHARLES T. TORREY.

O land of my fathers,
The land of my pride!
Thy shame and thy weakness,
O where wilt thou hide!
My country, my country,
I weep over thee,
Thou land of the bond slave,
Thou scorn of the free!

The cries of the widow,
The sighs of the weak,
The tears of the helpless
For vengeance shall seek.
My country, my country,
The land of my pride,
The Judge of the helpless
How wilt thou abide!

Thy sons are in fetters,
Their manhood is gone,
Thy daughters in chains, curse
The hour they were born.
My country, my country,
How mourn I for thee,
The day of His justice,
O how wilt thou flee!

Thy Bibles, thy fetters,
Thy Sabbaths, thy whips!
Thy boastings of freedom,
With pale, lying lips.
My country, my country,
Thy glory is gone;
True manhood abhors thee,
Pure woman doth scorn!

O land of my fathers,
How long I for thee,
Thy dark sons and daughters
In freedom to see!
My country, my country,
Arise, and be free—
Thy sons then no longer
Shall weep over thee!

EARLY INSTRUCTION.

2 Tim. iii. 15. From a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

Timothy, to whom these words were addressed by St. Paul, was privileged beyond what many children are; he had a pious mother and grandmother, by whom he was instructed from a child. See chapter 1: 5. His father was a Greek, a heathen, yet the instruction of his pious mother and grandmother prevailed, and he was taught and embraced their faith and piety. This should teach mothers how much depends upon them, and how much they can do for their children. It also teaches children how to value the pious instructions of their mothers, when they have pious mothers.

The result of the early instruction and the pious example of Timothy's mother and grandmother, was, he was learned in the Scriptures, became a very pious youth, and made a good and useful minister of the gospel.

This is a very great text, and embraces much more than we can explain in this sermon, but we will notice briefly the following points.

I. The holy Scriptures which Timothy had learned;

II. Their power to make him and us wise unto salvation; and,

III. The importance of studying them, and of knowing them from childhood, as he did.

I. What are we to understand by the holy Scriptures?

1. By the holy Scriptures is meant the Bible, or rather that part of the Bible which we now call the Old Testament.—There was no New Testament then. The New Testament was all written after Christ came. Children now have the New Testament to make them wise unto salvation, which Timothy had not, and this contains a history of Jesus Christ, and shines with a clearer light.

2. The Scriptures are called holy. They may well be called holy for several reasons.

The word Scriptures originally signified nothing more than writings, and hence the apostle may have said the 'holy Scriptures,' that is, the holy writings, to distinguish them from all other writings or scriptures.

Again, the Scriptures are holy, because they were given by God to holy men who wrote them. The apostle Peter says, 'The prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.' 2 Peter i. 21.

The Scriptures may also be called holy because they exert an influence to make men holy. The more men read, study, and love the Scriptures, the more holy they become.

II. The power of the Scriptures to make men wise unto salvation.

1. The Scriptures make men wise in all matters of religion. To be wise, is to know a great many things. Now the Scriptures will make us wise because they teach us every thing necessary to be known in order to be saved. They teach us all the doctrinal truths to be believed; all the duties and religious works to be performed; all that change of character which sinners must undergo in order to be saved, and how and on what conditions this change is wrought in us; and they teach us also what will be the consequence of attending to these things, and what will be the consequence of neglecting them. This is wisdom indeed, to know and attend to these things.

2. The Scriptures can make us wise unto salvation. They impart unto us, if we attend to them, a knowledge of salvation. This knowledge is twofold. First, head knowledge, which is like the knowledge we derive from history of any subject or event. Secondly, heart knowledge, which is like the knowledge we derive from experience.

Remember, children, that to be saved, you must not only get the knowledge of salvation in your heads, but you must get the feeling in your hearts. Salvation implies the pardon of sin and consequent peace with God; (Rom. v. 1,) deliverance from the pollution and controlling influence of sin; a glorious resurrection of the body, and eternal happiness in heaven.

3. This salvation is "through faith in Jesus Christ." The meaning of this is, that our salvation depends wholly upon the merits of Christ's death, and that faith is the only condition of our receiving such an application of his merits or atonement as will remove our sin and make us fit for heaven.—The Scriptures reveal Christ, and teach us how to believe in him, and believing in him we are saved; therefore the Scriptures are able to make us wise unto salvation.

III. We are to consider the importance of studying the Scriptures, and of knowing them from childhood.

1. The great importance of the subject is a strong reason. Those things which are of the greatest importance should be attended to first. But the salvation of the soul, which the Scriptures teach, is more important than all things else put together. 'What is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?'

2. To attend to our salvation while we are children, keeps us out of many evils, and makes us better and more useful in the world while we live. Timothy was taught the Scriptures when young, and see what a good and useful minister he made. Had not his grandmother and his mother taught him the Scriptures when a child, it is not likely he would ever have been a minister, and blessed the world as he did.

3. Children should learn the Scriptures, because what is learned in childhood makes a more lasting impression on the mind, and is longer remembered. The best things should be written the deepest on the page of the memory, hence we should write the Scriptures on our memories when children, before the world has a chance to write its vanities and corruptions there.

4. We shou'd learn the Scriptures when young, because the labor cannot in any case be lost. Children often spend much time in learning various plays, but they soon outgrow these plays; but if they learn the Scriptures, they will never outgrow the benefits of the knowledge they gain. Children may spend much time in learning to act the part of men and women, at which state they expect soon to arrive. This is right to a reasonable extent, but they may die before they get to be men and women, and then the time will be in some sense lost; but what time they spend in learning the Scriptures, cannot be lost even in death.—The Bible will shed a light around their dying beds, and light them through the dark valley.

5. Children should learn the Scriptures, because the probability is they will never attend to them if they neglect them while young. They may not live to be old, and if they do, they will find so many other cares to look after, that they will be likely to neglect the Bible, unless they learn to read and love it when young.

Again, if they grow up from childhood in neglect of the Bible, their hearts will become so hard and wicked that they will have no disposition to learn the Scriptures. It is dreadfully dangerous, children, to let childhood pass away without studying the Scriptures; it may be your ruin.

Conclusion. 1. How thankful ought we all to be for this blessed book, which can make us wise unto salvation. But for it we should wander in darkness, filled with doubts, painful uncertainty and despair.

2. How thankful should children be for the Sunday schools in which they may learn the Scriptures. Timothy had no Sunday school, and yet he knew the Scriptures from a child. O children, be entreated to improve your opportunities.

3. You who enjoy these privileges ought to think of those who have no Bibles and no Sunday schools. The little slaves in the South have neither, and their cruel masters will not let them go to Sunday school or read the Bible. Pray for them.

OBITUARY.

Hannah Lathrop was born in East Hartford, Ct., April 29th, 1771; died at the residence of her son-in-law, Dr. Bassett, in Westfield Mass., on the 19th of May, aged 74 years and 21 days. As a shock of corn fully ripe, she was gathered into the garner of her Lord in great peace. In all the relations of life in which she was called to move, she was what women professing godliness ought to be. As mother we knew her best; and her children may well call her blessed, for she was a mother of priceless worth. A woman of a vigorous and well balanced mind, she had early and ample scope for its development, by being left a widow, with four little ones dependent upon her care and counsel. The widow's God sustained her, and in the fear of the Lord, she brought them up in the love and practice of virtue. One of them is not, having passed away in early manhood, in full hope of a blissful immortality. The others have long since given their hearts to God, and are following their departed parent as she followed Christ. Twice a widow, she was not exempt from sorrow; but the word of her Lord sustained her in the hour of affliction, and most meekly did she bow to his will. She was eminently the servant of all; ever devising the good of others, her benevolence was far reaching and minute. The needy were never turned empty from her door: the weary always found a shelter, comfort and repose; the wayworn herald of the cross here found a hearty welcome—a peaceful and a happy home. Hers was the benevolence the gospel enjoins—doing good to others, asking not again. Its blessings distilled from her hands like the dews of evening—equally, silently, certainly. She lived many years in the enjoyment of religion, unconnected with any Christian church, and free salvation was the sound that delighted her soul; and what she had found, she believed free for all. Some fifteen years since, she received a clearer evidence of divine acceptance than she before enjoyed, since which time she has "walked as seeing him who is invisible." A short time subsequent, she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and walked in fellowship with the people of her choice, until summoned to her reward. Names had little or no influence with her; she most freely loved and fellowshipped all who honored her blessed Lord. She met the summons to immortality joyfully—triumphantly. In view of the spirit world, she exclaimed, "It is bright! Jesus is precious! Jesus is precious!"

KNOWLEDGE FOR THE PEOPLE.

RE-ISSUE OF THE

PENNY MAGAZINE,

AT ONE HALF THE ORIGINAL PRICE!

4000 IMPERIAL OCTAVO PAGES,

2000 ENGRAVINGS!!

A COMPLETE LIBRARY WITHIN ITSELF.

The London Penny Magazine, issued under the direction of the Society for the "Diffusion of Useful Knowledge," is, unquestionably, one of the most entertaining and useful of all the popular works which has ever appeared in any age, or in any language. Its pages embrace every subject in the wide field of human knowledge, and as every article, whether on

SCIENCE, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, LITERATURE, OR THE ARTS,

passed the careful scrutiny and critical ordeal of an able committee of learned men, the work may be placed in the hands of the youth of the country without danger or distrust. The popularity of the work in England may be judged of from the fact that during the first year of its publication of the monthly parts were disposed of. In the United States too, the work has acquired no inconsiderable popularity.

The undersigned having purchased the Stereotype plates, with the Engravings, of the London edition of the above-named work, has commenced its republication in the city of New York. The whole work consists of about 4000 large imperial octavo pages, and is illustrated with 2000 Engravings. The American Re-issue will be printed on good paper, and well done up in handsome paper covers, and issued in

24 PARTS AT 25 CENTS EACH.

The Parts average 170 pages each, and will be published every other Saturday, till completed, commencing SATURDAY, MAY 3d, 1845. It is an exact reprint of the London edition, without alteration or abridgment.

☞ The work is sold by all dealers in Books and cheap Literature, throughout the United States. Persons wishing to obtain it regularly on its issue, will do well to hand in their names to some Bookseller in their neighborhood, at as early a day as possible. Postmasters will be entitled to ten numbers for Two Dollars.

SUNDAY LEGISLATION—NO. 2.

In our notice of the late Philadelphia Sunday Convention, we affirmed that the attempt to enforce Sunday-keeping by legislative enactments is religiously and politically wrong. We shall now attempt to make good our assertion.

It is religiously wrong, because contrary to the instructions of the Lord Jesus Christ, and opposed to the spirit and design of Christianity.

When our Lord affirmed before Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world," he meant not merely to satisfy the Roman governor that he had no designs upon the political power of the Romans in Judea, but he pointed to a cardinal distinction of his kingdom, which he had repeatedly inculcated upon his disciples. It would have availed nought to have affirmed this before the governor, if the instruction given to his disciples had not corresponded with the same. But he had said, "Ye know that the kings of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them, but it shall not be so among you." "He that taketh the sword shall perish by the sword." Every thing in the instructions and precepts of the Lord Jesus corresponds with this cardinal distinction of the Kingdom of heaven. Before Pilate, Jesus affirmed that he came to establish his kingdom by bearing witness to the truth. The only weapons he gave to his disciples were the truths he taught them. "Go teach all nations," said he. "If they persecute you in one city, flee ye to another." "But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil." "Be ye wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." "The servant of the Lord should not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth."

The course of our Lord and his apostles exactly corresponded with these instructions and precepts. On no occasion did they seek the aid of the civil power to enforce the observance of a single tenet of the religion they taught. The Apostle Paul, when warning Timothy of the corruptions that he foresaw coming over the professors of Christianity, says unto him: "Thou hast known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience, persecutions, afflictions, which came upon me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra, what persecutions I endured; but out of them all the Lord delivered me; yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecutions. Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned." That religion, then, which seeks to enforce itself by the aid of legislative enactments, is not of Jesus Christ or his apostles, but of another, who is represented in God's word as committing fornication with the kings (or rulers) of the earth.

We were ashamed and grieved to find a distinguished Baptist member presiding over an assembly met for the purpose of invoking the aid of the rulers of this world to establish a religious observance that is said to belong to the kingdom of Christ, and others members of a committee who reported a resolution memorializing the Legislature of the State to pass laws to enforce by fines and imprisonment the observance of a day, which they say is held in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ! Oh, spirit of the Lord! is this thing done in thy name? Or, hast thou inspired the hearts of the men who have so palpably departed from the instructions of the Lord Jesus and his apostles? How could those ministers of Christ vote for the enforcement of a law, which this very year imprisoned and fined some of the most pious and peaceable Sabbath-keepers in the State of Pennsylvania? Have they become weary of bearing the cross, and impatient of laboring to bring men to the acknowledgment of the truth, by teaching the doctrines and precepts of the Lord Jesus? Would that they might yet learn, that the disciple is not above his master.

The spirit and design of Christianity is different from all systems of rule which seek to control mankind by physical or judicial power. It provides for putting God's laws into the mind, and writing them in the heart; and then claims a willing homage from the instructed and quickened spirit. Christianity requires a renewed man in order to acceptance with God, or the offering up spiritual sacrifices holy and acceptable to God. Every effort, therefore, which contravenes or disregards this essential characteristic of the kingdom of heaven, is anti-Christian. Such efforts have never done any thing to promote the spiritual good of the church of Christ, but every thing to corrupt it. Legislating for Christianity has extended Pedobaptism, erected national hierarchies, and filled the world with persecuting bigots. And could the advocates of Sunday legislation succeed in this country, such would be its effect here. It stands opposed in spirit and design to all the kindness, meekness, forbearance, and witnessing for the truth, inculcated in the gospel. It seeks to bring an unwilling part of the community to observe religious duties, with unwilling hearts, which is hypocrisy. Every man in this country is free to observe Sunday if he pleases. If he chooses to disregard it, for the sake of office or gain, he would not be a better man for being prohibited worldly business on that day by State legislation. State legislation, however, assumes the anti-Christian dogma, that he would; or otherwise it enacts restraints upon him that are not designed to do him good. This is a fruitful source of the overwhelming formalism which has dried up the spiritual life of Christianity in those countries where the primitive churches once flourished, and shed a healthful healing influence over the whole face of society; but where now the grossest superstitions ever palmed upon the world by legislative enactments are sanctified by hoary custom and homage, and have rendered a vast portion of the public mind impervious to the labors of Christian evangelists. Such, and such only, is the religious effect of state enactments enforcing religious duties in America. It is therefore religiously wrong.

Politically, a greater act of injustice cannot be committed than to make the soil of Pennsylvania the theatre of religious proscription.

The original settlers of Pennsylvania agreed upon a form of government, while yet in England, on the 25th of April, 1682, which was published, together with a body of laws, by which means a large body of emigrants were collected together, who approved and adopted them for their future government. After landing in America, they found a body of Dutch, Swedes, and Finns, already in the country they had come to occupy; and on the 4th of December of the same year, an Assembly convened at Chester, which adopted the frame of government, and enacted the body of laws, which had before been brought from England. In the thirty-fifth section of that frame of government, twice adopted in the year 1682, will be found the following provision for religious liberty:—

"That all persons living in this Province, who confess and acknowledge the one Almighty and eternal God to be the Creator, Upholder, and Ruler of the world, and that hold themselves obliged in conscience to live peaceably and justly in civil society, shall in no way be molested, or prejudiced for their religious persuasion, or practice in matters of faith and worship, nor shall they be compelled at any time to frequent or maintain any religious worship, place, or ministry whatever."

In pursuance of this plan of government, and to carry out the great and enduring principles of religious liberty, one of the first laws enacted by them, is entitled, a law concerning liberty of conscience, in which are the following remarkable sentiments:—

"Almighty God, being only Lord of conscience, Father of lights and spirits, and the Author as well as the object of all divine knowledge, faith and worship, who only can enlighten the mind, persuade and convince the understanding of people, in due reverence to his sovereignty over the souls of mankind, it is enacted by the authority aforesaid, That no person at any time hereafter living in this Province, who shall confess and acknowledge one Almighty God to be the Creator, Upholder, and Ruler of the world, and that professeth himself, or herself, obliged to live peaceably and justly under the civil government, shall in anywise be molested or prejudiced for his, or her, conscientious persuasion, nor shall he or she at any time be compelled to frequent, or maintain any religious worship, place or ministry whatever, contrary to his or her mind, but shall fully and freely enjoy his or her Christian liberty in that respect, without any interruption or reflection; and if any person shall abuse or deride any other for his or her different persuasion and practice in matters of religion, such shall be looked upon as a disturber of the peace and be punished accordingly."

This very liberal and just provision was made still stronger, if possible, by the State Convention which framed the first State Constitution after the Declaration of Independence, of which Benjamin Franklin was President, for they inserted and adopted the following provision:—

"All men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences. No man can of right be compelled to attend, erect, or support, any place of worship, or maintain any ministry, against his consent. No human authority can in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience; and no preference shall ever be given by law to any religious establishments or modes of worship."

The first Constitution of Pennsylvania was adopted in 1776, amended in 1789, and again in 1837; but in neither case was any amendment proposed in this provision of the Constitution. It was re-affirmed each time without a dissenting voice.

A distinguished lawyer and Judge, in the State of Pennsylvania, makes the following comment upon this part of the Constitution:—

"This provision places the rights of conscience above the reach of human authority. It can exercise no power over this right. It cannot control it, and indeed, cannot even interfere with it. The authority of the church or clergy cannot do it. The authority of the Executive branch of the government cannot do it nor can any judiciary or legislature do it. They cannot do it singly, nor can they by their united authority do it. And why? Because their authority is human, and is declared incompetent to perform any such purpose. It is declared incompetent, not in particular cases, but it is declared that it cannot be done in any case whatever."

Clearly, then, Judge Parsons and the clergy of Philadelphia, with the distinguished citizens who formed the late Sunday Convention, were politiealy wrong in resolving to memorialize the Legislature to extend the law of 1794 to the canals and railroads in the State, or in requiring that law to be enforced. The law itself is unconstitutional, and ought to be repealed; it is a blemish upon the statute book. It is felt to be so by the people. for it is rarely enforced but for malicious purposes. The only persons prosecuted under it during the past year, that we have had any account of, were the Seventh-day Baptists at Snowhill, in Franklin County—as wicked and malicious a prosecution as the prosecution of the Mœnsters in Denmark, on whose account our Baptist brethren labored, in England and in this country, to more heaven and earth to sympathize with them. Yet one of those very Baptists presided over a Convention in Philadelphia called to memorialize the Legislature of Pennsylvania to enforce a law, or enact others, which will fine or imprison the most pious Christian, or Christian minister, who does not observe the day called Sunday by abstaining from all worldly business—although the day previously he may have kept the Sabbath of Almighty God according to the commandment. There is a religious and political wrong in these things which must be shown to the world.

SCRAPS OF USEFUL INFORMATION.

COURSE No. 1.

MR. EDITOR.—I see that many of the newspapers of the country are copying into their columns "Scraps of Curious Information," from the New York Gazette. While reading the interesting medley of facts they embrace, I conceived the idea, that a few scraps of more specific and sober information, if prepared with unimpeachable fidelity to truth, might make a salutary impression on the public mind. Here, then, Mr. Editor, are a few items of such information, which I have collected with some care, and for which I would humbly solicit an admission into some corner of your paper:

The mercantile shipping of the civilized world amounts to about 8,000,000, tons, which is worth new and old, $30 per ton, and netts, clear of interest, insurance, &c. 10 per cent, or $24,000,000, per annum. The appropriation to the British Navy, for the current year, is $33,620,200!! Is not this a sober fact? that the annual expense of one nation's navy, exceeds the nett profit of all the mercantile shipping owned by the civilized world?

The war-debts of the European nations amount to $10,000,000,000. It would require the labor of four millions of men, at $150 per annum for each man, to pay the interest of this sum at 6 per cent. To pay the principal, it would be necessary to levy a tax of at least TEN DOLLARS on every inhabitant of the globe! Another fact, rendering this more impressive, may be found in the "scrap of curious information," that no heathen nations are in arrears for the butcheries they have perpetrated on the human race. They pay cash down for all that is done for the devil under their hands. Christian nations alone "go on tick" for that kind of service.

From March 4th, 1789, to June 30th, 1844, our Government expended on the War Department $663,438,851. The interest of this sum, at 6 per cent, would build Whitney's great railroad from the Lakes to the Pacific, of 2500 miles in length, at $15,000 per mile; and thus erect a highway for the commerce and communion of the family of nations, which should be reckoned in all coming time one of the greatest enterprises that ever blessed the race.

In 1842, there were produced in the United States, 100,000,000 bushels of wheat and 140,000,000 bushels of Indian corn; which, at $1 per bushel for the former, and 25 cts. for the latter, were worth $135,500,000. Fifteen per cent, clear, of the interest of the capital invested in lands, implements, hired and personal labor, is a liberal estimate of the profit accruing to the wheat and corn grower. Then the profit of this amount of grain would be $20,325,000. The appropriation to the army and navy, during the same year, was $20,150,501. In other words, the army and navy ate up the whole harvest of wheat and corn throughout the Union! Will not the hard-working farmers think on this fact?

The government, though carrying on extensive armories of its own, has recently contracted with a private company in Connecticut for the supply of 30,000 pistols, at $6,50 each; or 195,000 dollar's worth of those weapons so much in vogue with duellists and assassins. The American Bible Society congratulates itself on receiving, the past year, $166,652, the aggregate of all that has been given through the Union for the dissemination of the Word of Life at home and abroad. So it goes: Christendom expends more in one year on the means and instruments of human slaughter, than has been given for the promulgation of the Gospel since us Christ died on the cross!

WESTERN EMIGRATION IN TWO ASPECTS.

A correspondent of one of the city papers, formerly a resident on Long Island, writing from one of the Western "gardens of the world," gives the following picture of a farmer's life and prospects at the west:—

"Prairie farms can be had here at from three to ten dollars per acre all along the Illinois and Michigan Canal and on both sides of the Fox river. A farm of 160 acres within ten miles of Canal can be had for eight hundred dollars, the interest of which outlay is about fifty dollars per annum. One hundred acres of this farm, on the first year being corn, after the breaking up, will produce about twenty five hundred bushels of wheat, is worth at Chicago ($1500) fifteen hundred dollars. The farmer can raise sixty bushels of corn to the acre, and this on the first year will give on the same 100 acres six thousand bushels, which at twelve cents per bushel is worth twelve hundred dollars at Chicago. This will give him twenty-seven hundred dollars for the two years, and most unquestionably two thousand dollars profit! His land is then ready, without requiring any manure for ages, for a succession of wheat crops, each one giving on an average twenty-five bushels to the acre! Talk of Long Island when compared with this country! Why the best lands in Kings county are worthless in comparison as farms. It costs the Long Island farmer twenty-five dollars per acre for manure, &c., to put in his wheat crop, and then it will take all his wheat and the following crop of grass to pay the expense! This I know from sad experience. Kings county is only fit for country seats.

"Again, the farmer on Long Island is an everlasting slave—his labors must never cease—he is a pack horse going to, and returning from market—he travels by night and by day, and his winter, which gives rest, sport and amusement to the farmers here, gives nothing to him but the most agreeable amusement of dragging manure from New York to the dung heap, and if this last business is neglected, the Sheriff will soon sell him out of house and home, for he can raise nothing without manure. The facilities of transporting produce of all kinds from the West are so great, that the Long Island farmers who once had every thing their own way are now sinking every year, and must ultimately sell out their places to citizens on which to erect their country seats. Such of the old settlers as have incomes from other sources will hold on, but those without incomes must ultimately quit the island. It will cost two thousand dollars to manure for wheat and grass one hundred acres of land on Long Island! See what a farm this sum would buy and stock, in this State.

"Any industrious farmer settling on any of these rich prairies, with soil from two to six feet deep, can be a rich man in five years, even if he settles down as a squatter and takes pre-emption right. All the State of Illinois West and North of this City is considered healthy, but the Southern portion of the State below Peoria, especially along the Illinois, Ohio and Michigan rivers, is known to be extremely unhealthy."

Another person, from another of the Western "Gardens," writes to one of our Societies quite a different picture of his state and circumstances. "Religion," says he, "has few advocates here. Sabbath desecration, even in our own denomination, fearfully abounds, covenant-meetings and communion seasons are abandoned by two-thirds of the church. Discipline there is none; and no Sabbath School or Bible Class, prayer meetings or family prayer. This looks dark indeed, but so it is. We hope, however, and shall hope and pray until Zion shall arise and shine."

In view of these two pictures—and probably they are as true as they are diverse—who that possesses an immortal soul, and enjoys a competence here, but would say with Agur, "Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me; lest I be full and deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor and steal, and take the name of my God in vain.

CLOCKS IN CHURCHES.—In one of my college years a fellow pupil suddenly died. On the Sabbath following, the venerated Dr. F. joined his discourse with this event, which was itself preaching very solemnly to some of us. This was a sentence: "Young man, thou art now strong and full of health; but I will tell you, the spade which shall dig thy grave may be already forged—the winding-sheet be lying in yonder store—and that clock, (pointing to the one on the gallery) be counting out the moments in the last Sabbath day of thy life." He paused. It was the silence of the grave, for a moment—but oh! the tick of that clock! It entered my soul. It seemed like the sound of the keys in the doors of the eternal world. No voice, no speech could have searched the audience as did that awful voice of our departing moments. Since that day I ever look seriously upon the face, and listen solemnly to the voice of the sanctuary clock.

Little do we know, when we go forth in the morning, what God means to do with us ere night.

PATIENT BECAUSE ETERNAL.

BY REV. WM. B. TAPPAN.

Yea, thou forbearest, Lord,
Thou renderest not reward
Due to my sin,
Thou knowest all my heart,
Yet with me patient art,
Me, vile within!

Though irritable these
My passions are,—like seas
Raging aloud,—
Tempests that mock control,
Vexing my weary soul,
Yet am I proud.

Yea, proud—though of a day
That's vanishing away:
Lord, I would learn
Meekness of thee, and deal
Whate'er thou send'st of care,
Nor trials spurn.

Rebelliously doth flesh
Involve me in the mesh
Of hurtful strife.
Within my nature dwell
The sparks that kindle hell:
Help, for my life!

Like touchwood, I the flame
Do catch. Lord 'tis with shame,
My shame I own.
Bathe me anew in blood
That gushes in rich flood,
Fast from thy throne.

Thou wast! Thou art! wilt be!
Vouchsafe to lesson me
To bear thy will
From open foes, false friends,
And all thy love intends,
Submissive still.

Even as thy blessed Son,
The meekly suffering One;
The Deity;
Patient, when woke the sword,
From whom fell never word
Vindictively.

Who did not inward fret
When sorely him beset
The powers infernal:
Most patiently who cried,
Most patiently who died,
Because Eternal.

REDEEMING THE TIME BECAUSE THE DAYS ARE EVIL.

The close of another eventful year reminds us that "time is winging us away to our eternal home." The unwritten scroll opened for a given period a twelvemonth since, to contain records unknown to all but the great Eternal, is now filled. Time has performed its work with a despatch unequalled even by the magnetic telegraph, and its characters are equally distinct and indelible. At the close of every hour, day, week, month and year, is not the question a fitting one, "What report has this short period borne to Heaven?" Its echo—dying ages, hang on the reply. The command has never been revoked, "Redeeming the time because the days are evil." Many during the past year have been made to feel that the days were evil, in the sense here implied; but how few have obeyed the command to the letter? "Lost moments!" "Squandered hours!" "Wasted probation!" Painful indeed must be the frequent recurrence of these sentences, when beheld by mortals in the books of Eternity. While with the worldling, the daily scenes of this busy, bustling, restless life engross the heart, and chain it to earth, its pulses are rapidly lessening; age is creeping on apace; the seeds of death are taking root, and an ETERNITY without hope, is but a step beyond. To such the opening year speaks loudly, "Prepare to meet thy God!" Spend not the "New Year's day" in hilarity and mirth, for reflection and repentance are more appropriate work. Contemplate the army of the dead, who commenced the last year, as thyself, full of life and hope. In this city alone, (taking the report of deaths for a single week, as an average for the year,) over 9000 souls have passed the bounds of time, and rendered up their last account. Could these accost thee from the spirit world to-day, would they not whisper, "Mortal, redeem the time! Redeem the time!" "What thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." If, during this year, death shall come to thee "as a thief in the night," O be not found without a wedding garment."

To those who have learned to redeem the time, who are striving to obey every precept of that Being whom they soon expect to behold, disrobed of mortality, the knell of departing years brings no notes of sadness. In the secret chambers of the soul they can respond,

"Fly swiftly round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

"Eternity,
A glorious and a needful refuge that,
From vile imprisonment in abject views.
'Tis Immortality, 'tis that alone
Amid life's pains, abasements, emptiness,
The soul can comfort, elevate, and fill:
That only, and that amply this performs;
Lifts us above life's pains, her joys above
Their terror those, and these their lustre lose."

How will life's trials and vicissitudes dwindle to a point scarcely perceptible, when viewed at the distance of a thousand years spent before the throne. At such a point of how little moment will the frowns or smiles of mortal worms appear. Shall it be thine, dear reader, to gaze in rapt adoration, at Infinite loveliness, glory ineffable, supreme perfection—to advance from strength to strength in the capacity to enjoy the blessed God, while His love absorbs every power of thy soul, and sin is forever banished from thy sight? Is this blessedness so near that thou canst sometimes lay the hand of faith upon it, and exclaim with humble gratitude, "Yes, 'tis mine! 'tis mine!" What a motive this to spend thy short probation in doing good—in winning souls to Christ—that they may become gems in His crown, and with thee participate in His eternal love and favor. What a motive to induce the fervent ejaculation—

"I only pray, God make me holy, and
My spirit nerve for the stern hour of strife.
Aid me to shun the wrong, pursue the right,
Redeem the time, lie low before the cross,
And live, till death, 'for other worlds than this.'"

LAW AND GOSPEL.

NUMBER EIGHT.

We have seen, that law originates in the relations of things;—that moral law originates in the natural relation we sustain to God as his creatures, and to one another as fellow creatures;—and that every precept of the Decalogue, not even excepting the fourth, originates in this natural relation. It follows, therefore, that the Ten Commandments—whatever may be said of other parts of Scripture—have a solid claim to be considered as belonging to the Moral Law. We have made all due allowance for the positive character of the fourth commandment, and have seen that it cannot be rejected from the moral code on that account. In this connection we would add, that if the word gospel may be extended in its application, so as to include rules of duty, contrary to the rigid meaning of the term—as we have already seen, and as all will allow—so may the term moral law be extended to include at least one precept, which does not answer to the rigid meaning of moral, being in the phrase of scholastic theology a positive institution.

We must here take notice of an apparent inconsistency in our reasoning. In one of our numbers, (No. 3,) we said that the relation which God established with the Israelites at Sinai, did not furnish the moral code; for that relation was with but a single nation. Nevertheless we have attempted to prove, that the Decalogue is a summary of moral duty. It might be asked, when did God, antecedently to the transaction at Sinai, promulge the precepts of the Decalogue? That they were promulged in that manner and form at any time previous, we have not pretended. We might allow without any prejudice to our argument, that the utterance of them from amidst the flames of Horeb, was the first formal promulgation that had ever been made of them. Nevertheless, this first formal promulgation of them was an exact and literal transcript of duties, that were binding on mankind from the very beginning. Had God Almighty, with audible voice, pronounced at the gate of Eden the duties which he would have all men observe, he would have pronounced these very duties, which we here find spoken out from the fires of Sinai. For, as we have seen, the relation in which they were placed to him, and to one another, required it.

When we said, that the relation established between God and the Israelites did not furnish the law by which is the knowledge of sin, we did not by any means mean to set aside the authority of the Decalogue. We simply intended, that as that relation was established only with a single nation, such duties as had their origin in that relation, could not be considered binding on the world at large. But we have shown, that the duties of the Decalogue must have had their origin farther in a written form, invested with sanctions peculiar to the occasion, and laid at the bottom of the covenant made with that nation, affects not the question in regard to their origin. Yet here is the point at which many seem to stumble. Not able to see that the Decalogue has any authority, independent of the positive and formal promulgation of it, their notions concerning its binding character are all involved in confusion.

But it is not more certain that sin was in the world before the formal promulgation of this code, (Rom. 5: 13,) than it is that such sin consisted in a want of conformity to the righteousness which this code enjoins. One of its precepts says, "Thou shalt not kill." But had this precept no authority previous to its promulgation from Sinai? If not, the arraignment and condemnation of Cain for killing his brother were a perfect farce. Another precept forbids adultery. Had this no previous authority? If not, the Sodomites were falsely charged with being sinners before the Lord exceedingly; and Joseph troubled himself with needless scruples in relation to Potiphar's wife.

The origin of moral duty is not the formal promulgation of the law which enjoins it, but the relation which it recognizes. For when law is formally promulged, my obedience to it is either right or wrong. But how am I to determine whether it is right or wrong, if there is no rule of right except the law which is thus formally promulged? When the Decalogue is formally promulged, how shall I determine whether my obedience to it is right, and my disobedience wrong, unless the moral duties which it enjoins have an antecedent obligation? Yet by some rule or other this point must be determined. Hence the conclusion is, that obligation springs up simultaneously with the relation in which is founded the law that may be afterwards formally promulged.

But if this be so, where then is the obligation of the Sabbath antecedent to the giving of the law? How far this institution might be obligatory, independent of any formal annunciation of it, we will not undertake to say. But we are under no necessity of reasoning upon such a hypothesis. At the close of his creation work God kept a Sabbath, and thus showed us by example what we should do. That day, which he kept as a Sabbath, he "blessed and sanctified;" and that was equivalent to a formal promulgation of a law for its observance. To object, that God did not speak out, and say in so many words, "Remember the Sabbath day," &c., as in the fourth commandment, is but childish quibbling. The term "blessed" certainly means something; and if it does not mean, that God rendered it a day peculiarly happy for man, it behoves our opponents to tell us what it does mean. The term "sanctified" also means something; and if it does not mean, that God set it apart for a holy use, let the objector tell what it does mean. No one, with the New Testament in his hand, can pretend that God set apart the day for his own use; for the Saviour tells us it was made for man.

The conclusion follows, that though the law of the Sabbath was not formally promulged before the transaction at Sinai, it was nevertheless set forth under such circumstances that there could be no mistake as to its binding obligation. Thus the entire Decalogue stands before us as a rule of righteousness, the violation of which is sin. All other moral precepts are but the diversified applications of the great elementary principles embodied in this code.

WRITINGS OF THE FATHERS.

In the entire absence of all authority and of all example in the Word of God for the change of the Sabbath, there is on the part of Sunday observers a ready appeal to the writings and practice of the Fathers. Whatever these writings are or were, they ought never to have been put in place of or in competition with inspired Scripture. Whether those preserved even as they came from the hands of their authors, were those most worthy of preservation in the ages to which they respectively belonged, we have not the means of determining. Possibly, in the progress of corruption, then as at present the more truly scriptural authors may have been less esteemed. But however this may be, confessedly these writings are uninspired, and, as we have them, contain statements, on different subjects, to which even their greatest admirers would refuse to subscribe. Yet, notwithstanding this, wherever they are found to sanction existing practices, which their observers are unwilling to change, the authority of these writings is appealed to; and on a subject even of such importance as the sanctifying of the Sabbath, the divine command is overborne by the precepts of these Fathers.

In such a case, it might surely be required, that at least the human testimony to which such importance is attached should be consistent with itself, if not also evidently that of those whose names it bears—that the dictates to which the faith and conscience of the church are surrendered, if not clearly proved to be the utterances of those Fathers, shall be free at least of clear and certain indications of the contrary. Yet how far is this from being the case! Notoriously these writings on which so much is made to depend, are in some cases largely interpolated. Unequivocally they bear internal testimony of the frauds which have been practiced in the attempts made to procure, as if by the Fathers, the condemnation of opinions known in some instances to have been broached only at periods long after these Fathers were in their graves. In these circumstances, who can tell how much or how little of any such production expresses truly the mind of him under whose name it passes current? In reference to a matter of ordinary life, such documents would be regarded as of little value; yet in a case of transcendant importance—in a matter that deep[illegible] al well-being—the church has confederated to receive as satisfactory what would unhesitatingly be rejected by any other tribunal.

But the providence of God has done much to confound this false faith—making it all the more inexcusable for any to continue resting upon such vain imaginations, against the light of divine truth. We have just received a new illustration of this. It is well known, that among the Fathers on whom reliance is placed as sanctioning a change of the Sabbath, IGNATIUS holds a prominent place. He is one of the earliest of the witnesses to whom appeal is made in proof of Sunday observance. True, indeed, in the earliest discovered versions of Ignatius' epistles, the very passage relied on is evidence itself that the Sabbath was observed; and therefore, to those aware of this fact, the appeal to Ignatius has always appeared grossly inconsistent. The existence of two versions very different from each other should surely have prevented Ignatius from being burdened with the responsibility involved, until it be really ascertained to which of these versions he had appended his signature—if that signature had ever been borne by either.

The decision of this point, rendered of such importance to those whose faith is to be affected by the result, has indeed been the aim and earnest endeavor of not a few eminent authors. It was largely agitated in a former age, and has since remained one of the vexed questions on which friends and opponents to the change have felt themselves at liberty to claim the victory in so far as such testimony was regarded as of value.

But a new element of discord has arisen with respect to the authority of Ignatius, and a farther ground of distraction to those who assign an unwarranted place to the traditions of the Fathers. An ancient Syriac version of three of Ignatius' epistles has recently been received from the East, to be thrown among the already perplexed churches of the West. This version, alledged to contain within itself the evidence of its antiquity, differs, so far as it goes, most materially from both the former; and if the second version was much shorter than the first, so, of the three thus referred to, this newly-found version is greatly shorter than its latest predecessor. Unhappily for the tranquillity of those who aim at forming their views of the Sabbath in accordance with those of the Fathers, the epistle to the Magnesians is not of the number of those thus received—at least of those now published—so that they will be left in painful suspense how far the Sunday has the sanction of Ignatius, in his new guise, till some farther development shall have determined as to their orthodoxy.

We cannot enter farther into the matter at present, but, God willing, intend giving some account of the work in a future number of the Sabbath Recorder.

UNAMBIGUOUS.—We have been not a little amused, as well as instructed, by reading the comments of our exchanges upon the movement in Pennsylvania towards securing legislation in favor of Sunday. Some of them try to approve it; others cautiously express their sorrow for it; and still others boldly denounce it. One of this latter class has a long article on the subject, which closes with the following abrupt, but unambiguous, language:—"Sunday is not the Sabbath. Let them keep the true Sabbath—the seventh day—according to God's commandment, before they require others to keep the Sabbath as a holy day."

THE RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL IN WASHINGTON.—From a statement published in one of the Washington papers, we should judge that the residents at the seat of government were pretty liberally provided with the means of religious and social enjoyment. It is stated that there are in the city seven Methodist churches, four Baptist, six Presbyterian, five Protestant Episcopal, three Catholic, two Lutheran, and one Unitarian Church, besides three churches appropriated exclusively to colored persons. There are also twelve Masonic Lodges, with a Grand Lodge; twelve Odd-Fellow's Lodges, with three encampments of Odd-Fellows, and the Grand Lodge of the District. To these may be added several societies of Rachabites and the Sons of Temperance.

MUSIC.—The Cincinnati Washingtonian says, that whenever a man is caught selling liquor in that town on Sunday, the Mayor sings him a song to the tune of twenty dollars. The Chicago Citizens reports that they are beginning to sing the same tune there on Sundays; and expresses a hope, that before long we shall have such a concord of sweet sounds every day in the week, if there is occasion for it. But the Springfield Washingtonian caps the climax, by saying that the Mayor of that town goes one octave higher than any body else, and sings the rummies a tune to the sum of thirty dollars for each offence, week days as well as Sundays, and that the Common Council, four-fifths of the men, and all the women, "join in the chorus." The editor further expresses an opinion, that all who have not such "music in their souls," and are not moved by this

> "Concord of sweet sounds,
> Are fit for treason, stratagem and spoils."

CHRISTMAS AND THE PILGRIMS.—Great changes have come over the customs of New England since the days of the Pilgrims, as will be seen by comparing the following law of the colony of Massachusetts in 1651, with the present practice of holding meetings, giving presents, and feasting families on Christmas day. What would have been the feelings of a Pilgrim Father, who had visited the scene of his former trials on the 25th day of December in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and [illegible] Here is the law:—

"Whoever shall be found observing any such day as Christmas, and the like, either by forbearing labor, feasting, or any other way, upon such an account as aforesaid, every such person, so offending, shall pay for such offence five shillings as a fine to the county."

LICENSE OR NO LICENSE.—On the 28th of April next, the question whether the Boards of Excise shall or shall not grant licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, is to be submitted to the legal voters of the State of New York. A more important issue has seldom if ever been brought before them; and we are glad that they will be permitted to express their opinion upon it without embarrassment from those party feelings which always attend upon general elections. Intemperance has undoubtedly been encouraged by the custom in this State of legalizing the sale of intoxicating drinks; and pauperism and crime have always followed in the train of intemperance. Hence the vote will really be upon the question, whether the business of making paupers and criminals shall receive the sanction of the State authorities. We do not see how any sane man can doubt which side ought to be taken by the friends of humanity and good morals. If any have doubts, let them read and make up their minds in view of the following facts, which we copy from the N. Y. Tribune:—

It is a fact, that nine-tenths of the inmates of our Poor-Houses were brought there directly or indirectly by the use of intoxicating drinks.

It is a fact, that three-fourths of all the convicts in our State-Prisons, were hard drinkers previous to the commission of the crimes for which they are now imprisoned.

It is a fact, that the greatest sufferers from disease, and those whose maladies are most difficult to cure, are those who are addicted to the use of intoxicating drinks.

It is a fact, that of all who commit suicide in this country, ninety-nine in the hundred are the immediate or the remote victims of intoxicating drinks.

It is a fact, that in all families where the children are dirty, half naked and ill-fed; the rooms filthy and in disorder, the husband cross and discontented, and peevish, and the wives slatterns, ill-tempered and quarrelsome, one, if not both the parents are drinkers of intoxicating drinks.

It is a fact, that those who least frequently attend the worship of God, and shock the ears of modest people by their vulgarity, are spirit drinkers or spirit venders.

It is a fact, that it is a rare thing to see a keeper of a liquor shop where the poison is retailed in any church.

It is a fact, that most if not all the evils above recounted, originate in the lincensed dram shops in the State and Nation.

It is a fact, if these facts do not convince the voters of the State of New York, that it is their duty to put down, at the ballot-boxes, a traffic so destructive to the souls, bodies, and estates of men, they would hardly be convinced though one rose from the dead.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE OF MR. JUDSON.

A person who had an interview at Hamilton, N. Y., with the Rev. Adoniram Judson, the missionary, gives the following description of his personal appearance, which will interest those who have never seen him:—

"I had been led, from some strictures on his personal appearance, to expect an inferior looking man—but was most agreeably disappointed. Rarely have I seen a countenance or a mien, more expressive of true intellectual and moral greatness. Refinement in every feature, indications of suavity and firmness most strikingly blended, and a certain indescribable expression of Christian simplicity, godly sincerity, sobriety and sweetness, thrown over the whole man like a celestial robe. His smile struck me as singularly significant and lovely, diffusing its sudden light over his dark and profoundly serious features, like sunshine breaking through the rifted clouds. His conversation was to me as delightful as his personal appearance was impressive—and as I looked upon the man, all the startling and romantic incidents of his wonderful life passed in review before me, and I thought how unsought and apparently unprized was all the eminence to which his modest and laborious career had brought him. I felt impressions of admiration and love, surpassing any with which I ever remember to have looked on man."

MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.—The Methodists of New England are now making vigorous efforts to collect funds for the endowment of an institution in which their rising ministry may receive a thorough theological education. One of their papers backs up an appeal in behalf of the object, by a letter of Adam Clark, written in 1806. Read the following extract from it, and say if he does not express the wants of other denominations as well as the early Methodists.

"We want—God knows!—we want some kind of Seminary for educating such workmen for the vineyard of our God as need not to be ashamed; but who now know not even how to use such talents as God has given them; where young men may be deemed fit for the work, may have (were it but twelve months, or even half a year's) 'previous instruction' in theology, in vital godliness, in practical religion, in English grammar, and the rudiments of general knowledge. As a body, we cannot stand and speak with our enemies in the gate, much less turn the battle to the gate. Many of our preachers are in a state of comparative non-age; because they have had no help, no director of their studies, no pointer-out of method, no explorer of the path in which we should tread. If we could raise funds, the first year, for the instruction of only three or six persons, would it not be a glorious thing? Speak, O speak speedily to all our friends Let us get a plan organized without delay. God, I hope, is in the proposal."

EDUCATION IN VIRGINIA.—In the State of Virginia they have no public school system like that which prevails in most of the Eastern and Middle States. Hence it happens, that notwithstanding the State is tolerably well provided with Colleges and Academies, the great body of the common people are in a state of deplorable ignorance. Gov. McDowell, in his last annual message to the Legislature, strongly urges the establishment of public schools, and in evidence of the need of them, speaks as follows:—

"Only consider that, of the 166,000 persons in this State, who are of a suitable age to be taught, that is, between 7 1-2 and 16, 46,000 only are reported as receiving any kind of education; and if the 12,000 and upwards of these who are credited to the Colleges, Academies, and classical schools, be deducted, there will be left but 34,000 who are going to common schools, and 120,000 who appear to be going to no school whatsoever!"

A NOBLE EXAMPLE.—A friend of tract distribution in Ohio, feeling a deep interest in having the outfit of colporteurs provided by individual friends of the enterprise, recently made a donation to the work of a valuable horse which cost $85. The following is the form of his subscription:—

"'Why loose ye the colt? Because the Lord hath need of him.' With a view of hastening the predicted period when 'holiness unto the Lord shall be written on the bells of the horses,' and on the horses themselves, I hereby cheerfully embrace the privilege of consecrating my favorite horse 'Faithful,' to the great colporteur work in the service of the American Tract Society."

ITEMS OF RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The press of the General Assembly's Board in China, from June 17, 1844, when it commenced operations, to the last of May, 1845, printed 4.136,000 pages. "It is not editions of 10,000, or 15,000, that will meet the wants of China," says their Executive Commitee, "editions of 100,000 are even now wanted."

The Armenian converts at Constantinople have of their own will formed a Bible Society of a peculiar character. Their design is to furnish the Armenian nation with a commentary on the Scriptures, and they have already engaged Rev. Mr. Goodell to furnish the commentary on the four Gospels.

The American Tract Society have received $63 47 from the first Presbyterian Church in Lodiana, Northern India, being their contributions for the Society to November 1, 1844. About $1,500 has been contributed in India to restore the mission-press destroyed by fire at Lodiana.

Bishop Boone and the reinforcement for the Episcopal mission to China reached Hong Kong in safety, with cheering prospects of usefulness. He soon proceeded on his voyage to the north of China, expecting that the mission would probably be located at Shanghai, the northernmost of the free ports.

Charles King, Esq., of the firm of Talbot, Olyphant & Co., who have done so much for missions to China, died recently at the mouth of the Red Sea, on his way to the United States.

The Constitutionel says, that the Roman Government has resolved on raising another loan, in order to take into its pay two more Swiss regiments, thereby increasing the Swiss corps in its service to 10,000 men. Ten thousand foreigners employed to protect Italy against herself. So much for the confidence of Rome in her own subjects and members.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.—We are requested to state, that the De Ruyter Institute, with its appurtenances, having been redeemed by a number of the members of our denomination, they hope to be able to re-open the same in the spring, with the design of making it useful to the cause of education, and to those for whom it was originally built. Farther particulars in due time.

CONDITION OF THE INDIANS.

The Annual Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs contains much valuable information concerning the Aborigines of this country. As every thing pertaining to them is of general interest, we copy the following abstract of that part of the Report which refers to their present social condition and prospects. It will be seen that there are encouraging signs of progress among them, and that their greatest danger is from habits which are introduced among them by the whites.

"A disposition among the Tribes to improve their condition by adopting the habits and conforming to the pursuits of the white man, is becoming very general. The use of ardent spirits among a few of the tribes has increased, while with the larger portion of them it has greatly diminished during the year. With proper exertions, the Commissioner thinks the sale of the 'Fire Water' may be suppressed entirely where the United States has exclusive jurisdiction; but there is a hoard of graceless scamps living in the States and organized Territories bordering on the Indian country, who continue this nefarious traffic, and afford the Indians ample opportunity of obtaining the poison so injurious to their peace and destructive to their race. The laws of the U. S. cannot reach such cases, and nothing but stringent laws rigidly enforced on the part of the States themselves can abate or remedy the evil.

"The cause of education is gradually extending its saving influence among the red men. The Choctaw and Cherokee tribes are farthest advanced in a knowledge of letters, agriculture, mechanic arts, &c. The latter tribe has twenty-eight schools all in a flourishing and prosperous condition, and supported out of its own funds, reserved by treaty and appropiated for that purpose. The noble example of these tribes has not been without its influence on their less cultivated neighbors; and a spirit of emulation seems now to pervade the Creeks, who have already several schools among them, in which are taught the primary and more useful branches of learning, and one of which is on the Manual Labor system. These people have recently requested the application of all their school funds to the establishment of two additionaal manual labor schools, and arrangements are in progress for their erection as desired, under the superintendance of the Presbyterian board of missions.

"The Chickasaws have likewise asked for the establishment of a manual labor school among them, and requested that a portion of their school money may be applied to that object; to this they propose to add out of their other funds such additional sum as may be sufficient to carry on the same. The Fort Leavenworth Manual Labor school (among the Delawares we suppose) under the patronage and direction of the M. E. Church, is represented to be in a flourishing condition. It is attended at present by 137 scholars—91 males and 46 females. The Friends' Manual Labor School in the Agency has 40 scholars—an equal number of each sex—and is likewise represented to be in a prosperous position. Col. Dick Johnson's Choctaw Academy in Kentucky is referred to, and said to be more prosperous than at ony former period—present number of students 68. Most of the Indian schools are either aided by the Government out of the funds set apart for the civilization of Indians, or are sustained by treaty stipulations. The Report commends with much force the system of Manual Labor Schools, and shows their peculiar adaptation to the condition and wants of these children of the forest.

"The Indians on the West side of the Rocky Mountains are spoken of in the highest terms of praise. Many of them have forsaken their habit of hunting and fishing, and now depend on agricultural pursuits for a livelihood. Numerous schools have grown up in their midst, at which their children are acquiring the most important and useful information. They have already advanced to a degree of civilization that promises the most beneficial results to them and their brethren on this side the mountains, with whom they may, and no doubt will, at some future period, be brought into intercourse."

SABBATH ACCIDENTS.

We copy the following items for the instruction of such persons as think that accidents all occur on Sunday. They were clipped from one paper, where they followed each other.

A young man by the name of Horace Banning, who had been employed some time in the Essex cotton mill, was run over on Saturday evening, by the railroad train between Rowley and Ipswich, and killed. He bought a ticket in Rowley, for Boston, and must either have attempted to jump off the cars while they were in motion, or have gone out on the platform for some purpose, and accidently fallen off. He was a native of Hartford, Conn., and about 23 years of age.

On Saturday forenoon, a sad accident occurred on the Lowell railroad, near the Woburn station. A man by the name of Conner, Constable at Lowell, was on his way on the down train to attend a Court at Cambridge, and on meeting the up train, was informed that he would not be needed as a witness. At this moment he attempted to jump upon the up train, when by some misstep, he was thrown down under the wheel of the car, which passed over him, mangling his legs in such a manner, that the amputation of both of them was soon after deemed necessary.

On Saturday afternoon, as Mr. Hayden of South New Market, was riding in a sleigh with his wife and child, and another lady, when approaching the railway crossing at New Market Village, the downward train from Portland being about to pass, he stopped his horse—but suddenly the horse sprang forward, and brought the sleigh in contact with the engine. Mrs. Hayden and child were killed instantly. The other lady was considerably injured, but Mr. Hayden escaped unhurt.

On Saturday last, a young seaman, son of Capt. Lane, of the bark Mary Boughton, at Boston, fell from aloft on the deck of that vessel, and was instantly killed. In the same city, on the same day, Mr. Johnson, master mason, fell from a staging and was instantly killed.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

Congress was in session only three days last week, having adjourned over from Tuesday to Saturday on account of Christmas. The following includes every thing of general interest which was done.

In SENATE, the Texas resolutions were under consideration; and after considerable discussion they were passed by a vote of 31 to 13—so that nothing but the President's signature is necessary to consummate the matter. A resolution was introduced, but not acted upon, declaring that it is expedient for the President to open negociations for the cession of the Island of Cuba to the United States. A bill was reported by the Judiciary Committee, and passed by the Senate, establishing Courts and extending the laws of the U. S. over Texas. It provides that Texas shall form one judicial District, to be called the District of Texas; one Judge to be appointed at a salary of $2,000; first Court to be held at Galveston on the first Monday of February next; to exercise same powers and jurisdiction as the District Courts of the United States, and of Circuit Courts; that a person learned in the Law shall be appointed U. S. Attorney for the District, and, also, that a Marshal shall be appointed, each to receive $200 salary and fees; that a Clerk be appointed also to receive the usual fees and compensation. The Senate succeeded in electing a Chaplain, Rev. Mr. Tustin being the successful candidate.

The HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, out of thirteen candidates for the Chaplaincy, finally elected Rev. Mr. Milbrun, a Methodist, from Illinois. The bill which passed the Senate, extending the laws of the U. S. over Texas, was passed also by the House. It will probably be conveyed to Texas by the same messenger who carries the joint resolutions with the President's signature. Nothing else of public interest was done in the House.

MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH.—A New York correspondent of the Charleston Courier, indulges in the following strain of reflections in prospect of the completion of several new telegraphic lines:—

"The Magnetic Telegraph is extending its iron nerves, strung with lightning, all over the Atlantic sea-board, and very shortly all the principal cities will communicate with each other instantaneously as the head holds correspondence with the heart and limbs. All events of the slightest importance will be known everywhere at once! a kind of practical omniscience, which must work great changes in our present manner of doing things—changes which, in some cases, must amount to revolution. It seem to me, for instance, that the newspaper press must essentially change its character, and that the mere lumber-news, which is of no consequence except as news, and is forgotten and completely useless as soon as read, must disappear from its columns. In a greatly-condensed, yet sufficient form, it will be transmitted along the wires and printed in a stick-full. But newspapers must live, and so much extra space must be filled. Thus they will be forced into a higher and broader course, and will plunge into discussions and agitations of all the great, startling, elemental forms of thought which give wings to the progress of the present age, and are carrying humanity far beyond what it has heretofore ever dreamed. None but the ablest pens—the enthusiastic, deep-thoughted, clear-headed, magnetic intellects, can hold position in the press; the weak and inefficient must go down, while the strong and able journals will be still farther strengthened and rendered more able.

THE NAVY.—Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith, is collecting together some astounding facts concerning the expensiveness and uselessness of the navy, which are likely to do considerable towards opening the eyes of the people. The following statistics are a fair specimen:—

"From 1815 to 1823, a period of about eight years, there were 28 Captains, whose average time of service, during this period, was less than two years; 30 Commandants, a little over two years; 172 Lieutenants, less than three and a half; and 8 Chaplains, less than one and a half years. In the Naval Register for 1845, it will be seen that, of 1,391 naval officers under pay of the government, 369 were waiting orders! Their salaries, at the fixed allowance for officers thus waiting orders, amounted to $444,170! Add to this the salaries of 8 Marine officers and Engineers, waiting orders the same year, we have the sum of $448,336 paid to non-effective officers of our Navy. Now the sum paid in 1845 to 278 members of Congress and to 38 Judges of the Supreme and District Courts of the United States was $445,500, less than the amount received by these naval officers while waiting orders. It would be easy to prove, that the non-effective men in this department alone receive annually more pay than is allowed to all the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, and to all the Judges of the Supreme and District Courts of the United States."

FATAL AND DISTRESSING ACCIDENT.—Miss Schuyler, a young lady of about 17, a niece of General Stephen Van Rensselaer, we are pained to state, came to her death yesterday afternoon in a sudden and shocking manner. She had just left the Manor House in company with a daughter of Gen. V. R. in his sleigh, which had scarcely passed the bridge on this side, when it was run against by a pair of runaway horses, attached to a loaded farmer's sleigh, that had broken loose from the corner below, and were furiously coursing up the street. The pole of the sleigh, it is supposed, struck Miss Schuyler, sitting on the back seat, in the side, crushing several ribs and causing almost instant death. She was conveyed immediately back to the Manor House, and medical attendance procured, but she ceased to breathe in about an hour after the accident. Miss V. R. who was sitting by her side, at the time, was in no way injured. [Alb. Argus.

CHARCOAL.—The preservative qualities of charcoal are not so generally known as they should be, and I hope you will tell your readers, that if they will imbibe their smoked beef and pork in pulverized charcoal, they may keep it as long as they please without regard to weather.

Tell them also, that if they will take about a pint of charcoal, also pulverized and put into a bag, then put into a barrel of new cider, it can never ferment, will never contain any intoxicating quality, and will become more and more palatable the longer it is kept. Further, take a piece of charcoal of the surface equal to a cubic inch, wrap it in a clean cotton cloth two thicknesses, and made moist, and work about one pound of butter which has become ranced, and it will restore it perfectly. THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIMS.—The 215th anniversary of the landing of the founders of the Plymouth Colony, was celebrated at the ancient town of Plymouth, on Monday. A large company was present. Among the distinguished gentlemen who took part in the services and festivities of the occasion, were the Hon. Edward Everett, Hon. Rufus Choate, Rev. Dr. Wayland, President Quincy, Dr. Woodward, Dr. Pierce, &c. After the public religious services, a dinner was provided, at which near 500 persons were present. The Hon. Charles H. Warren presided, and speeches full of curious reminiscences, pleasant recollections, and brilliant wit, were made.

WASHINGTON'S GRAVE.—A gentleman who has recently visited the grave of Washington at Mount Vernon, says—"It grieved me to the soul to witness the utter neglect which is visible around the consecrated spot. The rankest and foulest weeds are permitted to grow and flourish above and around it. A few scattering cedars, in all the wilderness of uncultivated nature, are the only trees to be seen in the vicinity of the grave; while around in every direction, the eye rests upon dilapidated rail fences, broken rails and scattered brushwood. The roads leading to it are washed into impracticable ravines covered with filth, and presenting nought that is agreeable, but every thing that is offensive to the eye, and uncongenial to the hallowed spot."

STRIKING COINCIDENCES—President Jefferson was born in 1743, just eight years after his predecessor, John Adams; Madison, eight years after his predecessor, Jefferson; Monroe, eight years after Madison, and John Quincy Adams eight years after Monroe. John Adams was just sixty-six years old when he retired; Jefferson was sixty-six; Madison was sixty-six; Monroe was sixty-six, and John Quincy Adams, had he been elected a second term would have been sixty-six. Adams, Jefferson and Monroe, all died on the 4th of July. [U. S. Journal.

A CURIOSITY.—A few years since, we mentioned a curious case, which we saw in the orchard of Mr. Isaac Pratt, Prattville, Chelsea. On a Russet apple tree, that had been grafted low in the stock, when small, there was a limb about an inch in diameter, some distance up in the top that bore Greening apples, both as to appearance and quality. We lately visited the same tree, and found the produce the same. Both kinds may be ssen at our office.

On another Russet tree, grafted in the same manner, and at the same time, we saw on different limbs sweet apples, which were in form, color, and quality, and time of ripening, distinct from the Russets. While the Russets were hard, flat, rough, dark colored, and green, the sweet apples were soft, long, smooth, light-colored, and ripe.

The productions are very singular indeed. We have no doubt that the stock effects the fruit of the scion, and that in one case the Russet scion was set in a Greening stock, and in the other, in a sweet stock. How else can this strange anomaly be accounted for? [Boston Cultivator.

ONE-EYED SOLDIERS.—Dr. Durben, in his late valuable work entitled "Observations in the East," just published by the Harpers, says that in some parts of Egypt, to avoid the conscriptions of Mehemit Ali, the women have been in the habit, for years back, of maiming their children so as to unfit them for military service. The destroying of one eye was a common operation. But the Pacha has taken an effectual way to put an end to this cruelty by forming two regiments of one-eyed soldiers. The evil is said to be already much diminished.

At Schaghticoke, N. J., on the 2d ult., Eleanor, aged 7 years, died of cancer in the throat—and on the 7th ult., of the same disease, Catharine, aged 20 years—and on the same day, of the same disease, Caroline, aged 5 years—all daughters of Philip and Eleanor Strunk. Also, on the 6th ult., of the same disease, Joseph Henry, aged 1 year, son of Philip H. and Eveline Strunk. The three latter were buried on the 8th ult., all at one time, from one house. Thus their afflicted parents buried out of their sight three children and one grandchild, in the short period of five days.

FAMILY RECIPES.

PLUM PUDDING FOR THE MILLION.—Take half a pound of flour, half a pound of currants, half a pound of grated carrots, half a pound of grated potatoes, a quarter of a pound of suet; and a little seasoning. Mix them together, and boil them in a basin an hour and a half. You will then have an excellent plum pudding for a trifle more than a sixpence! Just try the experiment.

TO TAKE STAINS OUT OF SILK.—Mix together in a phial, two ounces of lemon, one ounce of oil of turpentine. Grease and other spots in silk, are to be rubbed gently with a linen rag dipped in the above composition.

RECIPE FOR MAKING BREAD.—Mr. James Roche, a baker of Baltimore, well known for the excellency of his bread, has furnished for publication the following recipe for making it:—"Take an earthen vessel larger at the top than the bottom, and in it put one pint of milk-warm water, one and a half pounds of flour, a half a pint of malt yeast; mix them well together, and set away—in winter it should be in a warm place, until it rises and falls again, which it will in from 3 to 5 hours—it may be set at night if wanted in the morning; then put two large spoonsfull of salt into two quarts of water, and mix it well with the above rising, then put in about 9 pounds of flour, and work your dough well, and put by until it becomes light, then make it out in loaves. New flour requires one-fourth more salt than old and dry flour. The water should be tempered according to the weather; in the spring and fall it should only be milk-warm; in hot weather, cold; and in winter, warm."

A NICE AND WHOLESOME SWEETMEAT.—Pare, or not, as you choose, a quantity of sweet apples, to fill an earthen or stone jar; add a little sugar or molasses, and if the apples are not sufficiently juicy, a little water; cover with a thick paste of flour and water, and put it into a brisk oven with your bread. Let them stand till morning. They will then have the flavor of baked pears, and can be had fresh at all seasons.

SUMMARY.

A new monthly paper was commenced at the Sandwich Islands one year since, in Hawaiian, "devoted to parents and children." Four papers in English are published at Honolulu.

The Editor of the St. Louis Republican, writing about the President's Message, called it a 'State paper;' his compositor, by substituting an l for a t, made him say 'stale paper.' Quite a difference.

The fare between this city and Boston has, we learn, been raised to $5 on the Long Island, or day line, and the Norwich and Stonington steamboat lines.

Plenipotentiaries have been appointed by the Governments of Great Britain and Brazil to negotiate at Rio Janeiro for the conclusion of a Convention which may promote the suppression of the slave-trade without injuring the lawful commerce of Brazil.

The Albany Argus says: The thermometer at Brownville, Jefferson County, on the 11th Dec., at 7 A. M. touched 18 degrees below zero! on the 12th, same time, 31 below! Brownville is somewhat famous in this way. On the 5th Feb., '36, the mercury there fell to 37 degrees below zero.

At Boston, on Saturday, a thtef fastened the doors of jewelry shop by a piece of iron hoop, and then, dashing his hand through a pane of glass, seized a case of watches, and made off with his prize.

It is said there are 210,000 voters in the kingdom of France, out of a population of 39,000,000, or one vote to 170,000 inhabitants.

In England there are 860,000 voters, one to 18 inhabitants.

At Utica a screw manufactory, to employ 40 or 50 hands, is about to be established.

The coutemplated bridge over the Niagara River below the Falls has received a quietus. The matter having been referred to the British Board of Ordnance, that body has reported against it, as being dangerous in a military point of view.

Three children—the offspring of Mrs. Nancy Roberts, of Rochester, were burned to death in that city, on the 18th ult.

From all quarters we hear of most unusual cold weather, and in many places it has been extremely severe. On the 30th November the Wabash river was frozen over at Vincennes. On the 1st December they had ice at New Orleans, and skating at St. Louis. On the 2d the Ohio was frozen over at Wheeling, Va. The 4th the thermometer stood 16° below zero at Quebec. The 9th the Ohio froze over at Wheeling. The 11th the Connecticut river was frozen over. Three persons were frozen to death near Cumberland, Md., week before last. The extent and severity of the cold weather have been almost unprecedented this season.

The Quebec papers report a number of wrecks of vessels which departed late from that port for England. Five wrecked vessels are enumerated, which had on board 18,548 bushels wheat, 9,603 barrels flour, 13,309 minots of peas, and 836 tubs of butter. Several other vessels are reported as lost. There had been much suffering in the Bay from the tempestuous weather.

A correspondent of the New Bedford Mercury says, that in April, 1834, he made a passage from New York to Liverpool, in the packet ship Independence, Captain Nye, in fourteen days and five hours!

The packet ship Washington Irving arrived at Boston on Wednesday, from Liverpool, had on board four cows and seven sheep consigned to Daniel Webster.

Hon. Horace Mann, the able and indefatigable Secretary of the Massachusetts Education Society, in a recent address, says, that he looks upon all remarkably precocious children as of just about as much use in the world as so many remarkable apes.

The population of the State of New York, by the census for 1845, is 2 600,374: males, 1,313,335; females, 1,287,059. Increase in five years 170,938, of which 87,977 is in the city of New York, with its environs, Brooklyn and Williamsburg. The population of New York city, 371,102, is now greater than the aggregate population of Rhode Island, Delaware, Arkansas and Florida, was in 1840; it exceeds that of Connecticut, and wants but about 2,000 of being as great as that of New Jersey.

Eighteen newspapers have been issued from one building in Nassau street, New York, within twelve years, all but five of which have been discontinued.

The steam ship Britannia brought news that Thomas Lawrence, a man of 70 years of age, residing in obscure circumstances in the city of Albany, had become, by the death of a relative in England, sole heir to an estate valued at three millions of pounds sterling. He has a son living in Brooklyn, L. I.

The dwelling of W. H. Burleigh, editor of the Christian Freeman, at Hartford, was entered a few nights since by some hungry burglar, who helped himself to such small things as he could lay his hands on. Think once to what a straight a thief must be reduced before coolly and deliberately entering upon so unpromising an expedition as that of robbing an editor. Mr. Burleigh says the fellow is welcome to the eatables which he carried off, but begs him to bring back his wood-saw, which he says is the only musical instrument upon which he is accustomed to play.

A fine male child, apparently about six weeks old, was found about 8 o'clock on Friday night, on the stoop of house No. 81 Second street, where its cries attracted the attention of Mr. Pearson, who took it into his house until it could be otherwise properly provided for.

A man by the name of Mills, from Tompkins Co., N. Y., came to this City about the 13th ult. and put up at 253 Washington street, with a team and load of poultry. He left the hotel on the 15th, and has not been seen nor heard of since. The team remaineth, as above, at the order of his friends.

Review of New York Market—Monday, Dec. 29.

FLOUR AND MEAL—The market was firm on Saturday at 5 62½ for Genesee, below which we believe it could not be had at the close for shipment. We notice sales in the morning of 1500 to 2000 barrels at 5 56½@5 62½, for shipment, and 600 to 700 bbls Michigan at 5 56½. A sale was made on Saturday evening of 2000 bbls Genesee for shipment at 5 69, which shows a farther advance, and to-day the market is steady at 5 75. Sales 250 bbls Troy at 5 75. The demand from the East is good, which tends to stiffen prices. Sales 200 bbls Rye Flour at 4 25. Some supplies of Corn Meal are now on the market. Jersey is held at 4 25@4 37½. Brandywine 4 37½; hhds 18 00.

GRAIN—On Saturday a small sale of old white Jersey Corn was sold at 76 cents. To-day we do not hear of a single transaction in Grain excepting 1300 bushels Southern Oats at 40c. There was no Corn offering. A lot of Barley was offered at 72c without buyers. Several samples of Wheat were on 'Change, but they were held above the views of millers or shippers. Canal Oats are 47@48 cents, and dull.

PROVISIONS—The market is dull and prices about nominal. The only sale we heard of was 50 bbls Prime Pork. One year old Pork we quote 10 25@10 37½, and 13 12½@13 25 for Prime and Mess. Beef is 7 75@8 50, with moderate trade demand. Sour is selling at 2 87½@3 00, and 3 25@3 50, and in demand. Prime Mess for export is 14 00. Lard is quiet at 8¼@8⅜c. Butter and Cheese without particular change.

DIED,

In Philadelphia, on the 22d ult., of small pox, EBENEZER DAVIS, in the 43d year of his age. Brother Davis made a profession of religion in early life, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Shiloh, N. J., where he remained a useful member until removed by this inscrutable providence, which will be keenly felt by his bereaved widow, the church, and a large circle of friends.

At his residence in the village of Pawcatuck, Stonington, Conn., Dec. 28, Dr. WILLIAM ROBINSON, [aged 81 years and 2 months. Dr. Robinson has been for fifty-seven years, and until within four days previous to his death, one of the most worthy practicing physicians of his age. For the last forty years he has been a resident of Pawcatuck, and at the time of his death he was the oldest man in the village.

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

The 2d Semi-Annual Session of the Central Association will be held with the first church in Verona, on the third and fourth days of the week, Jan. 6th and 7th, 1846. Introductory discourse by Eld. G. M. Langworthy, or Eld. Elias Burdick, his alternate. There will be two Essays or Tracts presented for examination. One on Communion, the other on Baptism. All Missionaries employed by the Association will then make their reports, and farther action will be taken relative to Missionary Operations. The subject of obtaining legal protection in the enjoyment of the Sabbath, from the Legislature, will probably come before the Association. The Agent of the American and Foreign Bible Society has given notice that he will be present, and with leave will present the claims of that Society. A full attendance is very desirable.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
IRA SAYLES, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathematics.
GURDON EVANS, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. HARTSHORN, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. STILLMAN, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. MAXSON, Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences. The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

SOUL-SHADOWS.

BY PARK BENJAMIN.

Oh, where are the cheerful days—
The cheerful days that my childhood knew?
Vanished like summer haze
From a morning sky of unclouded blue;
Vanished and gone to return no more,
Like the foam dashed up on a sandy shore.

Oh, ye pleasant and fled delights!
What would I give to recall you now?
Weary days and slumberless nights
Press on my heart and wrinkle my brow:
And I am changed like a leaf that fades
Hidden under the depths of a forest's shade.

The future smiles not as of old,
The present is dreary and sad and dark;
The clouds are not skirted with gold,
There comes no dove to my longing ark;
I look up to heaven and over the sea,
And there is no rainbow of hope for me.

Sometimes there's a passing gleam,
Sometimes there breaks on my desolate lot
A flash from a thought or a dream,
But it flickers away and I see it not;
And deeper settles the sombre pall,
And gloomier still the shadows fall.

Love! thou wast once my own;
But I cast thee off like a worthless glove;
And now I am forever alone,
And seek in vain for the guerdon, Love.
Doubt and fear like sentinels stand,
But I've lost the clew to the flowery land.

"Live lonely and lonely die!"
Such are the words on the scroll of Fate—
I read them now with a quiet eye,
For my soul is powerless even to hate;
And there's but one bliss which I dare to crave,
And that—thank God! is beyond the grave.

HOW TO GET A GOOD HUSBAND.

BY REV. STILLMAN MORGAN.

Rebekah, a beautiful and an accomplished young lady, lived in a city, called Nahor. Not far from the city, there was a well, owned in common by the people. One fine evening, Rebekah, as her manner was, took her pitcher in her hand and proceeded toward the well to get some water for the family. When she came within sight of the well, her attention was attracted by a herd of camels, ten in number, on their knees, asking for water. By their side sat a stranger, of sedate countenance, apparently at prayer. As Rebekah drew near the well, the stranger lifted his eyes and saw a young lady with a pitcher on her shoulder. The moment he saw her, he was deeply impressed with her beauty, modesty, and gentleness. Rebekah did not stop to make any conversation with the stranger, but went directly down to the well, filled her pitcher and came up. The stranger saw that now was his time to address her. We may well imagine that his heart beat high, for the great question was soon to be decided. As she was about to leave the well, he ran to meet her; but when he came up to her, he thought it not prudent abruptly to address her on the topic which filled his heart, as it might shock her modesty and defeat the whole enterprise. Addressing her, therefore, respectfully, but timidly, he informed her that he was very thirsty and would like to drink a little water from her pitcher. She gracefully complied with his request, and, as the pitcher was quite heavy, assisted him in holding it while he drank. I cannot say how long it took him to drink, and praise the coolness and freshness of the water, to speak of the heat of the day, and to express his thanks for her kindness and courtesy to a stranger; but it was sufficiently long for the young lady to take a survey of him, his camels, and his burthens. Impressed with the simplicity and gentle behaviour of the stranger, and seeing that he was very weary with his journey, Rebekah politely offered to draw water for his camels, also. So she ran back and forth with her pitcher, from the trough to the well, and from the well to the trough, until ten thirsty camels had satisfied themselves with water. All the while she was doing this, the man remained silent, wondering at her generosity and hospitality to a stranger. He might have been thinking that there was a Providence in all this, or he might have been contriving in his mind how he should ascertain where the maiden lived, and how he could get an invitation to remain with her father's family over night, for it was then growing dark, and he must soon have a place for himself and camels.

When the camels, therefore, had done drinking, he took from his pocket a gold ring, and, stepping toward Rebekah, gave it to her. He also gave her two bracelets for her hands. Upon the presentation of these, Rebekah probably mistrusted what the good man was thinking about. He then said, "Tell me whose daughter art thou? And is there room for us all to come to your father's and lodge to-night?" The maiden immediately told him her name, and, moreover, that her father had room enough for him and all his retinue. She also answered other questions, which he durst not put, assuring him that they had both straw and provender, sufficient for himself and camels, and room for all to lodge. Upon this, the weary stranger bowed his head and worshipped God. He then delicately alluded to the subject nearest his heart, but durst not speak plainly to the blushing maiden. He said as much as was prudent for him to say before he had seen her father and mother. Upon this Rebekah ran to the house, and said a stranger was down by the well, waiting for an invitation for a lodging for himself and camels, showing, at the same time, the ring and bracelets he had given her. Now Rebekah had a brother, who, upon hearing her relation, ran down to the well and said to the man, "Come in, thou blessed of the Lord. Wherefore standest thou without? We are all ready; room enough; come, and welcome." Then the man went into the house. Rebekah's brother ungirded the camels and gave them straw and provender, while Rebekah provided water for the stranger's feet and the servants who were with him. By the time they had finished washing, supper was provided, and the maiden's father invited the stranger and his servants to eat. But he replied that he must do his errand first. So supper waited, while he went on to unburthen his mind.

He commenced by announcing that he was Abraham's servant, and that his master was a very rich man. But being an old man, and having a beloved son, by name Isaac, he wished to see him married before he died, adding, that none but a pious daughter would please the old gentleman. He was very particular on this point, for he had high expectations concerning his son. He informed them, also, that all the property had fallen into Isaac's hands. "And I have come," said he, "in pursuit of a bride for him. While at the well, this evening, venerable father, I was most favorably impressed with the appearance of your daughter. I have no doubt that she is a suitable maiden for Isaac, for God has given me a favorable token. But it is proper I should get her parents' consent."

What the stranger said convinced Rebekah's father and mother that the call for her was from God. Then the great and decisive question was put to the parents in these words: "And now, if ye will deal kindly and truly with my master, tell me; and if not, tell me; that I may turn to the right hand or to the left." Then the old people piously answered in the affirmative. This answer so pleased the servant of Abraham, that he bowed himself and gave thanks to God. He then brought forth jewels of silver and gold, beside beautiful raiment for her wedding day, and gave them to the blushing bride. He presented, also, precious things to her mother and her brother. Supper being ended, all retired. I cannot say how much Rebekah slept that night, but I reckon she had not a little anxiety to get a view of her distinguished bridegroom, of whom she had just heard such a glowing description, and from whom had come such a pious messenger.

Having finished his business, the next morning the servant was desirous to depart for home. But Rebekah's mother and brother begged he would not be in haste, but let the damsel abide with them a few days, at least ten; as he was decided, however, they called Rebekah and said to her, "Wilt thou go with this man? And she said, I will go." Eventful morning!

The camels were reladen, and all being ready, the family gathered round the beautiful bride to give the parting kiss, and to pronounce upon her such blessings as pious patriarchs bestow upon their children. When the affecting parting ceremony was ended, and Rebekah and her damsels were well seated on the camels, the whole procession moved off, following Abraham's trusty servant.

Now, at eventide, Isaac went out into the fields to meditate; and he lifted up his eyes and saw, and behold, the camels were coming. About the same moment, Rebekah saw him advancing toward the company, and inquired of the servant who he was. Being informed that it was his master, she alighted from the camel and drew a veil over her face. The good servant introduced each to the other, and gave Isaac a history of his expedition. Then Isaac led his bride to his mother's tent, and she became his wife. So Isaac was comforted after his mother's death.

REFLECTIONS.—Beloved daughters, allow me to address you a few words in the way of advice.

1. Do not think lightly of manual employment. If Rebekah had felt above labor, she probably would not have found Isaac as a husband.

2. Never look for a husband, or suffer yourself to be diverted from an honorable employment, through fear that you will be found by some young man at work, and so be slighted. You may be slighted by some for your industry; but, be assurred, that, to be passed by, by such, is a blessing. A good minister, whose name was Reuel, had seven daughters. Being very much occupied with his public vocations, they took care of his sheep. Going to the well one day to water them, they met a young man there, who politely aided them in their task. This act of courtesy attracted the good minister's notice, and he invited the young man to his house, who soon made acquaintance with his family, married one of the daughters became a great blessing to all of them, and a great man and a leader in Israel.

The woman of Samaria, on a similar errand to the well, met a greater than Isaac, or Moses. Follow, therefore, your appropriate business; put your confidence in the Most High; keep his commandments; and if He has a companion for you, He will find you, and order every thing for your good.

3. Let your bearing toward all, and especially toward strangers, be respectful and courteous. You may thereby entertain angels, unawares. There was in Rebekah's character a natural politeness, and yet such modesty, as much deserves imitation.

4. Treat servants well. He who met Rebekah at the well was but a servant. Yet how kindly does the maiden speak to him; and how cheerfully does she provide for him. And was she not greatly rewarded for this, by being honored with Isaac for a husband? See also how her good conduct was thought worthy of being recorded, to be read and admired by all generations, down to the end of time.

5. You cannot be too discreet and careful in your choice of a companion. Think of the numerous instances of unhappy marriages. A pious daughter gives her hand to one who loves not God or religion. Two evils follow. They disagree, the house being divided against itself; and the "children speak half in the language of Ashdod, and half in the language of Canaan."

6. Be advised never to contract a marriage, or at all pledge yourself until you have consulted your parents or near friends. And he who will not consult your friends in such a matter, but despises counsel, is not the man to be trusted. As great a man as Moses first sought the good will of the priest of Midian, and then married his daughter. Rebekah makes no pledge, but retires until Abraham's servant has laid the whole matter before her father, mother, and brother, and obtained their consent.

7. A good rule in making choice of a companion for life is this. Ascertain how the suitor treats his mother and his sisters. Isaac loved his mother, and had not done mourning for her, until he found and married Rebekah. Remember—a kind son and a kind brother will make a kind husband.

8. One rule more. Be cautious of marrying into a family where the marriage institution is lightly thought of. As the good old patriarch Abraham was about to die, he made provision for his son; made over his vast possessions into his hands, and then advised him to marry, that God might be honored and the world made better. Not many years after Isaac's marriage, he gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age, and was gathered to his fathers.

Blessed man! Blessed family! And thrice blessed Rebekah! May all our beloved children read the history of that family; and reading, may they admire and imitate; and imitating, may they receive the blessings of Abraham.

THE LAW AND THE SEDUCER.—We stated in our Law Court Reports on Saturday that Mr. Goulding had commenced a suit for damages—the only reparation promised by the law—against the seducer of his daughter, and that the defendant had been held to bail in $5,000. In the affidavits on which the action is based, the plaintiff states that he has a family, consisting of a wife and several children—three of the latter daughters, and two of them unmarried, viz: Esther, 16 years of age, and Catherine; and that "much attention has been devoted to their education," &c. Considerably more than a year ago, Esther, "who was a very handsome young girl," became acquainted with Daniel W. Talcott, "a young man of good appearance, and introduced to this deponent and his family under such circumstances that they had confidence in his honor and integrity." His "attentions and visits were so marked, so frequent, and of that character, that this deponent was very soon convinced that an attachment existed between the said Esther and the said Talcott." He supposed his intentions to be "altogether honorable." At first the father "felt some misgivings, growing out of the position of the parties; but upon consulting with friends, and taking into consideration the beauty of the girl, and her education, came to the conclusion that wealth would not be considered; that no evil was designed by Talcott, but that his intention was to marry the said Esther." Talcott, it is averred, would frequently take her to places of amusements, and they were in the habit of visiting the houses of mutual friends together; and that among others, not long previous to the abduction, they passed an evening at the house of a friend who is named in the affidavit. Mr. G. goes on to state that Talcott had succeeded in entirely winning the affections of his daughter, and that, beyond all question, he had so succeeded by inducing her to believe, either by promises or otherwise, that he would marry her. From information possessed by the father, he states that he has no doubt that the plan, from the beginning, was one of deliberate villany, and he believes that Talcott, from the first, designed to seduce and carry off Esther, and make her his mistress. About nine or ten weeks since, on a Saturday evening, Esther left the house of her father, on persuasion of Talcott and his emissaries.

Jane Hawthorn, sister of Esther, in her affidavit, stated among other things that "she has seen the notes, or many of them, written by said Talcott to her sister, and that they were of a very affectionate character, and calculated to win the confidence of a young girl; that Talcott had completely succeeded in winning the affections and confidence of her sister, and in making her believe that he would marry her, as Esther has frequently told her." She also states that her sister was a modest, unassuming and kind-hearted girl, and the pride of her family and friends, and possessed of very extraordinary personal attractions. As already stated, the worst fears of the father have been realized in regard to his child. Talcott has been held to bail, as mentioned on Saturday, in the sum of $5,000. Sad, sad story—and furnishing one more and the latest appeal to the common humanity of Legislators to provide some stringent law which will act as a restraint upon the passions of unprincipled villains who infest every rank of society and now enact their infamous deeds without fear of punishment. Here is a clear case of seduction and abduction. Talcott, the betrayer of this girl's innocence, is traced to the place where he has concealed her and arrested, while she appears, with the evidence of her guilt and shame all too plain, and with a woman's fond folly screens her destroyer at the expense of every truth. Well—the law is powerless—the broken hearted father has no redress—he must take his dishonored daughter to a home never more to be happy—while the villain who has deliberately wrought so much misery goes free of punishment, save the payment of a paltry sum of money. Shame on ye, law makers! [N. Y. Tribune.

THE AFFECTION OF OLD AGE.—How beautifully affecting to witness an aged couple who have weathered life's storms hand in hand, and smiled on each other amid all the trials and tribulations which they have met in this "vale of tears"—even as when basking together in the brightest sunshine of prosperity—whose pleasure in each other's society is decreased not by the rude buffetings of Time—that sure despoiler of all that is beautiful in the "human form divine." To such a couple, thoughts of the past are an inexhaustible spring of joy, as, from the mirror of memory, the bright rays of youthful happiness and love are once more reflected upou them, and the pure spirit of religion unfolds to their view, through the hopeful prospect of a happy union in that world

"Where parting is no more."

It is as impossible for a person to draw near to God with the confidence of faith, while he lives in the love and practice of sin, as it is for a person to come to you and go from you at the same instant of time.—Ebenezer Erskine.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

A HYMN FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Praise to the Lord, let children give,
Dependent on whose care we live:
From day to day, from year to year,
His mercies numberless appear.

'Tis He who gives us life and breath,
And keeps us every hour from death;
And every moment, from above,
He looks on us with thoughts of love.

Though we offend each day we live,
The Lord is ready to forgive;
If we repent and seek his face,
We shall obtain his pardoning grace.

Great God! we mourn to think that we
So often have offended thee:
O turn us from all evil ways,
And guide us all our future days.

Through this new year be thou our friend,
And ours till time and life shall end;
Then shall we spend eternity
In loving, serving, praising thee.

Life is short and full of trouble.

Job xv. 1. Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble.

Job, the author of this text, was a very rich and very honorable man, and was respected and loved by all good people who knew him. But through Satanic influence, his property was all destroyed, his children were slain, his friends deserted him, his body was smitten with disease, and he became a subject of the deepest affliction. This gave him very clear views of the instability, shortness, and sorrows of human life, and it was under these circumstances that he uttered these words: "Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble.

1. By "man," is meant any human being, mankind generally. It includes not only men, but women, and every little boy and girl is also comprehended in the term "man," in the text.

2. It is asserted that they are of few days. Any given period of time is long or short, according to the length of some other period with which it is composed, and to which it sustains some relation. Suppose some of the children should have the promise of an afternoon for play; the whole period is six hours. Now suppose one of the children to be detained from the party two hours, these two hours compared with the six, will appear a long time. But suppose the whole period to be a year, then two hours taken off from the whole year, is a short time. When mother goes out and leaves the children alone, and promises to be back in one hour, and stays an hour and fifteen minutes, the last fifteen minutes constitute a long time in the estimation of the children. It is on the same principle that Job says that man is of few days. There are 365 days in one year, and the average life of man is about thirty years. This will make all the days in a man's life 10,950. This may appear a great many days, but only think of all the days that have come and gone during the six thousand years since the world was made, and man will appear to be of few days. But consider that the future state will be endless, and that it is in this life only that we can prepare for eternity so as to render it happy, and life will appear of few days.

3. These few days are said to be full of trouble. All are full of trouble. Children have their troubles. This is the first number of the Juvenile for the new year, and cannot all the children look back and count many troubles they have had during the past year? Many poor children have been troubled because they have not been able to get all the nice articles of dress they wanted; and some have been foiled in their plans for play and enjoyment. Some have had trouble on account of the intemperance of their fathers. Those children that have drunken fathers have a great deal of trouble, and suffer much. Some have lost their parents during the past year; they can now remember how they felt when their father or their mother died. Some may have lost a little brother or sister during the year, and they have not forgotten how they cried, when he or she died and was laid in the cold dark grave. These are only some of the troubles of life, we cannot mention them all.—They will vary as you grow older; when you become men and women you will not have all the same troubles you do now, but you will have others in their place, which will be as bad, and which will make a more lasting impression of sorrow upon your hearts, so that, as a whole, the troubles of life will increase.

It is then true, that "man that is born of a woman, is of few days and full of trouble."

We will close with a few words of improvement.

1. Life which consists of but few days is fast passing away. We have now 365 days less to live than we had at the commencement of the past year. How many days we have left we do not know. Some dear children who will read this sermon, will cease to read, will die and be in the silent grave before the year will close. Before another lovely spring shall bloom; before another summer shall ripen and fade; before the winds of another autumn shall sigh, some of our dear little readers will probably be dead. Who will it be?

2. As we have a less number of days to live than we had, so we have less troubles to endure. If each day was full of trouble, so each day bore away the troubles it brought, to bring them back no more. The troubles of life can never be escaped, but must be past through, and now we have got through all the troubles of another year. It is true the few pleasures we have had have gone with them; they are gone together, and now let us look to the future and prepare for what is to come.

3. All the real troubles and sorrows we endure in this life, are in consequence of sin, and unless we repent of our sins and are renewed and saved, we shall have trouble forever, trouble without the few pleasures we enjoy here, and trouble without hope of a better lot.

4. The brightest thought in all this subject is, if we live as we should, and as we may live, when the few days of life are gone, with them will end all our trouble, and end forever. There will be no trouble in heaven where all good people find a resting place when life is finished; there we shall enjoy happiness without mixture of sorrow, happiness full and endless. Children, be good, and try to live this year, so that if it be your last, you may go to heaven. Amen.

The above map represents the United States with reference to slavery and liberty. The slave states appear dark, and the free states appear light. The dark color is indicative of crime, misery and depression; while the light color signifies liberty and prosperity.

It will be seen that the map was drawn for 1837, and hence, it is not now correct. Texas is drawn too light; it was then a Mexican Province, slavery having been abolished by Mexico, but now it constitutes one of our states, under a constitution which forbids the abolition of slavery; it should therefore appear as black as the other slave states. When those dark shades will be wiped away from the face of our country, we cannot say, but it must and will be done. If the present generation does not abolish slavery, we are sure that those who are now little boys will do it when they get to be men. Children, you should pray for your country, for the slaves and the slaveholders, every day. [Juv. Wes.

Lambert Lowe.

Lambert Lowe went about in his old age from one place to another, with his grandson, Peter, selling tapes, laces, purses, cotton, thread, pins, and needles. He had long been known, and was respected all the country round. Had Lambert gone forth alone, he could not have arriced his basket, being infirm; and had Peter gone without his grandfather, people would not have bought what he had to sell; but when they both went together they did very well.—Peter carried the basket, and Lambert often leaned one hand on his shoulder when he wanted to speak to him.

Who is that boy yonder who is mocking poor old Lambert? Oh, I see now—it is Harry Warner. Have a care, Harry! Have a care; for they who mock the old in their youth, may be mocked by the young in their age!

Restrain thy mirth, in time be wise,
Nor dare the hoary head despise.

Lambert Lowe had thin legs and broad shoulders, and wore a loose coat, and a hat with a low crown and broad brim on his grey head; he walked with a stick, and his face and figure ought to have commanded respect; but Harry Warner was thoughtless, and laughed at almost everybody.

"He is mocking us," said Peter, just as they came under the ash tree by the road side; "Harry Warner is mocking us, grandfather; and see, he has thrown a stone at us; there it lies, just by the end of your stick!"

"Never mind him, Peter," replied the old man, "young people are thoughtless, and we must not be too hard upon them. After all, Harry may not be half so ill-natured as you take him to be; and as to the stone, perhaps he only bowled it along the road out of a frolic. Never mind him, Peter. God's holy word says that 'Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child,' Prov. xxii. 15; let us then bear with him. But see! here is a tip-cat, Peter, lying in the road; pick it up and take it to Harry Warner, may be he has lost it; but whether he has or not, he will be glad of it."

Peter set down his basket, and picking up the tip-cat, went with it to Harry Warner, telling him that they had just found it in the road, and that his grandfather had told him to bring it to him. Harry took the tip-cat, looking sheepish and ashamed, but he did not speak a word.

Many people may think that a sharp reproof from Lambert Lowe would have done Harry more good than giving him a tip-cat, but that is rather a doubtful matter. All that I know is this, that the very next time Lambert Lowe and his grandson Peter went that way, Harry Warner, who was scrambling among the brambles with his playmates ran up to them as fast as he could, to offer them half a hatful of blackberries. I think Lambert Lowe was right, and that if he had churlishly broken his stick over young Harry's back, he would never have won him over as he did by giving him the tip-cat.

Then honor hoary hairs, ye young,
For honor is their due;
And bear with youth, ye aged men,
For once your years were few.

No better rule than this can men,
Or wisest books afford;
To live in peace with all mankind,
And love and praise the Lord.

I AM A TEETOTALLER.

There is a family, residing in rather retired apartments in this city, consisting of the father, mother, and several children, the youngest a daughter about seven years of age. This family has become reduced in circumstances in consequence of a spinal disease which has for a long time confined the father to his house. Our friend was in the habit of calling occasionally and expressing his sympathy for the afflicted, not only in kind words and fervent prayers, but in the substantial way of leaving part of his substance. He had never introduced the subject of temperance, although he always carries the pledge in his pocket, and always watches his opportunity to use it effectually. A few days ago, while he was present, the father, wishing no doubt to manifest his appreciation of his neighbor's kindness, called to his youngest child to go and get a pitcher of beer for himself and kind neighbor.

The little girl replied, "I can't, father." "Can't," says the father, "why you must." "But I certainly cannot, father," continued the daughter. The father was surprised at such unusual pertinacity, and again bid her do as she was told. The little girl replied again, as the tears began to stream from her eyes, "Why father, you know I would do anything in the world for you, but that I can't do." "But what is the reason?" "Because I've signed the pledge." "Signed the pledge, what is that?" "Why, father, I'm a teetotaler." This brought all parties to an explanation, and it was soon ascertained that the little teetotaler had attended a temperance meeting a few evenings before, and, with several others of her mates, had put her name to the pledge.

Our friend saw his opportunity and improved it. He pulled a printed pledge out of his pocket, and soon, by following up the impression made by the "last speaker," had the satisfaction of seeing all the rest of the family affix their names to that saving instrument.—Soon our little heroine's face was beaming again with sweet smiles: and, whenever temptation assails her in future life, may her motto and her sufficient protection be

"I'm a Teetotaler."

THE BOY AND THE BOATMEN.

A young lad was once rowing me across the Merrimack river in a boat. Some boatmen, going down the river with lumber, had drawn up their boat and anchored it in the spot where the boy wished to land me.

'There!' he exclaimed, 'those boatmen have left their boat right in my way.'

'What did they do that for?' I asked.

'On purpose to plague me,' said he; 'but I will cut it loose, and let it go down the river. I would have them know I can be as ugly as they can.'

'But my lad,' said I, 'you should not plague them because they plague you. Because they are ugly to you, it is no reason why you should be to them. Besides, how do you know they did it to vex and trouble you?'

'But they had no business to leave it there—it is against the rules,' said he.

'True,' I replied, 'and you have no business to send their boat down the river. Would it not be better to ask them to remove it out of the way?'

'They will not comply, if I do,' said the angry boy, 'they will do so again.'

'Well, try it for once,' said I. 'Just run your boat a little above, or below theirs, and see if they will not favor you, when they see you disposed to give way to accommodate them.'

The boy complied; and when the men in the boat saw the little fellow quietly and pleasantly pulling at his oars, to run the boat ashore above them, they took hold and helped him, and wheeled their boat around, and gave him all the chance he wished.

Thus, by submitting patiently to what he believed was done to vex him, the boy prevented a quarrel. Had he cut the rope, at that time and place, and let their boat loose, it would have done the boatmen much damage. There would have been a fight, and many would have been drawn into it. But the boy, who considered himself the injured party, prevented it all by a kind and pleasant submission to the injury.

DR. ABERNETHY.

This man who was celebrated for his eccentricity of character, possessed great goodness of heart. A female who consulted him for a ulcer on her arm, was particularly asked, 'what is the matter with you?' The patient immediately held up her arm, but did not utter a word, 'Oh, oh!' said the doctor, 'poultice it, and take five grains of blue pill every night, that's all; come again in a week.' The fee was presented, but refused; at the end of the week, the patient presented herself again, when the same pantomine took place, and the fee was again declined. After a few more visits, Dr. Abernethy, on looking at the arm pronounced it well, when the patient again offered the fee. 'No,' said the doctor, 'from you nothing will I receive, for you are the most sensible woman I ever saw. You don't talk.'

Another lady consulted Dr. A. respecting a nervous disorder, the minutiæ of which appeared to be so fantastical, that the doctor interrupted their frivolous detail, by holding out his hand for the fee. A one-pound note and a shilling were placed into it, upon which he returned the latter to his fair patient, with the angry exclamation, 'There ma'am! go and buy a skipping rope; that is all you want.'

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PUBLISHED AT NO. 9 SPRUCE ST.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE ORIGINAL SABBATH UNCHANGED;

OR,

THE CONTINUING OBLIGATION OF THE SEVENTH DAY, AND THE UNAUTHORIZED SUBSTITUTION OF THE FIRST, AS THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

BY JAMES A. BEGG, GLASGOW, N. B.

SECTION II. [Concluded.

In these sabbatic convocations, provision was made for the hearing and expounding the law of God by the people. The leisure of years of release afforded special facilities for this, and for instructing men, women, and children, servants and strangers. The word and ordinances, the character and providence, of the divine Lawgiver, would be learned with advantage when all were withdrawn from their usual avocations of labor and industry. It was enjoined as an ever-obligatory duty. "And Moses wrote this law, and delivered it unto the priests the sons of Levi which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and unto all the elders of Israel. And Moses commanded them, saying, At the end of every seven years, in the solemnity of the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles, when all Israel is come to appear before the Lord thy God in the place which He shall choose, thou shalt read this law before all Israel, in their hearing. Gather the people together, men, and women, and children, and thy stranger that is within thy gates, that they may hear, and that they may learn, and fear the Lord your God, and observe to do all the words of this law; and that their children, which have not known anything, may hear, and learn to fear the Lord your God as long as ye live in the land whither ye go over Jordon to possess it." Deut. 31: 9—13. The exemption from labor, and the blessing of God which rendered that labor unnecessary, were means employed for enlarging their acquaintance with the character of the God with whom they had to do. And for the purpose of securing to all a knowledge of His revealed will, it was solemnly to be read in their hearing, in a public manner, during the leisure provided for them.

The desire of God for the happiness and the help of the Israelites in these appointments, is indeed often and emphatically expressed. "Thou shalt keep the feast of weeks unto the Lord thy God with a tribute of a free-will offering in thine hand, which thou shalt give unto the Lord thy God, according as the Lord thy God hath blessed thee. And thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God; thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servent, and the Levite that is within thy gates, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are among you, in the place which the Lord thy God hath chosen to place his name there. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt; and thou shalt observe and do these statutes. Thou shalt observe the feast of tabernacles seven days after that thou hast gathered in thy corn and thy wine; and thou shalt rejoice in thy feast; thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite, the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are within thy gates. Seven days thou shalt keep a solemn feast unto the Lord thy God, in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose; because the Lord shall bless thee in all thine increase, and in all the works of thine hands, THEREFORE THOU SHALT SURELY REJOICE." Deut. 16.: 10—15.

How little are such statements in accordance with the notions of those who talk of the Mosaic economy as having a most burdensome and oppressive ritual! "And there ye shall eat before the Lord your God, and ye shall rejoice in all that ye put your hand unto, ye and your households, wherein the Lord thy God hath blessed thee." "And ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God, ye and your sons, and your daughters, and your man-servants, and your maid-servants, and the Levite that is within your gates, forasmuch as he has no part nor inheritance with you." "And thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God in all that thou puttest thine hands unto." Deut. 12: 7, 12, 18. And, in accordance with this feeling, in these feasts the silver trumpet, expressive of their joy, was always to be blown. "Also in the day of your gladness, and in your solemn days, and in the beginning of your months, ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt-offerings, and over the sacrifices of your peace-offerings, that they may be to you for a memorial before your God; I am the Lord your God." Num. 10: 10.

However ready any may be, with the prevalent Gentile notions of the subject, to speak of such seasons of festivity as burdensome, there is no reason for their being so regarded. Enjoyed in the spirit of the divine institution, they were a valuable gift from the Lord, and every way consistent with the highest spiritual liberty. Surely, if Jehovah undertook to provide for their every want while they went "to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with a multitude that kept holy-day," —if He granted to them that, notwithstanding the husbandman's occasional release, their land should both be fruitful enough in every kind of produce, and gladden the heart of the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, by its sabbatic festivity—while they sought and found the sweetness of His presence in the sanctuary, there is little reason to think or speak of the multiplied opportunities which thus were given to them of joy and praise as any thing lower than the expression of the Lord's mind to bless them and to do them good.

It is, however, worthy of remark, that these sabbatic days and years were so early revealed to the Israelites. They were not yet to be observed, nor for forty years after the time when this intimation was made, for it was only when they should "come into the land," that these new Sabbaths were to be observed, while they were declared to Israel at Sinai. (Lev. 23: 10.) The weekly day of rest they already enjoyed, as their fathers had done; but a new faith in God for provision upon it was inculcated by His regulation of the manner—as it had been both sanctified and blessed from the beginning. But these new Sabbaths were "beside the Sabbaths of the Lord," which were thus already observed by them. Their faith was not yet to be put to the severest trial, through such frequent and lengthened rests, till by previous exercise in a lower degree, it should be so strengthened as better to meet the trial—which the providence of God in their weekly Sabbath provision was fitted to promote. In being for forty years made to prove the abundant care of the Most High in such a way as that they suffered no loss by the present observance of His appointments, they would at the appointed time be more ready to meet His will, now farther declared, and to enjoy the higher blessing of more numerous seasons of spiritual repose, through a similar trust in the God of the Sabbath. Though surrounded by enemies breathing threatenings against them, after being brought into the promised land all their males were to repair for worship at stated times to Jerusalem, resting upon the promise of their God—"Neither shall any man desire thy land when thou shalt go up to appear before the Lord thy God, thrice in the year." Lev. 34: 23, 24.

THE NEW YEAR.

WE have but just escaped from the confines of an expiring age which we call eighteen hundred and forty-five! And having made a safe retreat from the period which disappeared in the bosom of eternity the moment that we stepped from its retiring shores, with our feet just hold upon the advancing limits of the new year, let us pause, and for a moment contemplate the past and the future. How soon does a year accomplish its work—effect all its changes—run its round and retire! So soon has the past sped its flight, that it is as though one had slept an hour, dreamed, and awoke, since the year, now gone, was new, and was greeted by us with many a heart-felt salutation and wish of happiness to our friends: but while we were looking round in expectation of the joys we wished upon each other, the year fled, and disappeared for ever!

But while the past year so soon made its exit, the changes it effected, the joys it awakened, and the sorrows that came with it, many of them at least have lingered behind both to bless and embitter the year to come. How numerous and great have been the changes which the lapse of the past year has produced? One year since, many were in comfortable circumstances, and some rich, who are now poor, and destitute of food and raiment: while many who were then destitute, have gradually improved their condition into circumstances of comfort, while some have leaped into the possession of fortunes, and are rioting in luxury, forgetful of the want and poverty that went before. Some entered upon the past year with joyful hearts; upon them it opened like the bud of promise, and rose like the sun of a cloudless morn: but soon the heavens were overcast with clouds of gathering sorrows—soon the tempest of adversity rose and made a wreck of fortune, and even hope itself; and the year which rose so bright, went down dark and cheerless. Some entered upon the year that has just closed with heavy hearts and cheerless prospects, so far as human mind could judge what sort of a harvest they were to gather from the budding year; on them the year arose without light,—the morning was dark—overhanging clouds obscured every star of hope, and falling drops of sorrow portended a stormy day; but soon the winds of prosperity rose and swept the heavens of their portentous clouds, and the sun of gladness poured its beams upon them, until the year which opened so dark closed without a cloud upon the brightest of worldly scenes and prospects.

Many have secured new friends, and entered into new and happy associations, while others have lost the few friends they had, and endured the dissolution of the only association that held them to earth. The wanderer that suffered and sighed friendless in a strange land, has, in some instances, been restored to a father's love, and to a mother's never failing kindness. Some, who were a year since surrounded by parents, brothers, sisters, and friends, are now outcasts and friendless wanderers. Many have been cut off from life during the past year; they entered upon the journey of another year with the prospect of many more such years, but ere its transient date was closed, they ceased the struggle, and disappeared from the path of life. Some have been worn out by the toils of many gone by years, each year drinking from the wasting springs of life, until they were exhausted. Some have been eaten up by the gnawings of consumption at the vitals; some have been smitten down in a moment by some arrow of death shot across the path of life. With the fall of the dead is connected the anguish of the living:—"Man goeth to his long home, and mourners go about the streets." The husband has given up the wife of his bosom to the cold embrace of death, and now sighs lonely and desolate, and weeps as he looks upon his motherless children, in whose face he reads the image of the object of his early love, whose dying groan dissolved the charm of the world. The wife has felt the dreadful shock which removed for ever from her the husband of her choice, in whose heart she had made a deposit of all that woman has to give, which God does not claim, in whose arms she sought security and a shelter from the attacks of a cold and heartless world; the year opened upon her a happy wife, but it closed upon her a disconsolate and sorrowing widow, and left her as one that is a stranger in the world. The child of affection, who enjoyed a father's blessing, and a mother's tender and ever wakeful solicitudes at the dawn of the year, has since wept over a father's and a mother's grave, and is now a friendless orphan in this morally desert world.

The above are but some of the changes which have been effected by the lapse of one short year; and yet, while we know them, and while they have been engraven upon our memories a true record of the past, how little do we realize that the new year has already begun, is rapidly progressing, and will soon end in the same way? There will only be a change in some of the circumstances, while the events of the year to come will be essentially the same as those of the year so recently closed: some will prosper, and some will be overwhelmed with the dark wave of adversity; some will rejoice, and some will sorrow; some will survive and some will die. But who will be the subjects of these different allotments God only knows; in mercy a knowledge of the future is hid from man. Of one thing, however, we are all certain, and that is, we must all die; if we do not die this year, we shall die during some other year, and that year is not far distant in the future.

"Our days, our weeks, our months, our years,
Fly rapid as the rolling spheres,
Around the steady pole;
The grave is near the cradle scene,
So swift the moments pass between,
And whisper as they fly:—
Unthinking man remember this,
Thou—midst thy sublunary bliss,
Must groan, and gasp, and die."

Jesus said, "My time is not yet come, but your time is always ready." If then our time is always ready, we should live always ready to meet it. Let all think of these things,—think of them now as you enter upon the new year, and may the God of all grace and truth inspire within us all such thoughts as shall tend to reform our lives and fit us for its closing scenes, and the destiny of the spirit world. May this year be spent in the service of God, and may it be crowned with his blessing, and be attended by the advancement of his kingdom on earth. True Wes.

SANCTIFIED AFFLICTIONS.

O! thou distressed one, violently torn from the objects of thy affection; to which the world appears a waste—now, now is the time to ease thyself into the open arms of thy Redeemer and thy God! That opportunity which thou wouldst never have found, he has of his own accord presented to thee. Think not that thou hast no right to come. He invites all that are weary and heavy laden, with the promise of giving them rest. Or, if you have already tasted that the Lord is gracious, this affliction is to try your faith; if sound, it will abide the test, and come forth purified as gold that is tried in the fire. Afflictions when meekly submitted to, are a blessed means of drawing the soul closer to God. They enable us to look forward to the hour of death with greater composure and afford a happy opportunity to prepare us for that awful event.

Sanctified afflictions are an eminent means to fit the soul for heaven. The more we covet the former, the more we forget the latter; and if there is any thing to be depended on in experience, it is this, that the man who should never see any trouble in life, will never see any happiness after death. Thus, far from being a curse, they are real blessings. They are as medicine to the soul,—bitter to the taste, but necessary for its well being. They restore under the care of the great Physician, its faculties to greater soundness, and accordingly fit it for greater happiness.

THE CELESTIAL SABBATH.

Translated from the Russian.

The golden palace of my God,
Towering above the clouds I see;
Beyond the cherub's bright abode,
Higher than angel's thoughts can be.
How can I in those courts appear,
Without a wedding garment on?
Conduct me, thou Life-giver, there
Conduct me to thy glorious throne!
And clothe me with thy robes of light,
And lead me through sin's darksome night,
My Saviour and my God!

EPITOME OF WAR.

A fair exhibition of war in its origin, its progress and actual results, would be a startling condemnation of the whole custom as a piece of suicidal folly and madness. The Ettrick Shepherd, in his Lay Sermons, tells the following story quite to the point:

'The history of every war is very like a scene I once saw in Nithsdale (Scotland). Two boys from different schools met one fine day upon the ice. They eyed each other awhile in silence, with rather jealous and indignant looks, and with defiance on each brow.

"What are you glowrin' at, Billy?"

"What's that to you, Donald? I'll look whar I've a mind, an' hinder me if ye daur."

'To this a hearty blow was the return; and then began such a battle! It being Saturday, all the boys of both schools were on the ice, and the fight instantly became general. At first they fought at a distance with missile weapons, such as stones and snow-balls; but at length coming hand to hand, they coped in a rage, and many bloody raps were liberally given and received.

'I went up to try if I could pacify them; for by this time a number of little girls had joined the affray, and I was afraid they would be killed. So, addressing one party, I asked, "what are you fighting those boys for? What have they done to you?"

"O, naething at a', maun; we just want to gie them a thrashin'—that's a',"

'My remonstrance was vain; at it they went afresh; and after fighting till they were quite exhausted, one of the principal heroes stepped forth between the combatants, himself covered with blood, and his clothes all torn to tatters, and addressed the opposing party thus:—"Weel, I'll tell you what we'll do wi' ye—if ye'll let us alane, we'll let you alane." There was no more of it; the war was at an end, and they scampered away to their play.

'That scene was a lesson of wisdom to me. I thought at the time, and have often thought since, that this trivial affray was the best epitome of war in general, that I had ever seen. Kings and ministers of state are just grown-up children, exactly like the children I speak of, with only this material difference, that instead of fighting out for themselves the needless quarrels they have raised, they sit in safety and look on, hound out their innocent but servile subjects to battle, and then after an immense waste of blood and treasure, are glad to make the boys' condition—"if ye'll let us alane, we'll let you alane."'

Here is the upshot of nearly every war, the status quo ante bellum.

THE MARTYRDOM OF ST. IGNATIUS.

Winter passed away, and spring came, calling out the young flowers and clothing the trees with fresh leaves. Then followed the hot summer with its harvest; and then succeeded the pleasant autumn, with its grape-gathering and vintage. These too had passed by, and winter was come again, when Ignatius arrived at Rome.

A day was soon fixed for him to suffer.

Very early in the morning, the rolling of chariots was heard in all parts of the city, and the footsteps and voices of numberless people crowding along the streets sounded like the deep murmur of the sea.

A little later there was a silence as of death, in all the alleys and suburbs; but the principal streets were filled with multitudes, all pressing the same way. Men, women and children were there, dressed in their holiday apparel, and eager faces, as if they were anticipating some joyous and merry sight. But, here and there might be seen persons looking grave and sorrowful, who appeared to mingle in the crowd almost against their will. Still, as if fascinated, on they went; till at length, by noon, the rolling of wheels, the trampling of horses, and the voices and footsteps of passengers had died away in the streets, and had left them silent and empty.

But there was no silence where the crowd were now gathered together. This was in the amphitheatre; a building that enclosed a large space of ground, all around which were circular rows of seats, rising one above the other to a great height.

The lowest of these were divided by a strong fence from the open space beneath; which could be entered in different places by passages constructed under rows of seats. And here were now come together thousands of people, the noble and the rich, the poor and the mean, women as well as men, a disgusting total of Romish brutality, to behold the cruel games and barbarous executions which were to be seen that day.

The spectators being assembled, the door of one of the passages was soon opened, and several men were brought in, who, for the amusement of the degraded human crowd, were obliged to fight until several of them were killed. Nay, if one were only wounded, and had not by his prowess given the savage monsters satisfaction, they would themselves deliberately give the well known signal that his adversary should put him to death.

After this another door was opened, and several wild beasts were let out to tear one another to pieces with their fangs and their claws.

When the mob of patricians and plebeians, male and female, had been satisfied with these barbarous sights, their love of blood required still more highly seasoned, and the virtuous Trajan, celebrated by pagan writers for his clemency and good qualities, had carefully provided that their appetite should not be disappointed.

A third door was opened, towards which the eager eyes of every spectator was instantly turned. Forthwith appeared a venerable old man. After a moment's pause, he walked with slow but firm steps to the middle of the amphitheatre. There he stood alone, with his eyes lifted to heaven. A feeling of surprise, perhaps almost a feeling of reverence, came over the sanguinary multitude, as they gazed upon Ignatius; for it was he that now stood before them. And truly he stood, not like a criminal condemned to a cruel and shameful death, but like a conqueror about to receive his crown. A few of his friends had come with him from Antioch, and were now among the people. Doubtless their minds went back to the time, when the Emperor had made his triumphal entry into their city, and they thought how mean and how poor was that gaudy pageant in all its outward pomp and beauty, when compared with the triumph which they were now about to behold. That was the triumph of earthly power and riches and pride—this was the triumph of faith in Jesus Christ.

For a short space Ignatius remained standing in silent prayer, awaiting calmly what manner of death he should suffer. In a few moments a fierce lion was let loose into the amphitheatre. Ignatius did not stir or shrink. His countenance did not change. He still showed the same holy trust and courage. The lion rushed furiously upon him, threw him to the ground, and devoured him before the eyes of the assembled multitude. His friends were afterwards allowed to come and take away his bones, which they carried back with them to Antioch, where they buried them outside the gate of the city leading towards the Daphne.

THE JOYS OF PRAYER.

Even in those parts of prayer that seem only painful, there is a pleasure, that would be ill exchanged for the world's most boasted bliss. In the bitterness of repentant sorrow for sin there is sweetness; in the agony of fervent suplication for pardon, there is a joy, as much superior to the best the world can boast, as the heavens are higher than the earth:

The broadest smile unfeeling folly wears,
Less pleasing far than prayer's repentant tears.

Oh! what a happy, heaven-foretasting life might the children of God enjoy on earth, if they would live the life of prayer!

How calm might they be in the midst of the wildest storms. How joyful in the deepest tribulations. How composed and cheerful, while all around was agitation and alarm—the smile of heaven sparkling around their path, the peace of heaven dwelling within their hearts.

They say that travelers in Alpine regions are often encompassed with a clear atmosphere and a cloudless sunshine, while traversing the summits of those lofty mountains, at the very time that the world below them is all wrapped in mists and darkness, and thunder clouds are bursting at their feet. Even thus does prayer lift the believer to a loftier and serener region, far, far above the clouds and storms that darken and distract the world below. In that region of purity and peace, the atmosphere is clear and calm; and the light of Gods countenance shines brightly on the believer's soul, while he sees the thunder clouds of earthly care and sorrow rolling beneath his feet; thus realizing the beautiful illustration of the poet:

As some tall cliff that lifts its gentle form,
Swells from the vale and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its base the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head!

AN INFIDEL'S END.—Mirabeau, like all the leading names of France for the last century, was an infidel; it was the melancholy fancy of the time, and considered essential to the reputation of all who pretended to philosophy. There was but little in the religion of the land to rebuke the evil spirit—and its name was Legion. His last effort, when his speech failed him, was to write on his tablets—"Death is but a sleep;" and a request for some opium to extinguish his life and pains together. Still, even in this fatal insensibility to all that constitutes the greatness of the dying mind, and of those illustrious hopes and feelings which to Christians throw their light across the grave, the sinking man of genius showed some of that brilliancy which had once given him such distinction among his countrymen. "Take away from my sight," said he, "all those funeral-looking things. Why should man be surrounded by the grave before his time? Give me flowers, let me have essences, arrange my dress. Let me hear music, let me close my eyes in harmony." But this passed away with the return of pain, and he once more asked for opium to end the struggle. The physician, to quiet his mind, gave him some water in a cup, telling him that it was opium. He swallowed it—dropped back upon his pillow—and was dead. [Mirror of Christian Evidence.

HOW TRUE.—A very eminent writer has said, that although we seem grieved at the shortness of life in general, we are wishing every period of it at an end. The minor longs to be of age; then to be a man of business; then to make up an estate; then to arrive at honor; then to retire. The usurer would be very well satisfied to have all the time annihilated, that lies between the present moment and the next quarter-day; the politician would be content to lose three years of his life, could he place things in the posture which he fancies they will occupy after such a revolution of time; and the lover would be glad to strike out of his existence, all the moments that are to pass away before the next meeting.

The nearer our Saviour drew to his glory, the more humility he expressed.

THE GOSPEL ESSENTIAL TO SOCIAL REFORM.

Somebody has said, that if men would do anything towards reforming society, they must first come to Christ, and experience the reforming power of his Gospel upon their own hearts. Truer words were never spoken, or words more deserving of attention at the present time. Innumerable schemes have been devised by philanthropic and well-meaning men for the regeneration of society. For a time these schemes have seemed to work well, and have raised the hopes of their sanguine projectors to a high pitch. But they have raised hopes only to disappoint them. Before the object sought could be attained, the bubble has burst and left the world still a prey to the vices and miseries which it was proposed to chase away.

Now there must be something wrong in the calculations of these men, in order to account for their frequent failures. If we mistake not, that wrong is nothing else than an overweening confidence in human nature, and an unwarrantably low estimate of the Gospel of Christ. Some of these reformers, we know, talk about the Gospel as though they really attached some importance to it; but at the same time their eulogies of human nature show clearly that they do not at all understand man's deep depravity and perishing need of the Gospel. There are other reformers, who do not pretend to have any faith in the Gospel, and place their reliance wholly upon the power of persuasion over the human heart. Yet they all overlook the universal selfishness of man, and the need of individual regeneration in order to do any thing effectual for the regeneration of society. But it is just as absurd and fatal for us to overlook, in our calculations about reform, the fact that man is fallen and depraved, as it would be for the inventor of a piece of machinery to overlook in his calculations the power of friction. When the inventor who has been guilty of such folly comes to put his machine in operation, he will find that it needs the addition of power for which he has made no provision. So with the inventor of any scheme for the reformation of society which overlooks the depravity of human nature; when he comes to put his scheme in operation, he will find that it needs the addition of a power which he has no means of obtaining.

If the men who talk so fluently about the perfectibility of human nature, and profess so much anxiety to make this a loving world, would ever see their schemes realized, they must introduce into them Christ and his Gospel, and place some practical reliance thereupon. This is the only element which can ensure success, and with this success is certain.

LEGALITY OF SUNDAY LABOR IN ENGLAND.

In noticing the progress of Sunday desecration in Great Britain, we have had frequent occasion of late years to observe the running of railway trains and sailing of steamboats. In both these cases, necessity on the part of some, and the importance of healthful recreation to others, have been pleaded as reasons justifying the practice. It is not work, on the part of the many; and the advantage which these are supposed to derive, is regarded as sanctifying, to those having the management, the work they perform—having determined that the reasons for locomotion on the part of the many are sufficient to constitute a "work of necessity" to be imposed on those without whose aid they could not travel. Thus "monster trains" and pleasure sailing on Sunday excursions, are made to bear the aspect at once of "necessity and mercy." At all this, therefore, we have ceased to wonder.

In extraordinary cases, also, we were aware, that, in the present day, the most direct acts of extensive desecration were occasionally performed, without challange. In the formation of railways, in all stages of their progress, and on the new Canterbury lines at present, large bands of men have sometimes been engaged, notoriously, when contractors were apprehensive of failing in the fulfillment of their engagements, within the time specified in the agreement. We had lately, also, arising out of railway speculation, a hurry of business in posting on Parish Church doors the required Parliamentary notices by thousands, and the Sunday riding of Solicitors' clerks to see, and be ready to attest, if necessary, to their having seen, such notices on said Church doors during the Sundays prescribed by act of Parliament. And, within the last few days, it has been announced in the newspapers, that "The Board of Trade, by the direction of the law officers of the Crown, will receive plans and maps, which by the standing orders of Parliament, must be deposited at the Board up to twelve at night on Sunday," the 30th of Nov. And accordingly the offices of all the clerks of the treasury throughout the country were ordered to be kept open for that purpose.

But we imagined that in all such cases, indulgence was avowedly or tacitly extended; and that a power of prevention existed, although its enforcement might be deemed inexpedient. Sure we are that many have been restrained by a fear of law, who were not influenced by better considerations. But either we have been altogether mistaken in our conception of the law, or Sunday desecration, in England is assuming a new phasis—the prosecution of the most ordinary occupations in life, on Sunday, being now sanctioned from the Bench, as no infraction of English law. A bill poster having been charged at the Guildhall, London, by the police, with posting immense-sized concert bills on Sunday, (Nov. 23, 1845,) during church hours, Alderman Hughes said, that although it might be discreditable for a person to follow his trade on the Sabbath, still there was no law to prevent it. (Sun, newspaper, Nov. 25, 1845.) The man was, however, fined five shillings for having posted the bill on the wall of the Fleet Prison without having received the sanction of the corporation. Coming from a legal functionary, the intrepretation may be presumed correct; and if so, there is nothing but the discredit attached to obeying God, to prevent Sabbath-keepers from following their callings on Sunday. WRITERS IN DEFENCE OF BAPTIST SENTIMENTS.

Rev. DAVID BENEDICT, of Pawtucket, R. I., is about to publish a complete list of the writers in defence of Baptist sentiments in all ages and countries. He has sent us the following, with a request that all Baptist papers and periodicals, of whatever party, will give it an insertion; and if the editors, or those friends near them, know of any other works on the baptismal or communion questions, that they will mention them in their respective papers. We cheerfully comply with his request, by publishing the list, and adding one or two names.

List of writers in defence of Baptist Sentiments

Tombs, Delaune, Gale, Gill, The Stennetts, The Evans, Ryland, Richards, Bradbury, Wallin, Toulmin, Foot, Booth, Robinson, Wilson, Pengilley, Slee, Whitfield, Danvers, Kiffin, Smith, Morton, Ives, Collins, Hutchinson, Barbour, Jackson, Brine, Jenkins, Kinghorn, Rees, Eaton, Gilchrist, Sheldon, Taylor, McLean, Ellison, Ashdowne, Carson, Gotche, Dobell, Dr. Cox, Cox, Stovell, Fisher, Grantham, Spillsbury, Richardson, Knollys, Keach, Russell, Haldane, Dore, Hull, Westlake.

Since this list was first published, by my own efforts and the aid of Rev. Mr. Woolsey, of Conn., and Dr. Malcom, of Ky., and others, I have made the following additions:

FOREIGN—Denne, Palmer, Patient, Ewer, Davey, Blackwood, Kingsford, Innes, Doe, Grant, Gibbs, Fellows, Pearce, Butterworth, Burroughs, Tasker, Killingsworth, Rees, Martin, Birt, Newman, Hagger, Norton, Knott, Davids, two Fullers, father and son.

AMERICAN AUTHORS—Norcott, Backus, Dr. Foster, Baldwin, Merrill, Andrews, Blood, D. Jones, Osbourne, Chapin, Jewett, Hosken, Woolsey, Frey, Tupper, Judd, Lillibridge, Merriam, Pendleton, Parkinson, Judson, Campbell, A. Morgan, Bronson, White, Brantly, Hinton, Howell, Hague, Ripley, Chase, Sears, Cone, Kendrick, Loomis, Halcombe, Crawley, Dowling, Leach, Locke, Davis, Henshall, Parr, Foster, Tinkham, Craps, Williams, Bliss, Clark, Robards, Polhill, Dagg.

☞ To the above list we will add one name, which certainly deserves a place among the worthies who have written in vindication of Baptist sentiments. It is the name of JOHN MAULDEN, a pious and worthy minister of the Gospel, who suffered much persecution for his non-conformity in the reign of King Charles II. He was pastor of a Baptist congregation which met in East Smithfield, (London,) and which was accustomed, when the times were such that they could not safely meet at their public place of worship, to meet together privately at one another's houses. At length, however, under Act 23d of Queen Elizabeth, Mr. Maulden was fined £20 per month, whereupon his goods were seized, and he sent to New Prison at Clarkenwell, where he remained for some time among felons. After his release, they built a meeting-house for him in Goodman's Fields, in which he continued to preach for some years with considerable success. Meanwhile the controversy respecting the Sabbath was attracting considerable attention among some of his ministerial acquaintances; he was led to investigate the subject, and became persuaded, that it was the duty of Christians to keep the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath. He straightway made known to his people this change in his sentiments, which resulted in his being separated from them, and joining the Sabbath-keeping Church of Mill Yard, in Goodman's Fields. Here he remained as co-pastor with Mr. Savage, or rather as one of the elders of the church, (which at that time held to a plurality of elders,) until his death, an event which took place in February, 1714, at the age of about 70 years. The following are his principal books:—

1. The Pious Young Man's Guide, or a compendious and useful Catechism for children and all young persons, being represented as a conversation between a father and his son.

2. Imperfections Discovered; in which he deplores the unconcernedness of professors for real and substantial religion, and their heats and divisions about points not necessary to salvation.

3. A Threefold Dialogue, concerning the three chief points in controversy amongst the Protestants in our days, viz:—1st. Whether the Holy Scriptures do prove the doctrine of Free-grace or Free-will? 2d. Whether Believers' or Infants' Baptism be the ordinance of Christ? 3d. Whether the Seventh or the First Day of the Week be the Sabbath of the Lord?—London, 1708—12mo.

ANNOYING AND FOOLISH CUSTOM.—The custom which prevails in many churches of turning all the gentlemen out of a seat when a lady comes in, for the purpose of giving her the farther end of the slip, is most annoying and foolish. Some suppose the custom had its origin in those days when it was necessary to go armed to places of worship and to give the position of greatest safety to the most defenceless. If this be true, then the occasion having ceased, the custom should cease also. Others suppose it originated in that feeling of respect for the feebler sex, which is encouraged by true religion. If this be true, we will venture to suggest a doubt whether those who come late to meeting are entitled to any such mark of respect. It is well known, that in England, where the people claim a tolerable degree of religion and civilization, no such custom prevails. Why may it not be so in this courtry?

REV. DR. LILIENTHAL.—We announced some weeks ago the arrival in this country of a distinguished Hebrew scholar and divine of this name. It seems that the Doctor has been for some years entrusted by the Russian Government with the promotion of Jewish schools. In this capacity he held an important place in the office of Minister of Public Instruction, and was exerting a very salutary influence in behalf of his nation. But the ukase against the frontier Jews undeceived him respecting the intentions of the Emperor, and led him to resign his office and quit Russia. Since he reached this country, he has spoken at several public meetings, and has given deplorable accounts of the sufferings of Israel in Russia and other lands where despotism eclipses the name of charity. We learn from the daily papers, that on Sunday evening, 28th ult., the Israelites of this city met at their different synagogues, and elected Dr. Lilienthal their Chief Rabbi for the ensuing year.

CONGRESS OF NATIONS.—The friends of peace have determined to concentrate their efforts upon the institution of a Congress of Nations, and they express great confidence that the object can be secured if this country will lead in the work. The young men of the country have been appealed to for assistance in circulating petitions, and it is hoped that at least five hundred petitions will be forwarded to Congress during its present session. It has also been determined to hold a Convention in the city of Washington in the month of January, to continue in session for at least a week. By such means it is thought that interest may be awakened and action secured.

BAPTISMAL REGENERATION OF CHINESE INFANTS.

It is well known, that in China large numbers of children are every year consigned by their parents to an unnatural death—some by strangulation at birth, and others by exposure in the highways where their bodies become food for dogs and wolves. Besides such as die in this way, a still larger number die prematurely from the ignorance or neglect of their unfeeling parents, who subject them to exposures which are necessarily destructive of life. It seems that the Romish missionaries sent out under the patronage of the Institution for the Propogation of the Faith, have taken the case of these infants in hand, and claim to be doing a great deal for their salvation. The September number of the Society's periodical contains a full account of their operations, a few extracts from which may not be uninteresting to our readers.

One missionary, speaking of the great numbers that are left to perish in times of scarcity, says:—

"Not being able to save the life of the body of these little children, I have sought to procure the saving of their souls. Two well-trained men, having some knowledge of medicine, whom I have employed for the last eight months, have baptized six hundred and eighty of them, of whom more than five hundred have already gone to heaven."

The same missionary, speaking of the mortality among those baptized at Su-Tchuen, says:—

"We have remarked, that about two-thirds of the number of these children died in the year in which they were baptized. Thus, out of the number of 1844, sixteen thousand seven hundred and sixty-three winged their flight, a short time afterwards, to everlasting bliss. These happy souls, thus regenerated by us in the saving waters of baptism, can they forget us? Can they lose the remembrance of that generous association which, under God, has opened to them the gates of heaven?"

Dr. Pallegoix, the pious Vicar of Siam, has a few precious words on the economy of this mode of salvation. He says:—

"One of the physicians, whom we have at Juthia, used to succeed in baptizing from 60 to 100 children every year, so that, if I may be allowed the expression, a person would save a soul at cost of a most trifling sacrifice. Surely, there is no better mode of employing the alms of the Society. For some years past, the number of these little angels who have gone to heaven, amounts to from four to five thousand."

So much as to the amount of good done by these missionaries, and the economy of their mode of operations. Now a word as to the manner in which the rite of baptism is performed, and we will leave the reader to his own reflections.

"The baptizing men and women," says one account, "go out among the pagans without letting them know what their object is, accost them in the gentlest accents of compassion, offer the children some pills, &c., 'often give the parents a few farthings, always with great kindness of manner, and an expression of the liveliest interest in their situation,' &c., and then the parents 'willingly allow our people to examine into the state of the child, and spill on its forehead some drops of water, which they declare to be good for it, while, at the same time, they pronounce the sacramental words.'"

"The nuns excel all others in their skill at managing the matter. They go out in all directions, 'generally,' says the Rev. Mr. Fontaine, Missionary Apostolic, 'two by two, an old and a young one, and while the elder one enters into conversation, the other, who in good manners should leave her to speak, draws near the mother, who is holding the sick child, or sits down near the mat on which it is left; she fondles it, takes it in her arms, and whilst she caresses, it succeeds in dropping on its forehead a little water out of a bottle, which she keeps concealed in her long, wide sleeve.'"

The editor of the Christian Watchman, after copying the foregoing, says:—

"Skillful nuns! What a multitude of souls they will send into Paradise! How are the labors of Carey, and Marshman, and Boardman, and Judson, in preaching and translating the Bible for the heathen, thrown quite into the shade! But enough of such sickening perversions of the gospel. Let those who understand it better, take warning at these follies. Here we have a trio of heresies—infant baptism, apostolical succession, and baptismal regeneration—all gone to seed together! And what a harvest of nonsense and mischief they yield!"

SUNDAY LEGISLATION—NO. 3.

On the first instant, a meeting of the friends of God's holy Sabbath, in East New Jersey, was holden, by previous appointment, in the Seventh-day Baptist Meeting-house at New Market, when a discourse was delivered by Bro. Samuel Davison on "the Relation of Civil Government to the Law of God." The meeting afterwards resolved itself into a Convention for the purpose of considering and adopting a Petition to the State Legislature asking them to repeal those restrictions under which the observers of the seventh day now labor. Elder W. B. GILLETT was chosen Chairman, and Elder SAMUEL DAVISON, Secretary.

The Chairman opened the meeting with an address relating to the object for which it was called.

A committee of three was then appointed, to prepare and report a series of resolutions in furtherance of the object of the meeting; consisting of David Dunn, A. D. Titsworth, and Randolph Dunham.

After retiring for a short time, the Committee reported the following resolutions, which were received, and adopted with great unanimity:—

1. Resolved, That we feel a deep sense of gratitude to God for the civil and religious liberty which we and our predecessors have enjoyed, and which is secured to us in the Constitution of this State.

2. Resolved, That notwithstanding the rights and privileges secured by the Constitution of this State for the free exercise of religious opinions, those who observe the seventh day of the week as the holy Sabbath are in a great measure prohibited the enjoyment of those rights by the Laws of the State.

3. Resolved, That although we differ in our views respecting truth and duty from the majority of the professing Christian world, nevertheless we feel bound to render faithful and strict obedience to all the commandments of God.

4. Resolved, That we discard the idea of establishing any religious order or sect by human legislation, but we have a right to ask for protection both in our civil and religious rights; therefore,

5. Resolved, That we should without delay respectfully petition the Legislature to repeal and amend the statutes so as to give all observers of the seventh day equal rights and privileges on the first day as on the following days of the week.

6. Resolved, That the before-mentioned committee be re-appointed to draft and present to this meeting a Petition for the above-named object.

The Committee thus appointed retired; and on returning presented the annexed Petition, which was received, and after a careful consideration, adopted.

David Dunn and A. D. Titsworth were then appointed a Committee to present the Petition for signatures to the friends of the object in the County of Middlesex; and Randolph Dunham and Randolph Drake, a Committee to draft the Petition and present it to the friends of the object in Essex and Somerset Counties, with instructions to wait upon the members of Assembly elect in their respective counties, and request them to present the same at an early period in the session of the next Legislature.

It was then ordered, that Samuel Davison, Randolph Dunham, and Charles H. Stillman, be a committee to prepare a report of this meeting and request its insertion in the next number of the Sabbath Recorder; after which the meeting adjourned sine die.

The Petition.

To the Honorable the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey:—

Your petitioners, citizens of the County of Middlesex, &c., would respectfully represent to your Honorable Body, that their rights are not protected and defended in common with other citizens of the State. The Constitution gives to all equal privileges in the exercise of their religious principles. But the Statutes and Laws give to the majority only the free exercise of their religious opinions without proscription, while a portion of citizens have only been permitted to exercise the privileges secured by the Constitution in a very limited and prescribed manner. We now refer to the Statute entitled "An Act for suppressing Vice and Immorality," passed 16th of March, 1798. (See Elmer's Digest, page 586.) You will there discover, that the portion of the inhabitants of this State religiously observing the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, are not permitted to share equally the rights and privileges secured by the Constitution, in the 4th section of the 1st article. The laws referred to we consider unequal and unjust as well as unconstitutional. We therefore ask for their repeal, that all who religiously observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath may be permitted to enjoy equal rights and privileges with others. We claim this, on the ground of the Constitution, which allows of no establishment of one religious sect in preference to another, and requires that no person shall be denied the enjoyment of any civil right, merely on account of his religious principles; also from the fact that this people have always been prompt in sustaining the Constitution and laws of the State, and were decided and active in securing the freedom of our country from European tyranny. As the laws of the State are now undergoing a revision, to make them consistent with the New Constitution, we earnestly request that so much of the forementioned statutes as conflict with the Constitution may be repealed, and equal rights and privileges allowed to all. And your Petitioners will ever pray, &c.

DEATH'S DOINGS IN 1845.—The following list of distinguished individuals who were called to their account during the last year, will show that the destroying angel has been busy in the higher as well as the lower walks of life:—

HYMN BOOKS.—A correspondent has suggested to us, that in some of our churches copies of the standard Hymn Book are wanted but cannot be obtained, while in other churches there are copies on hand for sale which can find no purchasers. In such circumstances, he thinks it would be well for those who have books on hand to make the fact known through the Recorder, so that those who need them may know where to find a supply.

MYSTERIOUS.—A statement is going the rounds of the papers, copied from the Canandaigua Repository, that two men, with three small children, and a two-horse wagon, stopped at Powers' Tavern, in the village of Canandaigua;—that the children were in the care of one of the two men named Wentworth, who declared his intention of departing in the afternoon train of cars for the East;—that after the cars had departed, it was ascertained that the children were still at the tavern, but their protector, and his companion who had charge of the team, were missing.

Mr. George I. Lewis, of Newport, R. I., writes to us, that his brother-in-law, Edward A. Wentworth, left Westerly, R. I., on the 26th of November last, for Wirt, Allegany Co., N. Y., intending there to take charge of three children of Mr. Lewis—(the oldest a boy of seven years, the second a girl of five years, and the youngest a boy of three years)—and return immediately to his friends in Westerly. He has had news of his safe arrival at Wirt, and supposes that on his return he called at Canandaigua as above stated. Mr. Lewis has the most entire confidence in Mr. Wentworth, but fears that he may have met with some accident, which was the occasion of his mysterious disappearance. When he left home, he wore a black broadcloth coat and pantaloons, a blue satinett double-breasted vest, red silk neck handkerchief, a black seal-skin cap, and a pair of new boots with his name written inside. He had with him also a heavy blue overcoat, and a traveling valise with the name of G. D. Cross printed upon it. His under clothing was marked "E. A W." Any information concerning him will be gratefully received. Address, George I. Lewis, Newport, R. I.

"THE MEEK SHALL INHERIT THE EARTH."—A correspondent of the New England Puritan mentions an individual who had been not a little perplexed with the question, How shall the meek inherit the earth? The following incident solved all his doubts, by exhibiting before him an instance of the complete fulfillment of the promise:—

'While musing on the subject, he had occasion one day to go near a low and mechanically wretched dwelling, from within which were audible affecting tones of earnest adoration. Curious and impressed, he listened, and at the same time, through some chink, beheld the suppliant. There, scantily appareled, and in a room nearly destitute of furniture, an elderly woman sat, with her repast in her hand; a hard crust and some water. It was over this store her devotion grew eloquent. She could not partake of it till her full heart had relieved itself in acknowledgment to God. With uplifted, tearful eyes, she said, "What, Lord! all this, and heaven too!"'

TWO MEN DROWNED.—The Flushing Journal says, on Sunday three men started from General Skidmore's, Great Neck, on a sailing excursion to Throg's Neck, which, it is said, is quite a rendezvous for those who love to while away Sunday in a "cheerful glass of something to drink." One of the party, it is said, was obliged to remain, on account of inebriation. The other two persons succeeded in getting into their boat, and proceeded on their return, but the boat overset when near the shore, and the two, it is supposed, were drowned, nothing having been heard of them since. The boat, singularly enough, floated into the place from whence it started. The drowned men, we learn, were laborers in the employ of Gen. Skidmore.

☞ We clip the above from an exchange paper, and submit it as a specimen of the numerous accidents which occur on Sunday. Whether the men who were lost owe their deaths to sailing on Sunday, or to their too free use of the "cheerful glass of something to drink," is a question which we leave our readers to decide, confident that they will not differ much about it.

THE SPIRIT OF MISSIONS.

Three years since, said Dr. Tyng, I met in London, a little company of Moravians. I never see one of those blessed men without rejoicing at what God hath done by them. I met them on the eve before the Harmony sailed on her seventy-second voyage to the cold region of Labrador; there were present several missionaries about to go to those barbarous tribes; and there was the captain of the ship, who six and thirty times has crossed the sea. He spoke to us of the piety of the missionaries, their sufferings, and their labors. O, it seemed as if the spirit living God was there. It was marvelous to see how the sacred enterprise touched the hearts even of worldly men; the very insurance companies reducing the cost of insurance, as if they felt that that vessel was under the protection of Heaven. Seventy-two times had that bark crossed the stormy icebound sea, and never once in peril, while hundreds were wrecked and lost among its billows, that dash to heaven, and freeze to icebergs on its stormy coasts.

This little persecuted people did not wait until they had wealth before they entered the work. Oh, no! they had not bread to eat, nor home to shelter them; and yet they went forth to conquer the world, and they more than any others have succeeded in the conquest. It has not been a sense of obligation that has led them onward, but a love for the work, and when we meet in another world those who have been enlightened and saved by our instrumentality, shall we not more rejoice in the smile of those redeemed pagans, than in the highest honors of the world?

The spirit of missions is an expansive spirit. Behold Howard—he visits loathsome cells of pestilential dungeons, and is willing like the Savior to become a prisoner for prisoners, that prisoners may be free. Behold another contemporary with him. He climbs the height of ambition; he strives to plant the standard of universal empire on all the turrets of the old world. They die, the one on the shore of the Black Sea bidding his faithful attendant write only this Epitaph over his ashes, "A sinner saved by grace," though the world was echoing the praise of his self denial and philanthropy; the other, manacled upon his ocean rock, breathing out a spirit chafed to madness by disappointed ambition. How different the expansion of their spirits. Thus when covetousness looks from the hour of death upon its gains, and counts its hundreds and thousands, and then looks up to see that it has no portion beyond the grave; and when benevolence sits down, perhaps in poverty, and looks back, as did Job, in the sweet reflection, "when the eye saw me then it blest me," how different the retrospect. Shall I then gain the earth to die godless and hopeless, or leave it with the sweet assurance that all was consecrated to my master's cause.—The Mercury.

General Intelligence.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

There was one holiday last week, which served as an occasion for the Senate to adjourn two days and do nothing on a third. Of course the proceedings of the week were not intensely interesting or important. They are now becoming important, and will undoubtedly increase in interest from this time forward.

The principal matter of general interest in the SENATE, was a debate relating to Oregon, which grew out of a series of resolutions introduced by Mr. Hannigan of Indiana, declaring our right to Oregon to 54 ° 40; and that it would be a betrayal of our rights to take any boundary south of that. Mr. Calhoun took ground against the resolutions, and proposed a series declaring that the administration was justifiable in offering to take the 49th parallel, and that the question was still a fit subject for negociation. There was a warm debate on the subject, but no action.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, it was announced that the President had signed the Resolutions for the admission of Texas. Mr. Cunningham of Ohio, introduced a series of resolutions similar to those introduced by Mr. Hannigan in the Senate, declaring that negociations with England about Oregon had ceased, and that no compromise could be effected. These resolutions were discussed at considerable length by several speakers, among whom was John Quincy Adams. Besides this discussion, there was but little done of general interest in the House.

ICE CUTTING ON THE SCHUYLKILL.—The subjoined description of the method adopted by the Knickerbocker Ice Company of Philadelphia for the speedy separation and transmission of this useful substance, taken from the Philadelphia Ledger, may not prove uninteresting to the majority of our readers:—

A clear field of ice in the centre of the stream has been chosen, leading from which to the bank at a spot adjacent to the capacious ice-house, a channel is cut about two feet wide, along which the ice is pushed after being cut. The ice is cut in one direction in regular cakes, eighteen inches wide, by means of a plow drawn by a horse; these are afterwards cut into the proper lengths by means of cross cut saws, managed with the utmost ease by men on the surface of the ice. The cakes thus cut are pushed along the channel already mentioned till they arrive at the bank of the river, where is stationed a machine which is complete and performs in an admirable manner the task of raising the ice into the house. It consists of an endless chain put in motion by horse power, which, plying over a plane 40 feet long, inclined at an angle of about 45 degrees, the cakes are taken hold of as soon as they arrive at the foot of the plane by grapnels placed along the chain, about eight feet apart; the cakes slide very easily over iron tracks on the plane, and on arriving at the top, fall on to another in the interior, which can be moved so as to convey the cakes to any part of the building. The grapnels being eight feet apart, cakes seven feet long can be taken up the ascent at a very rapid rate; but the cakes being unwieldy when cut that size, they are generally but four or five feet long. In the space of a single minute, we saw nine cakes deposited in the building, which, at an average of three hundred pounds each, would make 2,700 lbs. in that time. The enormous quantity of 800 tons was placed in the house in seven hours by means of this machine. One peculiarity attending this method, is that none of the men employed have any occasion to handle the ice from the time it is first cut until it is safely deposited in its appropriate depot. Two men are only required to attend for the purpose of feeding the machine, and the power of working it is furnished by two horses.

SHIPWRECKS IN THE ST. LAWRENCE AND GREAT LOSS OF LIFE.—The Montreal Herald of the 25th ult. says:—

We regret to record fresh cases of loss of life and property on our stormy river. From letters received from Quebec we learn that a pilot had arrived there on the 21st of December, who had seen three vessels on shore, which he confidently asserted were the Montreal, the Sir Richard Jackson, and the Syrian.

The following is an extract of a letter dated St. Luce, 19th December:—

I have learned to-day from Mr. Charles Campbell, that there are three square rigged vessels and a schooner wrecked between Mantane and St. Anne des Monts. The crews of one of the ships and of the schooner had perished.

Subjoined is an extract from a letter received by a merchant in this city:—

You will be all sorry to hear the melancholy news that has reached us this morning from below, viz:—that four vessels are lost, and the crews and passengers of two of them supposed to have perished. One of them is the Montreal, Captain Douglass. The bodies of a female and child have been found on the beach with many others.

WRECK AND AWFUL LOSS OF LIFE.—The following is an extract of a letter received at Quebec, by Messrs. Tetu & Co., dated River Ouelle, 23d Dec., 1845:—

"A boat, from Green Island, with fifteen men on board, got fast in the ice, and every soul on board perished. It is also reported, that 16 seamen have been found frozen to death on Red Island."

Five vessels are wrecked in the St. Lawrence, the Montreal, Sir Richard Jackson, Syrian, Wm. Byard, and a schooner. The crew of one is saved, but of another, not one is left to tell the tale. Several of the bodies have been washed on shore; among them is a woman and a child. The crew of the schooner could not be found, and one of the Wm. Byard's men was so badly frost bitten that he was not expected to live. Many other vessels that sailed late from Montreal and Quebec are supposed to be fast in the ice somewhere on the river.

NEWSPAPER ELOQUENCE.—Rev. Dr. Chalmers, in the North British Review, observes: The very newspapers teem with eloquence of the highest order, insomuch that were one to compile now a volume of extracts under the title of "Beauties or Specimens of the British Classics," he need be at no loss to find editorial articles in some of our leading journals, which outrival the finest paragraphs of Johnson, Milton, or Addison.

WHEAT IN SWEDEN.—A singular statement occurred, in the course of our reading the other day, to this effect: Nothing is met with in Sweden to this day, but rye cakes almost as hard as flint, as they bake only twice a year. In 1812, a baker in Gottenburg received an order from the Captain of a vessel, to bake wheaten bread to the value of £1, or five dollars; but the baker alarmed at the risk, required security for the payment, since, had the bread been left upon his hands, he could not have disposed of so large a quantity in that town, notwithstanding it had a population of 23,000.

BRUTALITY.—The Memphis (Tenn.) Eagle publishes a statement, which appears to be well authenticated, to the effect, that Capt. O'Harra, of the steamboat Independence, put ashore at Island 65, on the 15th ult., about a hundred passengers, chiefly German emigrants—the bar at that Island being difficult to pass in low water—and that after landing them with directions to join the boat at a designated point above, he proceeded on his way, and left them on the beach, in the most inclement weather, without food or covering except the clothes they had on. Seven of them were found and taken from the beach by the steamboat Empress on the morning of the 16th. The others, it is presumed, had wandered off in search of food and sheltering.

PERMANENCE OF LIME AS MANURE.—J. Watson, in the Journal of the English Agricultural Society, states that a piece of ground containing 166 acres, on which little grew except heath, was more than doubled in value, by a good dressing of lime, applied on the top sward. This was done about 15 years ago, and totally eradicated the heath. "The lime to this day appears in full action, as its effects annually testify, from the richness and sweetnees of the herbage, the texture of which has been thoroughly changed by the action of the lime. The deep green hue and luxuriant appearance of this land in spring and autumn, form a striking contrast with those adjoining, which are still unimproved. The soil is a thin moorish loam in a high climate, resting on the greywack formation."

CUT FOOD FOR STOCK.—Col. Jaques, of Massachusetts, who is known as an economical feeder of stock, adopts the following plan, which we copied some time since from notes furnished by him:

"For 30 cows, cut with a machine 30 bushels for one feed; one-third of common English hay, one-third salt hay, and one-third rye or barley straw; add 30 quarts of wheat-bran or shorts, and ten quarts of oat and corn meal moistened with water. One bushel of this mixture is given to each cow in the morning, and the same quantity at noon and in the evening. In addition to this, a peck of mangel wurtzel is given to each cow per day. This mode of feeding has been found to produce nearly as much milk as the best grass feed in summer."

RIGHT.—The Journal of Commerce mentions the case of a colored waiter—a fugitive slave—in attendance at one of the boarding-houses down town, who was recognized by a visitor at the house, a friend or relative of his master. The recognition was mutual, though nothing was said at the time. But the boy declined attending farther at the door, and his distress soon became so obvious that the inmates of the house were interested to ascertain the cause. There was nothing extraordinary in his story. He was a runaway slave, whose master lived in Tennessee: he had not been badly treated; he loved liberty for its own sake. His language was, he "would rather be shot than taken," and the deep emotion of his manner evinced his sincerity. The impulse to aid him in the perpetuation of his liberty was so strong that, when officers called in the evening to arrest the fugitive, they were informed that his freedom had been secured.

GREAT SUFFERING ON THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.—The New-Orleans Picayune says that there is great suffering among the German emigrants, at different points on the Mississippi above Memphis. At Cairo there are some two thousand of them congregated—unfortunate strangers, who have been left there from snagged boats and from the impossibility of ascending on account of the ice—and not only have they suffered incredibly from want of food and shelter, but a dysenters of a malignant type has broken out among them, carrying off great numbers. On an island, some distance above Memphis, upwards of one hundred emigrants have been left by the sinking of a boat, and they were said to be entirely destitute of both food and fuel, and without a boat to reach the shores of the river.

ARREST OF SLAVE SHIPS.—The Sierra Leone Watchman of the 30th of August, says:

"Commencing from the period when the strength of the squadron was augmented by the addition of steam power, (being also the date of Commodore Jones's arrival,) in April, 1844, up to the last month, (June) so short a period as fourteen months, no fewer than between sixty and seventy vessels of various sizes have been captured by her Majesty's cruisers, for being engaged in the slave trade. Out of this number, not one has escaped condemnation, either for being equipped for the slave trade, or for having slaves on board; in the latter case, upward of five thousand slaves have been rescued, and emancipated by the courts in this colony."

OLD TIMES IN NEW ENGLAND.—The Boston Almanac for 1846 contains, in addition to the usual matter of Almanacs, a variety of interesting and curious relics from the early history of New England. The following specimens will amuse our readers, if they do not instruct them:—

Sept. 1, 1635. Whereas, Mr. Roger Williams, one of the Elders of the church of Salem, hath broached and divulged divers new and dangerous opinions, against the authority of Magistrates, as also writ letters of defamation of the Magistrates and churches here, and that before any conviction, and yet maintaineth the same without retraction: it is therefore ordered, that the said Mr. Williams shall depart out of this jurisdiction within six weeks, now next coming, which, if he neglect to perform, it shall be lawful for the Governor and two of the Magistrates to send him to some place out of this jurisdiction, not to return any more without license from the Court.

April 5, 1636. That no person, after one month, shall make or sell any bone lace, or other lace, to be worn upon any garment or linen, upon pain of five shillings for every offence, provided, that a binding, or small edging lace, may be used upon garments or linen.

5th day, 4th month. Catharine, the wife of Samuel Finch, being accused for speaking against the Magistrates, against the churches and against the elders, was censured to be whipped, and committed till the General Court.

SUMMARY.

In 1721, the price of wheat in Illinois was 37 1-2 cents per bushel—it is now one dollar. Corn was 12 1-2 cents—it is now 70 cents. Cows were $4 a head—they are now from 15 to 20 dollars. Pork was one cent a pound—it is now from four to five cents.

Some idea may be formed of the extent of the cultivation of ornamental plants by the nurserymen of England, from the fact, that at the celebrated Sawbridgeworth Nursery, owned by T. Rivers, a single "quarter of dwarf roses budded this year, contains 80,000 plants; and that in the same nursery, twenty-four persons were constantly occupied in budding roses, during the whole of the month of August."

The Boston Cultivator says, that one of the largest and most flourishing peach orchards in New Jersey, a few years ago, every tree of which was in good condition, yielded fruit in one year which sold for $16,000.

The Sag Harbor Corrector says, that the wife of William Sherwood, died in that village lately from the effects of fright experienced at the late great fire at that place.

A family of three persons, in Grafton county, N. H., have consumed 52 pounds of tea and 40 pounds of tobacco in a single year.

The Methodists are making an effort to raise a permanent fund of $27,000 for their Biblical Institute at Newbury, Vt.

As storm following storm, and wave succeeding wave, give additional hardness to the shell that encloses the pearl, so do the storms and waves of life add force to the character of man.

The whole amount contributed to the Bible Society last year from all sources was $166,652; of this the North paid $122,799 07—the Slave States $32,939 33.

Oliver Smith, of Hatfield, Mass., a wealthy and benevolent man, who died recently, has left in his will the following bequests:—

$200,000 is given to Northampton for the establishment of an agricultural school, but not to go into operation until the above-named sum is doubled.

$360,000 is given to eight towns, viz:—Northampton, Hadley, Amherst, Hatfield, Williamsburg, Deerfield, Greenfield, and Whately, as a permanent fund for the benefit of orphan children and children of the poorer classes. The fund is to be managed by trustees.

$10,000 is to go to the Colonization Society.

Rev. Joseph Cartwright, a colored preacher from Baltimore, and a very eloquent man, is now preaching in Albany, and soliciting aid, for the purpose of enabling him to purchase the liberty of three children, who are now in hopeless bondage. Mr. C. has already expended $2,000 to purchase his own liberty and that of three other children, and is now striving to complete the noble undertaking in which he has been so long engaged.

The President has signed the Resolutions for the admission of Texas into the Union; the act to extend the laws of the Union over the State of Texas; and the act to establish a collection district in the State of Texas, and for other purposes, and transmitted them to the President of Texas, by Capt. Todd, of the Texan Navy.

The Raleigh and Gaston Railroad, was bought by the State of North Carolina for $363,000, being the amount of the mortgage held by the State. The road cost a million and a half dollars.

Carter, the Lion King, "has purchased the largest horse in England. He has named him "General Washington." He is twenty hands high, and looks as large as an elephant. He is a black gelding, beautifully dappled—his mane is nearly four feet long; his tail sweeps the ground; he is perfectly formed, and is regarded as the finest specimen of the horse ever seen in Great Britain.

The mineral discoveries in Northern Wisconsin are not confined to copper and silver only, but iron has been found in great abundance. The county of Brown, in which the town of Green Bay is situated, is one vast bed of iron ore.

There has been raised in Rock county, Ill., this present year, 700,000 bushels of wheat. The population of the county is only 7,000.

The name of Mainwaring (Cheshire) is spelt one hundred and sixty-three different ways in the deeds, &c., belonging to the family, and can be spelt in two hundred and ninety-four different ways.

Another "Monster Steamer," intended to run between this city and Albany, was launched at the dock-yard of Mr. Brown, foot of Twelfth street, East River, on Tuesday. She has been christened the George Washington.

There is a proposition on foot to erect a monument to Roger Williams, on the ground selected for a public Cemetery near Providence.

An ordinance was enacted by the Legislative Council of Ceylon, in the month of December last, to provide for the total abolition of slavery in Ceylon, and the ordinance has been confirmed and allowed by the Queen.

On the 22d, a little girl, daughter of Mrs. Pursell, of La Grange, Ga., was so severely burnt by accidentally getting her clothes on fire, that she died in a few hours, after much intense suffering. This is the fourth member of the family whose death has been occasioned by fire.

The Montreal Herald notices a cheese, the production of the Ganaocque dairy, of excellent quality, weighing about 300 lbs!

Some of the large boats engaged in the Upper Lake trade, that is, between Buffalo and Chicago, are said to have cleared from 20 to $25,000 each during the past season.

No less than 1313 emigrants arrived at Galveston during the week ending 29 November, of whom about 1000 arrived on the 25th. Many of them were from Bremen.

The editor of the Massachusetts Ploughman, gives instances of the removal of warts by the application of the scrapings of carrots and salt.

The Senate and Chancellor of the State of New York, sitting as a high Court for the Correction of Errors, have decided that the General Banking Law of the State is constitutional and valid, by a vote of 15 to 7—thus putting at rest a long vexed question.

Public fights and rencontres seem to be getting fashionable in New York. On Thursday, as Mr. G. T. Barclay, son of the British Consul, was passing through Broadway near Eighth street, he was attacked and beaten by Cornelius Martin and Daniel Sharpe, who were committed. On the same day, Messrs. —— Fierella and Gustavus Octavion had an affray at Palmo's, in which the latter used a cane and a knife. Fierella was held to bail in $300.

The schooner Larch, Capt. Robinson, arrived at Charleston on Monday morning from Port Paix, (St. Domingo,) in distress. He states that previous to his departure, the French army had returned from the Spanish part of the Island to the Cape; and that the Dominicans had taken a fort on the frontier and put the whole garrison, consisting of about 160 Haytiens, to death.

On Sunday night last, a new building on Third street, Pittsburgh, occupied by Mr. Henry Nobles, Upholsterer, was destroyed by fire, supposed to have been communicated by design. The building was insured. This is the first fire which has occurred in the burnt district since the disastrous fire of April last.

The Will of Abijah Fisk, of New Orleans, gives $5,000 to the Public School Lyceum of the Second Municipality; and a three-sory brick building, situated at the corner of Bourbon and Customhouse streets to the city, to be used for a public Library.

In two or three years (1848) a man by the name of Thellusion, who will then be 28 years of age, will come into possession in England, of property to the value of 12 millions sterling, or about sixty millions of dollars! About 130 years ago, an ancestor died, directing that his property should accumulate until 1848, and then fall to the heir. Parliament tried to set aside the will at the time, but failed; they however passed an act that no such will should be legal thenceforward.

The wife of Joseph Hill, aged 29 years, of Newton, N. J., was bitten in the hand, a short time since, by a hog, causing a wound which, in spite of every application, spread through and affected the entire arm, until finally the malignant virus reached the body, and entering the vitals terminated her existence.

Samuel Rinear, Jr., of Burlington, N. J., presented a friend on Christmas day a watermelon sixteen inches long, which the Gazette of that place says was as sound, plump and green, as if just taken from the vine. Nathan Stowell, a veteran horticulturist of the same place, on the same day, presented to one of his lady patrons a dozen ears of green corn, preserved in as good condition for boiling as if gathered in summer.

The U. S. Gazette says, "A young friend brought to us a few days since, a copy of the Vulgate, printed in Venice about the year 1490, beautifully set forth with wood cuts, &c. The volume has no title page, but the imprint and some other particulars are appended in a paragraph to the book of Esdras, which follows the Apocalypse.

A very strong glue is made by adding some powdered chalk to common glue when melted; and a glue which will resist the action of water may be formed by boiling one pound of common glue in two quarts (English measure) of skimmed milk.

When steel is alloyed with 1,500th part of platinum, or with 1,500th part of silver, it is rendered much harder, more malleable, and better adapted for every kind of cutting instrument.

The Philadelphia Tenth Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. Boardman, has just contributed $5,500 to the fund for the endowment of the Princeton Theological Seminary—and, we may add, that of this liberal contribution $2000 was subscribed by one individual.

The Whitesboro Jail took fire accidentally. But the village was soon alarmed, and by well directed efforts the fire was got under. The prisoners, strange to tell, who were released, rendered efficient service, and when the flames were extinguished, returned voluntarily to their cells!

The Albany Argus states that a daily line to Turner's Orange County, by stage, thence by railroad to Piermont, and thence by steamboat to New York, has been established.

During divine service, on Sunday morning last, in the South Baptist church, Philadelphia, an accident happened to the furnace, which permitted the gas from the burning coal to escape and fill the building, much to the inconvenience of the congregation. Several ladies became insensible in consequence, and had to be carried into a neighboring house where medical aid was required to resuscitate them.

The final report of the Committee appointed by the Councils of Pittsburgh, to distribute the Relief Fund, has been presented to that body and accepted. The committee stated that they had received from the Treasury of the Relief Fund, $161,247 37, adjudged 1,310 claims for losses by the fire, and issued checks to the amount of $160,617, leaving a balance of $630 37 in banks—that the Treasury has on hand about $9,348, recommends the disiribution thereof, and that a balance of $20,000, of the appropriation of $50,000 from the State had not been received, &c.

EFFORTS OF THE FRENCH FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF THE SLAVE TRADE.

Monrovia, July 3, 1845.

We are positively informed, that Capt. Canot has induced the kings of Cape Mount to sign a treaty with Commodore Bardice, commander of the French squadron on the West Coast of Africa, for the suppression of the slave trade in that river; and it is supposed Capt. Canot will be rewarded by the French government with the cross of the Legion of Honor. It is also expected, that although the chiefs of Gallenas have directly refused to enter into any treaty with Commodore Jones, of H. B. M. Steamer Penelope, they will, on the return of the French Commodore from the leeward, enter into a commercial treaty, which, if not directly tending to the entire abolition of the slave trade, will bring a severe blow upon that abominable traffic. Now, should this take place in reality, the promoter of this great change will have well deserved of the French King the expected reward.—Africa's Luminary.

SLAVERY IN ABYSSINIA.—It is not in Western Africa alone that the native tribes sell one another to the slave-dealers. The same thing takes place in Abyssinia. The people who dwell in the south of Abyssinia, live in such fear and hatred of one another that they build their houses as far apart as possible. Kidnappers often come to these lonely houses, and steal the sleeping children from the side of their parents. The kidnappers break through the walls of the house at night, put a large stick upon the necks of the parents, and take away their children. If the children cry, the robbers stuff a rag into their mouths to stop them. In many houses, the children sleep on beams placed across the upper part of the house, but kidnappers find them there also. If the walls of the house are too strong to break through, the robbers make a pit round the house, and set the house on fire; and when the people run out of the burning house, they fall into the pit, and are seized with their children. The country is likely to lose all its inhabitants soon; for one brother sells the children of another brother, and the people are stolen for slaves in going from one village to another. Many Abyssinian girls are taken to the slave-markets in Egypt. They are handled and examined like so many cattle, and sold to the highest bidders. The gospel seems to be the only sure means to put an end to these horrid customs. All other means have been tried in vain.—Youth's Miss. Rep.

EMIGRANTS FOR LIBERIA.—It appears from the Norfolk papers, that on Monday evening last, the steamer Osceola brought down the Potomac one hundred and forty-seven blacks, of various ages, to embark in the Roanoke for Liberia. Most of these were liberated by the will of the late Nathaniel Hooe, of King George County, Virginia, who directed that some provision should be made out of his estate for their comfort and advantge after their arrival in the Colony. Mr. Hooe also emancipated by his will, more than two hundred other slaves, now in Mississippi and Alabama, but vigorous efforts are made to defeat the provisions of the will in those States. There is reason, indeed, to fear, that by the extraordinary laws of those States, the will may not be sustained, though there can be no doubt that Mr. Hooe, (who was a gentleman of great intelligence) evidently supposed that he had done all that was necessary to secure the liberty of his slaves. There is surely cause for regret, if a citizen of Virginia, owning slaves in Mississippi, is not permitted to emancipate them by removing them—or directing by will, his Executors to do this, at the expense of his estate—to the free Commonwealth of Liberia in Africa. Masters should at least see that they are not themselves enslaved.—Jour. Com.

REPORT OF THE AMERICAN BOARD.—The Religious Herald, (Hartford) of the 20th inst., contains a long article, dissenting from the report of the Board on slavery. The editor publishes it it with prefatory remarks, in which he says:

The whole question is now subjected to a more thorough investigation than it ever received before. The action of the Board seemed to be the signal for opening the seal which lay on many lips, and now on one side and on the other, some of the ablest men in the country are shedding the light of their wisdom upon the dark places of this difficult problem; that is, how to bear the strongest possible testimony against the sin of slavery, without trenching upon the still higher claims of truth and righteousness. Dr. Edward Beecher and the Rev. Mr. Phelps are writing in the Boston Recorder; Dr. Woods and Dr. Pond are writing in the New England Puritan; Ecclesiastical bodies are passing resolutions, some in approbation of the Board's report, some in condemnation; the whole subject is fairly before the public, and we may hope that the result will be that the truth, whatever it is, will be set forth so clearly, that no shadow will rest upon it hereafter.—[Exchange Paper.

AFRICAN FEMALES.—I take this opportunity, (says Lander, in his Records of Clapperton's last Expedition,) of expressing my high admiration of the amiable conduct of the African females toward me: in sickness and in health, in prosperity and in adversity, their kindness and affection were ever the same. They have danced and sung with me in health, grieved with me in sorrow, and shed tears of compassion at the recital of my misfortunes. When a boy, and suffering from fever in the West Indies, women of this same race used to take me in their arms, or on their knees, sing and weep over me, and tell me not to die, for that my mother would break her heart to hear the news; and, pointing to the ocean, they cheered my spirits by saying that it laved the shores of England, and that it would shortly bear me on its bosom to my distant home. In fine, through whatever region I have wandered, whether enslaved or free, I have invariably found a chord of tenderness and trembling pity to vibrate in the breast of an African woman; a spirit ever alive to soothe my sorrows and compassionate my affliction; and I never in my life knew one of them to bestow on me a single unpleasant look or angry word.

COLORED MEN IN OFFICE.—The Chief Justice of Dominica is a mulatto; the Attorney-General and the Judge of Appeals in Barbadoes are mulattoes; the Governor of Nevis is a mulatto. Thirty-two editors of newspapers in the British West Indies are negroes and mulattoes; twenty-one magistrates are mulattoes; in the legislative councils and houses of representatives there are seventy-two mulattoes and two negroes making laws for their former masters. Two thirds of the military force are composed of African soldiers, commanded by white officers. The ministry is abundantly supplied with colored men; and the jurymen are almost all negroes or mulattoes.—Facts for the People.

AN AFRICAN LAWGIVER.—King Freeman, a native African chief of great power and influence, whose territory adjoins that of the Maryland Colonization Society, near Cape Palmas, has given a code of laws to his people. He is represented to be sagacious and intelligent, and after studying the laws and religion of his neighbors from America, he drew up a constitution by which his people are now governed. King Freeman has the honor of establishing a constitutional government in advance of several European monarchies.—Vermont Chronicle.

Review of New-York Market,---Monday, Jan. 5.

FLOUR AND MEAL—There has been but little done to-day, shippers not offering over 5 75, and holders asking 5 87½, but exhibiting an inclination to accept 5 81¼. Small sales N. Orleans were made at 5 62½. In Southern we hear of but small transactions. Good brands Georgetown, Richmond, Baltimore, Brandywine, &c. &c. are 5 75 @ 6, but irregular lots are picked up at lower rates. Rye Flour 4 25. Some supplies of Corn Meal are now on the market. Jersey is held at 4@4 25. Brandywine 4 37½; hhds. $18. Bag Meal is 1 18¾@1 25 for Yellow, and 1 37½@1 44 for White. Buckwheat 1 87½@2 per cwt. Western Ship Stuffs 17@18c, and dull.

GRAIN—We hear of little doing to-day, excepting one or two cargoes of Southern Corn for export, including 2600 bush. Old at 70c. weight. Some lots of Long Island delivered at the distillery sold at 70c. The market is very heavy. A lot of Barley was offered at 70@75c, without buyers. Canal Oats are 45@47c, and dull. A parcel of 1000 bush. Rye deliverable at Boston, brought 87½ cts.

HAY—The warm weather has rather weakened the market, and we quote 90@100c, out of store.

PROVISIONS—The inquiry for Prime Pork continues to be good. We quote one year old Prime quick at 10 25. Mess dull at 13 12½@13 25. Sour Prime 9 50@9 62½. Beef is 7 75@8 50, and $5@5 50, with moderate trade demand. Sour is selling at 2 87½@$3, and 3 25@3 50, and in demand. Prime Mess for export is $14. Lard is quiet at 8¼@8¾c.—Sales 75 to 100 bbls at 8¾c. Butter and Cheese without particular change.

MARRIED,

At Upper Mystic, Ct., on the evening of the 24th ult., by the Rev. Mr. Blood, Mr. NICHOLAS V. ROGERS, of Preston, N. Y., to Miss CYNTHIA EDWARDS, of Mystic.

In Plainfield, N. J., on the 23d ult., by Eld. Samuel Davison, Mr. ISAAC BROWN, of Brookfield, N. Y., to Miss ELIZABETH RANDOLPH, of the former place.

At New Market, N. J., Nov. 27th, by Eld. W. B. Gillett, Mr. JACOB GITFIELD, to Miss LOUISA M. WILSON, both of Woodbridge.

At New Market, N. J., Jan. 1, by the same, Mr. RICHARD HICKMAN, to Miss HARRIETT MUNDAY, both of Metouchin.

DIED,

In Hounsfield, of the croup, on the 25th ult., FLORENCE CELESTINE, daughter of Mr. Baily Green, and grand-child of Rev. William Green, aged 2 years and 10 months. The deceased was a sprightly and promising child, and filled a large space in the affections of a numerous circle of relatives. Her sudden death is to them a source of deep affliction.

A Visit to Philadelphia.

Philadelphia is in point of size and population the second City in the United States. It is situ ated between the Delaware and Schuylkill, near the junction of these rivers. It was founded by the peaceful and benevolent William Penn, in 1682, who purchased of the Indians the site, and marked out the plan of this extensive city, to which he gave the name of Philadelphia, or the city of love. Before the end of the year it contained eighty houses and cottages. It is one of the most regular and handsomely built cities in America; the streets cutting each other at right angles.

On Wednesday evening, the tenth Dec'r., the stage from Easton set us down in front of Congress Hall, where we took lodgings for the night. The next morning we made our way to the residence of our excellent brother Simpson, in West Philadelphia, where we met with a kind reception. After being served with a good dinner by his estimable lady, we signified our desire to visit the public places and works of the city; brother S. kindly offered to become our conductor; his generous offer was readily accepted and we set off, and after calling upon a friend or two, we made our way to the State House or City Hall, from the cupola of which we had a fair view of the city and its Liberties, the rivers and the surrounding country. From this place we took an omnibus for the far-famed Girard College, about two miles from the business part of the city. This institution is intended for orphans. It was endowed by the munificence of Stephen Girard who died in 1832, and left two millions of dollars for the purpose of erecting the buildings, and supporting the College. The Institution is situated upon a beautiful elevation near the banks of the Schuylkill, overlooking the city and the surrounding country. There are five buildings, the material of which is marble finely polished. The main, and centre building is supported by thirty-two splendid columns. The edifices are all enclosed, and the inside work is being rapidly carried forward. From the roof of the principal building a lovely and extended scenery spreads out before the eye which cannot fail to gratify and entrance the admirer of nature. While surveying this boon of benevolence, we could but rejoice in such a wise and humane provision for orphanage; still our rejoicing was mingled with sorrow, that the departed donor should have so drawn his will as to shut the Bible from the halls and instructions of this College, and exclude ministers with the message of mercy, and the promises of the God of the orphan from it. We think if he could return from the eternity of realities his first work would be to blot out that unfortunate clause.—We can but express our ardent desire that the proper authorities will change this arrangement. From this spot we directed our course to the Fair Mount Water-works on the Schuylkill river. A dam is thrown over the river ten feet high, this forms an extensive pond, from which the water is forced by machinery more than ninety-six feet almost perpendicularly into the distributing reservoir artificially constructed at the top of the bank, from which it is conveyed in pipes, amounting altogether to nearly one hundred miles in length, to all parts of the city. Four millions of gallons of water are used every twenty-four hours from this establishment. The artificial shades, walks, and fountains, together with the wild and romantic scenery of the river and its bank, make this a place of great resort in the summer for strangers, and those who desire relaxation and retirement from the business, heat, noise, and dust of the city. Then we passed over the wire bridge. This was indeed a curiosity. A brief outline of this fine piece of mechanism is as follows: There are ten principal wires, five on each side; these are composed of numbers of small wires, these extend from one side of the river to the other, passing over suitable frames on both sides of the stream, and are then fastened in the ground or rock. Then smaller ones extend perpendicularly from the main wires to the cross timbers on which the floor is laid. The strength of this bridge was tried by placing forty, one horse carts filled with stone, so as to make each two tons weight; making in all eighty tons. The constructor then placed himself in the centre and gave three cheers; the carts passed off, and he took some sixty thousand dollars and went his way. This finished our first day's ramblings and observations. In the evening we attended religious service in the M. E. Church on the west side of the river, where a protracted meeting was in progress; heard one of the city ministers preach a good common sermon. Not much doing in the way of protracted meeting revival.

On the following morning we visited the United States Mint. This is a superb structure. We were conducted by a gentleman of the establishment, through the different departments of this money making concern. The different operations are melting, rolling, drawing, and coining; the last of which prepares it for use. From this place we proceeded to the Pennsylvania Hospital, some two miles from town. This institution was founded by William Penn. It is a large and spacious building, erected at a cost of three hundred thousand dollars, and has a fund of some four hundred thousand, for its support. It is admirably arranged, and conducted with great order. The apartments were remarkably clean, and even neat. About fifty persons are employed to keep it in order, and there are about two hundred and seventy-five persons in the institution. We next visited the Philadelphia Alms-House. This is a magnificent and mammoth structure provided by the city for its poor. It is decidedly the best constructed, and the best conducted institution of the kind that we ever visited. It is divided into different wards for the inmates. The blind, aged females, aged males, different classes of insane, different classes of diseased persons, all have their appropriate wards. Then there are the orphans department, the surgical rooms, the apothecary's office, the lecture room, the chapel, and various other apartments. These different parts of this home of the poor are remarkably clean and comfortable; noble fires of stone coal. This noble institution really looked like the production of humanity and Christianity united.—There are now in this house seventeen hundred and fifty persons living through the winter upon the tax imposed upon the laboring people of this goodly city, and many of them are permanently fixed there. Does it ever occur to the people who have so many paupers to maintain, to enquire after the causes of so much poverty and want? It strikes us that this ought to be done, and means used to prevent such a vast amount of taxation upon the laboring classes. As far as our knowledge extends, there are two leading causes, intemperance and the violation of the seventh precept of the Decalogue. Legislative bodies, the pulpit, the Church, public sentiment, one and all, should rise in truth and earnestness upon this subject and shut down these floodgates of vice, and arrest and dry up these streams of death in our land.

On Friday evening we called on our old friend George Storrs, who is preaching to a congregation in this city composed of some excellent people, cured of the peculiarities of Millerism, still under the influence of some sentiments peculiar to brother S. He now strongly believes in the literal return of the Jews to the promised land. Whatever we may think of some of brother Storrs' theories, we certainly think him sincere, and in possession of a good heart. We accompanied him in the evening to the Union Church to listen to a lecture from Dr. Durbin, who is giving a course of short lectures upon the Jewish nation. His plan, so far as we could comprehend it, was a broad one. The lectures will be fraught with information. We spent the night with brother Storrs, and most of Saturday. At one o'clock of this day we witnessed the funeral ceremonies of Commodore Elliott, which we regarded as a farce and a mockery. The drinking, smoking, swearing, laughing, and turn out of infamous ones, was full proof of the hypocrisy of the parade.

Human Happiness.—So far as happiness consists in the gratification of the animal appetites, man has no advantage over the brute. The wild ass can eat, drink, sleep, and gratify all other mere animal propensities. He can enjoy all this without any pain arising from solicitude and fear concerning the future, which constitutes a large portion of human misery. Wherein, then, has man the advantage over a brute on the score of happiness? In two respects, First, Man is capable of intellectual enjoyment, which renders the harvest fields of his pleasures extensive in proportion to the amount of his knowledge, enabling him to reap pleasures from things, places, countries, and worlds he never saw. This the brute cannot do; he can enjoy nothing beyond his reach.

Secondly, Man is capable of an enjoyment arising from right moral feelings, of which brutes are supposed to be incapable. Through the exercise of gratitude, he feasts on all the past bounties and blessings of Providence; through hope he gathers pleasures from the fields of his future being; and through the exercise of love to his Maker, he kindles a joy that is as undying as the soul in which it burns, and as the object which excites it. Such are man's advantages for enjoyment over brutes, and it would be well for him if he improved them as well as the brute improves his.

Noble Daring.—During a recent fire in Buffalo, N. Y., while the fire was raging with its utmost violence, the shrieks of children were heard in the upper part of the building on fire. This appeal for help was nobly responded to by Capt. A., with some half-dozen others, who, nothing daunted by the flames and smoke that were issuing from every crevice, dashed into the building, and with triumph returned with the little sufferers- The feelings of the parents, on seeing their children so providentially restored may be imagined, but not described.

Emulation and Envy.—A noble mind emulates merit, but low minds only envy it; the one seeks to rise by imitating merit, the other seeks by detraction to bring merit down to its own level.

A Library.—A few books well selected, and thoroughly read, are more useful than a large library but partially read and understood.

Moral War.—Misfortune is to be conquered by courage, passion is to be overcome by reason, and the devil by resistance.

Missing the Point.—Some men, by affecting to be wise, actually prevent themselves from becoming wise; for he who labors to make others think he knows more than he does, necessarily takes a position beyond their power to instruct him.

HINTS ON SMALL-POX AND VACCINATION.

BY W. M. FAHNESTOCK, M. D.

Small-Pox is a highly contagious disease, and is mostly communicated by coming within the limited sphere of its influence. Cases may exist, under ordinary circumstances, in the midst of a dense population, with little, or scarcely any prejudice to the community at large; but it frequently becomes epidemic under certain statess of the atmosphere, which brings the human system into greater susceptibility to infection, and diffuses the disease with frightful rapidity. The extensive prevalence of that terrible scourge throughout many portions of our country, indicates the existence of that epidemic variolous constitution of the air, which may spread it over every section of the land: and induces the writer to drop a word in season and offer our immediate community a summary of the facts, connected with this disease, which have the greatest bearing on the welfare of society: as many persons labor under erroneous impressions respecting their immunity from a second attack, after having suffered one invasion of natural small-pox, or having been inoculated with small-pox matter, or been vaccinated with cow-pox; and especially as much distrust exists on the minds of many persons in regard to the protective powers of vaccination.

From a careful examination of the accumulated facts, adduced by the most profound investigators and authoritative writers on Vital Statistics, derived from the Medical Reports of the National Armies, Public Hospitals, and Municipal Registrations, of all the countries of Europe, as well as the sparse returns of our own Union, we arrive at the following conclusions:

1. That the impression made on the system of many persons, by an attack of natural small-pox, does not afford perfect exemption from a second attack of that disease; but are still susceptible to a modified, yet often fatal, form.

2. That many persons who have undergone inoculation with small-pox matter, are likewise susceptible of varioloid of a dangerous character.

3. That vaccination with cow-pox, which has for nearly a half century, been generally esteemed as the most certain prophylactic agent, like the preceding, frequently leaves the person insecure against an attack of varioloid.

4. That, where there has been vaccination with cow-pox, though it may not exempt the individual from an attack of varioloid, it modifies the violence of the disease and preserves life; there being, comparatively, but few cases on record of persons having died from an attack of that disease who had been previously vaccinated.

5. That the ratio of deaths from second attacks of small-pox or varioloid, in persons who had the natural disease, is infinitely greater than in occurrences after vaccination.

We do not stop to discuss one or two mooted questions involved in the foregoing propositions, viz: whether an impression from an attack of small-pox, from inoculation or vaccination, can be effaced from the system, so as to afford no immunity from a recurrence, or whether that impression is obliterated after a certain number of years. We are not treating with hypotheses, but are dealing with facts—not with our own predilections or our own single experience, but with extensive, collated facts, by the tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands. It may be sufficient, in explanation, to observe, that as a general law, an individual is insusceptible after an attack of small-pox, or a perfect vaccination, to a recurrence of a second infection; but it is not any the less true, that this law is subject to numerous, very numerous exceptions. Repeated experiments on the most extensive scale, show thirty to thirty-eight per cent, or one in every three, who have been, apparently, successfully vaccinated, still retain their susceptibility to variolous and vaccine impression; and many facts prove that if not quite equal, still a very large amount of those who have undergone small-pox, or small-pox inoculation, retain their susceptibility to a second impression.

The whole matter is resolved into a few words, viz: that some persons evince a persistent inaptitude to all variolous impressions throughout life, that they do not take small-pox nor vaccination; others resist both during a long period under frequent exposures to the disease, and to vaccine infection, and then become susceptive; and others again manifest so great a susceptibility, that no process, natural or artificial, secures them from repeated attacks.

The practical inferences we draw from these well authenticated facts, and which we desire to impress upon our community, to avert the approach of that fearful malady, or mitigate its virulence, should it reach our borders, are these:

1. That vaccination is the best protection from small-pox. It modifies the disease and preserves life, although it does not in all cases exempt entirely from an attack of variolous disease.

2. That re-vaccination becomes necessary to test the protection of the system.

3. That after re-vaccination, an individual may have a reasonable certainty of exemption from an attack of varioloid.

4. That re-vaccination should be resorted to by all persons upon whom it has not been repeated, whenever the small-pox assumes an epidemic form; as the changes constantly taking place in the human system, render an individual liable to infection at one period who may have been exempt at another; and particularly as that liability is greatly increased by the existence of the variolous constitution of the atmosphere; which fans otherwise sporadic cases into epidemic prevalence.

The dictates of prudence, then, would be for every individual to subject himself to re-vaccination without any delay. Delays, under these circumstances, are dangerous. Security lies in immediate action.

Bordentown, N. J., Dec. 24, 1845.

Type Setter's Propensity!—Compositors, as a class, are clever fellows, but they often make their types "play such fantastic tricks before high heaven as to make——Editors weep." Strange nonsense they cause for us, at a world of pains. In the last number of friend Bailey's paper, we have two amusing instances of this. "They all represent to me, that such politics as Mr. Smith says he preaches, he does preaches!" "Rev. Francis Hawley read the first chapter of Josiah!" In this paper a week or more ago, our "boys" make us very ridiculous. They force us to say, in our leader, that "Paul glorified in the fact that he was a one idea preacher!" We meant, and wrote, that he gloried in view of that fact, and felt anything but to glory over the alteration. But this is a species of homicide to which we have to become accustomed.—Liberty Intelligencer.

Talking.—One half of the mischief in the world is done by talking. And one half of the difficulty we get into as we go along through life is the result of our saying what we might just as well have not said. There's much wisdom in the old maxim, keep your mouth shut and your eyes open. There is, rely upon it. I do not know any body in any situation or profession of life to whom this advice is not applicable. It is sometimes said that lawyers live by talking; that talking is their trade, and so on; but the fact is, the lawyers are as apt to talk too much as any body, and to suffer as much by it. To spin out a long argument, they necessarily fall into a habit of dealing more in fancy than in facts, saying things about parties and witnesses, that do much harm and no good: and their reputation for candor will generally diminish in the same proportion as that for loquacity increases. To hear some men at the bar, you would suppose that if they were held up by the feet the words would run out of their mouth, by mere force of gravity, for a week at a time, without troubling their brains at all.

THE LOST CHILD.

A Western Scene.—About ten o'clock it was announced that O'Lary's boy was lost. He was a fair and lovely child, little Johnny, and had a gentle, affectionate mother, with an ardent and sacrificing love which few mother's ever fed. His father was a bold hunter—his horses and hounds and rifle, had more of his heart than all the world besides; but little Johnny nestled there: indeed he was a great pet with the neighbors, and won more caresses and more sympathy than all the rest of the children together.

Little Johnny was about four years old: he had been out in the field with his father and the black man, who were harvesting corn—had filled his little bag with roasting ears, and starred for home about two o'clock, P. M. On returning at night, they ascertained that the child had not been seen. It was nearly dark, but the alarm was given, and some fifteen or twenty neighbors took their horns and commenced the search. The corn where he was last seen, was the first object, of course: here they took single rows, and scoured the field in vain.—They then scattered through the adjoining wood; the father frantic, often calling out in a voice of thunder, "Ho! John—ho!—O, John?" Then fearing the boy might be alarmed and afraid to answer, he would soften down into the gentle, winning tone of the fire-side—"Johnny, Johnny my dear, father's come." It was a cloudy evening; and though perhaps he had never bowed the knee "before Jehovah's awful throne," he prayed—oh how earnestly he prayed the Lord it might not rain that night. The air was damp and chilly, so that, if the child were alive, with his bare feet and light jacket, he must be suffering cruelly from the cold. But the wolves!—ah, this was the fear, this the terror, which all felt, but none dared to breathe. A wolf had been seen prowling around the premises, indeed they had a common path across the prairie,—and the point where several beside myself, had heard the cries of distress was a famous haunt for them; even in the midst of their anxious search, a distant growl would now and then burst on the ear.

The dogs were very eager in the field, especially wolf dogs. Winder, one of the best, would run no other trail O'Larry knew this, and watched with most intense anxiety, his every move. He scents—he scents—he runs—"Oh my God, he's got my boy!" He leaps from his horse, he sees the foot print of his own dear Johnny in the gopher hill by his side—he tracks him to the wood, and off from Winder's trail,—ah, now he breathes again.

The search was continued till midnight, when a part thought it best to relieve their horses, and wait for daylight to begin afresh. But the father, with three of his hunting friends, who had resolved not to eat or sleep till they had found the boy, still kept on—sometimes riding, sometimes walking—calling and shouting. if for no other purpose than to keep the wolves at bay. At length they stationed themselves within hearing distance of each other, and sat down to protect the child, or rush to his rescue, in case they should hear him attacked, to watch until the morning.

At early dawn, about fifty new horsemen arrived, and the search commenced anew. The field was examined for the track, which was pursued with some doubt, as he had been there three successive days. On tracing the path which led toward the wolf woods, the imprint of Johnny's little feet were again discovered, as he appeared to be running, and the mark of his bag dragging along by his side. Here the father's anguish gushed anew, as the fears of the preceding night were justified and corroborated. They now agreed to take a station of about fifteen rods abreast, go up one side of the branch and down the other, until the whole surface of an extensive area (father than he could possibly have traveled,) had been explored. They had completed one side, and were returning, when the signal was given—Johnny was found! The noisy shouting and repeated peals of the hunter's winding horns, soon grouped the solemn cavalcade—But O'Larry, though foremost in the hunt fell back at the first note of the summoning horn, nor did he speak a word, or scarcely breathed, till he snatched his true Johnny from the arms of his delighted bearer, and pressed him with fondness to his now bursting heart. The dear boy was found about two miles from home, in a thicket of hazles picking filberts, with his bag of corn still on his arm. He looked bright and happy; and when asked where he was going, said, he was going home, but it was so far.—He said he hadn't seen any body, but he heard some one call him, and that he was afraid, that he ran away until he was very tired, and then he laid his head down on his bag, and cried—that while he was crying, he saw a big carriage go by with candles in it, (the thunder and lightning) and then it grew very dark, and he asked God to take care of little Johnny, and went to sleep. He seemed amazed to see so many around him, and all so glad to see him.

Peace, in view of Death.—When I am dead and forgotten, the world will be as it is; the same succession and varieties of seasons, the same revolutions of heaven, the same changes of earth and sea, the like occurrences of natural events and human affairs. It is not in my power to alter the course of things, or to prevent what must be. What should I do, but quietly take my part of the present; and humbly leave the care of the future to that all-wise Providence, which ordereth all things, even the most cross events, according to his most holy and just purposes?—Ibid.

Heaven hath many tongues that talk of it, more eyes to behold it, but few hearts that rightly affect it.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
Ira Sayles, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathemat
Gurdon Evans, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. Hartshorn, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. Stillman, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. Maxson. Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. Kenyon, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences. The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

The Teachers' Classes, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

The Academic Year for 1845—6 consists of three Terms; as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

Expenses.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

SECTION III.

Institution of the Weekly Sabbath and its Design.

Our inquiry at present is regarding the Sabbath in the first and chief of the senses in which the word is employed—that of the seventh day of the week—to which the name is, in a more limited and peculiar manner, applied, all the other, as we have already seen expressly stated by God to Moses, being "beside the Sabbaths of the Lord," immediately commemorative of His own rest.

In this investigation, seeking that we may be enabled truly to discern and to exhibit the mind of God respecting it, we begin with a careful examination of the first text bearing upon the subject. As it contains much important instruction, we cite at length the words as they stand in our translation of the inspired account of the creation. Already had the forming hand of Jehovah been six days employed in giving form, and life, and beauty, to the world. For wise purposes towards man, He had already provided various means for the division of time. The succession of day and night was effected by the earth's motion on its axis; the moon's revolutions round the earth, distinguish time into months; and by the earth's motion round the sun, the annual changes of season are produced. But, besides these divisions of time, so effected, the Creator has, by Sabbatic rest, established yet another, which no sensible change indicates, but the observance of which requires an act of faith. To this we now refer. "And God saw every thing that He had made, and behold it was very good. And the evening and the morning were the sixth day. Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the hosts of them. And on the seventh day God ended His work which He had made; * and He rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; because that in it He had rested from all His work, which God created and made." Gen. 1: 31; 2: 1—3.

The record of the Sabbath thus occupies an early place in the Book of God. It is the very first of religious ordinances, its institution being coeval with the history of the world's existence and our own; and it has, in the time and manner of its appointment, a stamp of universality commensurate with the present features of both. After all the inanimate parts of creation had received their forms, and the irrational tribes their being, on the sixth day, man, the noblest work of the Creator, made in His own image, was created, and received the delegated authority of his God, for entire dominion. On the day succeeding, God rested in complacency and delight in His work; and this, the day of His own rest, He blessed and sanctified, as a day of weekly rest to His newly-formed creature, man.

We are therefore led at once, by the inspired statement, to a consideration of the objects divinely contemplated by the Sabbath. The reason of its appointment is, because that in it He had rested from all his work. "God saw every thing that He had made, and behold it was very good." It was a scene over which "the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." Earth, sea, and sky, teem with the wonders and with the bounties of the Almighty, produced by His all-quickening word. The herbs and trees of the field, with all their varieties of foliage, of flower, and of fruit, gratify the eye and the taste. Not only have the herbs and trees a present value of ornament and use, but have had each given to it, its respective seed, productive of its individual species, all having impressed upon them their power of propagation for the after continuation of their species.†

The beasts of the field roam undisturbed, and at large, in the pastures of their great Creator's wide domain. And while the earth waves with the luxuriance of plenty, the air is joyous with the choir of feathered songsters. Arrayed in their beauty, these fowls of the air, of diversified plumage, with expanding wing, at pleasure, flitting in regions more peculiarly their own, skimming earth's surface, or soaring aloft, are still obedient to the instinct implanted by the all-wise Creator, and without reluctance, own supremacy to man, to whom dominion had been assigned.

The flowing stream and the rolling ocean are stored with their myriads of finny inhabitants. And not only does the ocean itself teem with life, but the bed and caverns of the deep are replete with the wonders of Almighty power, wisdom, and love. The very bowels of the earth inclose most precious minerals, adapted alike to please and profit him who is called to praise the Lord for His wonderful works done unto the children of men.

Powers are impressed upon matter, and knowledge is communicated to man of the laws by which all things are regulated, enabling him, by availing himself of these, and working in harmony with the law of his Lord, to effect the most astonishing results. All the achievements of science are but the fruit of walking in the footsteps of Jehovah; and profitably may we look into the ascertained truths of astronomy, mechanics, chemistry, and natural philosophy, with reference to the wisdom, the order, and the grace, of Him whose work and rest the Sabbath commemorates.

With love to his Lord, and attention to His work, Adam could both perceive much of Heaven's productions as various as they are, yet many of them passing almost imperceptibly into each other, and he could admire the beautiful and harmonious operation which pervades the whole. He would also discover in all around him, a mutual dependence of the several parts upon each other, while the whole were tending to one important end. He would trace, through the various departments of creation, the hand of wisdom which guides the vast machine of universal nature—which at the first gave motion to its wheels, and which evolves from many apparantly opposite principles and conflicting powers, a structure of the most exquisite beauty and utility.

There is in creation that which is adapted to the gratification of all our senses, furnished of God for that end. In the exuberance of His loving kindness, the Creator having made liberal provision of food for man and beast—giving them "every herb bearing seed upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in which there is the fruit of a tree yielding seed"—all nature smiled in its loveliness. Every herb, every tree, was perfect of its kind; and already the beauty and the fragrance of the flower, and the mellowness of the fruit, in all their diversified orders, with the teeming myriads of living creatures, each in possession of that happiness which they were severally capable of enjoying, may have arrested the eye, and affected the sense, and filled with gladness the heart of him to whom in love the whole were given. All earth's features of interest to the eye of intelligence, rising from its mildest to its most majestic forms, spoke of the presence and Godhead of Jehovah—and all creation's million voices, from the mutest to the loudest of them all, may have been heard with admiration and delight by the yet sinless and highly-gifted immortal, reflecting brightly his Maker's image, brought last upon the scene, and placed there as Lord over it all under Him.

And besides and beyond all of beauty and magnificence that immediately met the eye of Adam, as it roamed over creation's wonders, there were worlds upon worlds, and systems upon systems, too distant for even his undimmed eye to discover; and myriads upon myriads of creatures, all instinct with life, within his own immediate range, too minute for the unaided eye to perceive, yet in their diminutive mechanism for maintaining and enjoying life, lay evidence of highest character of infinite power, wisdom, and goodness, when perceived. And the wonders which are revealed to us only by the aid of telescope and microscope, were fully seen, and duly appreciated by their great Creator, and the commemoration of their creation is all embraced in the sabbatic rest.

For, whatever may be the effect on the heart of man, there was one eye of infinite intelligence, and one heart of infinite beneficence, whose interest and whose joy, deeply felt, were not to pass unexpressed. "God saw every thing that He had made, and behold it was very good;" and a memorial of Him as the Creator, and of this His creation, was now to be established, that not only Adam and his wife, but that all their descendants, less near to the time, though not less near to the realities and wonders of creation, as they were not less dependent upon the love and tenderness of the Creator, might also contemplate the wonders, and hear the sounds, and see the sights, which gave pleasure to the Lord of all, and might, from age to age, with loudest notes, join in expressions of adoration and praise.

Resting with complacent delight in His finished work, "God saw every thing that He had made, and behold it was very good." Nothing needed amendment or improvement. It is all worthy of its Lord; and the Sabbath which He sanctified and blessed "because that in it He had rested from all His work," stands forth a witness for God, against those who would deify, or give an eternity of existence unto matter. The falsehood is not only repudiated in the Scriptures, but against this atheism which has had a place in many of the forms of false philosophy, both of ancient and modern times, the Sabbath is the appointed testimony, which the people of God ought ever steadily in their practice to have exhibited.

In God's appointment of the Sabbath, there is, then, more implied than the opportunity it brings of rest to the body and refreshing for the soul—more designed than that it should be a means of promoting and cherishing faith in God, and suggesting the duty and the privilege of regularly setting apart a portion of our time for His service—and more contemplated for our race, than the advantages with which it is fraught for the re-invigoration of the corporeal and mental powers. Every man has that within him which teaches something of the duty of acknowledging the God on whom he is ever depending; and continual exhaustion reminds us of the need which the human frame has for periodical repose beyond erest of night. The Sabbath was, however, designed, with this, to serve another purpose also.

In the Sabbath, there is, then, placed in the way of men a memorial of the divine power, and wisdom, and goodness, constantly standing forth as a preservative from the false feeling of independence. Knowing God as the source of life and sustentation in all the parts of creation—arrested by the monuments of stupendous power—every where beholding the traces of infinite intelligence and love—the creature is directed to consider these as emanations of the mind of One who ever seeks the good of men, teaching him that the Almighty power and infinite wisdom which he recognizes and acknowledges, are those of a Father who wills his blessing in all things; and, specially, is he taught to perceive this in the law which enjoins the weekly suspension of his labors for the commemoration of creation work.

It is needful for the creature, however high the station he occupies in the scale of intelligence, to remember his Creator, and his unceasing dependence upon Him for all he is and for all he has. In the contemplation suggested by the regularly returning Sabbath, this is vividly set before him—for all its associations remind us of the God whose finished work it commemorates, and whose rest it imparts. As a memorial to man of the world's creation, and reminding him of its preservation and his own from week to week by the divine care, teaching him to look to that God who "giveth to all life, and breath, and all things," the Sabbath not only affords opportunity of worship, but is a fitting means of impressing the mind, and of cherishing that feeling of dependence which is our only right condition, and which will be felt all the more sensibly according to our advancement in moral purity.

Now, to man in this righteous state, the Sabbath would come not only testifying of the duty of trust in God, but calling him also into the condition of practically proving the blessedness it brings. And Adam, even had he continued in innocence, accustomed to see a connection between his own care of Eden's garden and its fertility—observant of the fact that according as the soil was tilled and the tree was pruned, in that proportion was the amount and quality of the fruit produced—all which is true, as it respects "the six working days," to those who therein see and serve the Lord, that being the ordinance of God; as it is not less true that all this is reversed as respects the seventh day, whereon it is the ordinance of God that man should rest—he was yet to be taught, in faith to resign his implements, and in sacred time entirely to commit the objects of his solicitude to the care of the Creator, having in the Sabbath a memorial of a previous time, when both soil and tree, as well as work and fruit, were alike without existence, and having also in it a reminiscence of the God by whose fiat they were brought into being.

And being thus called to trust in God, and finding the blessings of obeying the divine call to rest, and realizing the divine goodness, and the unceasing care exercised in his behalf, both through the every-day work of his hands, and the interruption of that work, might man even in moral purity have been taught more and more to yield himself without reserve unto his Maker. With a heart right with God, man's enjoyment in Him, so far from rendering him independent of the fountain of life, would only teach him to prize it more highly, and to attach proportionate value to every means by which the consciousness of this very dependence was promoted. It was, therefore, worthy of a holy God, that while yet all was in rectitude—when every thought of man was directed aright, and every day was to him a day of holiness—still to claim for himself peculiarly, as well as to bless for the creature's good, a day separated from a common to a sacred use, making it a Sabbath of blessing to the children of men.

It was also worthy of God, who, in the exercise of His creative power, had brought a world into being, to institute a day commemorative of what He had done, to testify of His finished work of creation—and it was not less becoming of a creature in the highest state of purity and blessedness, to commemorate with gladness of heart the workmanship of his Maker, and thus in sabbatic rest to point the faith of others to the fountain of purity and bliss. From the page of nature, Adam could read reflected the glory of the great Creator, and even thus be taught to give to Him the homage of his innocence—"for the invisible things of him from the creation of the world, are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead." Rom. 1: 20. Besides being fitted to cherish communion with God, the Sabbath, therefore, in its regular return, is designed to form a continual memorial of the invisible God, by whom all things were brought into being, and on whose blessed will they are ever dependent—and, it expresses to all, in suitable exercise and form, the delight which the God of the Sabbath imparts to our souls.

* As it in no way affects the subject of our present investigation, I have not deemed it necessary to notice in the text the translation of this clause adopted by many commentators, "On the seventh day God HAD ended His work," instead of "On the seventh day God ended His work," as if part of that work remained till the seventh day. Nor will I here do more than mention the statement that the Samaritan Pentateuch, which is the oldest extant copy of the book, as also the Syriac and the Septuagint versions, all render here, "On the sixth day God ended His work." Boothroyd adopts this form of correcting the text. By either change, the meaning of the passage would be more clearly presented, as the obvious truth of the creation's having been actually accomplished in six days, would be expressed.

† It certainly is not a little remarkable, that certain kinds of seeds, which probably have lain deeply imbedded in the earth since the flood, vegetate when brought into a condition of enjoying the united influence of heat, moisture, and air. Sufficiently interesting, though less wonderful, is the well-known fact, that wheat which may have lain entombed in Egyptian mummy swaths for thousands of years, has in our own day, when planted in the earth, germinated freely and, bearing seed, has reproduced its kind.

MORAL CONDITION OF THE WORLD.

Meetings of great interest, with reference to the condition and prospects of the moral world, were held in the Bleecker-street Church in New York, on the first Monday in January, and attended by the Secretaries of the various benevolent institutions, together with pastors and members of several churches. The following account of the meeting, we copy from one of the daily papers:—

After prayer and reading of the Scriptures by Dr. E. Mason, Rev. Dr. Armstrong presented some aspects of the world, full of encouragement to Christian philanthropists. First, the late decision of the Emperor of China, removing the obstacles to Christian efforts in that vast country, and allowing his subjects entire toleration—whereas, formerly, death was the penalty for such as preferred Christianity. In Hindostan, too, the supreme authority of the land had, the past year, repealed the old Hindoo law which made the renunciation of caste in favor of Christianity a forfeiture of all property and other privileges, and had made all educated persons (Christians as well as others) eligible to the most important offices. Dr. Armstrong alluded also to the decay of false religions generally. Budhism, professed by more than 300,000,000, was very manifestly on the wane. The King of Siam, heretofore a very devoted Budhist, eighteen months since sent a messenger to Ceylon to inquire as to the state of religion. In August last, the messenger reported to him that Budhism was falling in that country, through the influence of the same kind of Missionaries that introduced the arts of civilization. On hearing this, such was the King's regard, and that of his family, for these improvements, that a brother of his, a Priest, voluntarily offered to build a seminary for the Missionaries, on condition that they would educate some of his people also. In Calcutta, great advance was making in education, in consequence of governmental encouragement to those best trained and qualified for civil offices. In one region of Peninsular India, as appeared from a recent communication, there had been an extensive renunciation of idolatry—about 2,000 families professing devotion, henceforth, to the true and only living God. Mohammedanism, too, was on the decline. In Turkey, the centre of its power, the Sultan was encouraging education, and adopting the improvements of Christian nations. In some sections of Persia, also, the government was appointing Christian Magistrates. The movements in Germany, France, Switzerland, &c., were also presenting most favorable indications that the Gospel was to have free course, and prosper. The Jews, also, whose conversion was to be as life from the dead to the moral world, were, in many cities of the old world, looking favorably towards Christianity. A number of them were now in a course of theological education at Edinburgh; and even in New York, a spacious building had appeared the last year, bearing the inscription, "Mission-House for the Jews." He alluded, also, with great interest, to the movements for promoting general union among Christians, and to the breaking up of unscriptural alliances between Church and State—the noble example set in Scotland, and very recently in Switzerland.

Rev. Mr. Hall, Secretary of the Home Mission Society, while he deplored the general want of a revival influence from on high, in the churches, and the need of greater union in effort, said that external prospects, in general, were very encouraging at home, as well as in distant lands. He had recently traveled 4,000 miles at the West, and was cheered to see how much was done and doing. The impression seemed deepening, that 'righteousness exalteth a nation.' True religion might be said to have gained the day; and if we were persevering in duty, the nation was safe. He showed, in affecting colors, how very different would have been the aspects of the West, and the prospects of the whole country, had the Home Missionary efforts, and other great benevolent operations for the West, so vigorously commenced about 20 years since, been all delayed to this time! And from past success he derived encouragement to new zeal and effort, and to fervent supplication for Almighty aid.

Rev. Dr. Adams said he was highly gratified with the encouraging aspects that had been presented. "We are saved by hope." And we are authorized to expect far more copious blessings from on high. This was in accordance with the analogy of nature and Providence, as well as Revelation. Great movements were seen in all departments of life, and they were to be looked for in humble faith and prayer, in reference to the kingdom of peace, which is to bless the whole earth, as well as to exalt our nation.

Very interesting addresses were made in the afternoon by Rev. Messrs. Reid and Thompson, and all present must have been impressed with the thought, that a great and sublime work is in rapid development throughout the moral world—the more sublime from the reflection, that the more than electric power which moves and directs the whole machinery, has its source in the highest Heaven.

BETHANY.

Bethany was a favorite resort of mine; the affecting history of Lazarus was especially impressed on my heart, now that I was in the vicinity where the transaction took place. It is at present a wretched Arab village, situated about a mile and a quarter from Jerusalem. The course I generally pursued in my visits to it from the Latin convent, where I resided, was by the Via Dolorosa, and through the gate of St. Stephen on the east side of the city, over the brook Kedron, ascending the Mount of Olives by the same road which David went up when cursed by Shimei—this leads by the garden of Gethsemane, and the tomb of the blessed virgin crossed the place of our Saviour's ascension, and, on the descent on the other side of the Mount of Olives, entered the village of Bethany amidst the barking of ugly hyæna-like dogs, which are an abundant nuisance in Syria and Turkey, whilst at the same time assailed by children screeching "Hadjee Baugh-sheese." In a lane as you enter the village from the Jerusalem side, a lonely and neglected spot, the tomb of Lazarus is shown. A doorway of masonry covering the face of the rocky cavern. The original orifice may still be discerned against which the stone was laid. The cave is very deep, and at present is descended by a numerous flight of steps. St. John well expresses it when he says, "Jesus cried with a loud voice, Lazarus come forth." Farther on, in this most melancholy looking village, is a wretched little mosque, which I would suppose to be the site of the house occupied by Mary and Martha; though there are two large gable-ends of a once respectable-looking edifice, which are pointed out as having been their residence. This village of Bethany, the favorite resting-place of our blessed Saviour, I constantly resorted to every week whilst in Jerusalem. The never-to-be-forgotten circumstance of the resurrection of Lazarus, and the manner in which St. John describes it, together with its being the district from whence our Lord ascended, so interested my affections, that, in my walks about the city, my footsteps always tended hither. From the Bethany side of the Mount of Olives there is a fine view of the Dead Sea, over which hang the dark blue mountains of Moab. One would suppose he could just drop down from Bethany, and in an evening's walk reach the Dead Sea; yet it is twenty-two miles distant: the intervening desert is arid and desolate in the extreme, and, moreover, still considered dangerous from predatory Arabs. In the time of Lot, part of the vale, now a desert, was called Siddim, or Chalk, and this is still manifest where the chalky district commences on that side of the Mount of Olives which verges towards the desert of the Dead Sea. Sometimes I returned from Bethany to Jerusalem by the low road, round the Mount of Olives, through the village of Siloam, crossing the valley of Jehoshaphat, and so entering the city near the spot where our Lord instituted the last Supper, which is on Mount Sion.—Burton's Voyage.

THE POWER OF KINDNESS.—Fenelon was a Roman Catholic, and Archbishop of Cambria, in France. He was a man of the finest feelings, of the greatest benevolence, and he uniformly practiced the law, "overcome evil with good." He was kind and affable to the lowly, mild and courteous to the ignorant, philanthropic to the miserable, and ever gentle both to friend and foe. The consequence was, that he won all hearts. His diocese was often the theatre of war—but the English, Germans, and Dutch, even surpassed the inhabitants of Cambria in their love and veneration for him. At such times, he gathered the wretched into his residence and entertained them; for his known goodness had surrounded him with a power which even contending armies could not resist; and the consequence was, that his dwellings were safe, even when towns and villages were lying in smoking ruins around him. The following is an instance of his kindness: He observed one day, that a peasant, who had been driven from his home, and to whom Fenelon had given shelter, ate nothing. He inquired the reason. "Alas! my lord," said the poor man, "in making my escape from my cottage, I had not time to bring off my cow, which was the support of my family. The enemy will drive her away, and I shall never find another so good." Fenelon, availing himself of his privilege of safe conduct, immediately set out, accompanied by a single servant, and drove her back himself to the peasant. By thus walking according to the law of overcoming evil with good, he gained the affection of all. The peasantry loved him as their father—and, long after his death, their tears would flow when they said, "There is the chair on which our good Archbishop used to sit in the midst of us; we shall see him no more." What a crown of unfading glory the law of love gave man. [Montgomery.

SACREDNESS OF TEARS.—There is a sacredness in tears. They are not the mark of weakness, but of power. They speak more eloquently than ten thousand tongues. They are the messengers of overwhelming grief, of deep contrition, and of unspeakable love. Oh! speak not harshly of the stricken one—weeping in silence! Break not the deep solemnity by rude laughter, or intrusive footsteps. Scoff not if the stern heart of manhood is sometimes melted to tears of sympathy—they are what help to elevate him above the brute. I love to see tears of affection. There are painful tokens, but still most holy. They is pleasure in tears—an awful pleasure! If there were none on earth to shed a tear for me, I should be loth to live; and if no one might weep over my grave, I could never die in peace.

SUNDAY LEGISLATION UNCONSTITUTIONAL—NO. 4.

In the late Philadelphia Convention for promoting the "proper observance of the Christian Sabbath," it was a disputed question as to what character the Convention ought to assume;—some affirming that they were there as Christian men, and the representatives of Christian societies; and the majority declaring by vote, that they considered themselves only as a civil, and not as an ecclesiastical body. But if we consider the facts of the case, it will appear plainly, that the minority were right in what they affirmed on this point, and the majority wrong in the pretense which they made. The meeting was called by a religious society—the Philadelphia Sabbath Association. It was called for a professedly religious object; for the preamble of the report of the business committee, which was adopted by the Convention, says it was "to promote the proper observance of the Christian Sabbath." It was composed of professedly Christian men; for they declared by vote, that "We believe a faithful observance of the Lord's day . . . . . is obedience to the com- [illegible] they were an ecclesiastical body or not, that they were organized and acting as a religious body, and for a religious object. They were the representatives of a religious party, seeking to control the civil power of the State to establish and enforce a tenet exclusively religious, and that at the expense of the rights of another religious party; which is contrary to the Constitution of the State of Pennsylvania.

By referring to the published report of that meeting, it will be seen that the resolutions reported by the business committee, although all entertained by the meeting, were not all carried through—the third and fourth resolutions being abandoned after considerable debate, but abandoned, as it would appear from the speeches made on the occasion, on the ground that the law of 1794 would be sufficient to cover all the objects of the friends of the Christian Sabbath, if properly enforced, without further application to the Legislature; that is, to compel the religious observance of the first day by the prosecution of those who shall perform any secular labor on that day! This movement was effected after a lengthy discussion of nearly two days continuance, by Dr. Durbin's introducing a resolution, which was finally adopted as a substitute for the third and fourth resolutions. This resolution advises application to the Legislature for an Act, merely "to relieve canal and railroad companies from penalties for not performing certain acts on the Sabbath day." This, of itself, would be unobjectionable; nay, it would be commendable; because every individual and every chartered company ought to be left perfectly free to observe any day of the week which he or they may conscientiously believe to be sacred unto God. But as the case now stands, it is to be regarded as a mere compromise of measures to attain a favorite object; it is an endeavor to remove a legislative obstacle to the universal enforcement of the unrepealed law of 1794. It is not for the sake of relieving the burdened consciences of men earnestly desirous of observing the Lord's day, but under legal compulsion to violate it. There are no such men in Pennsylvania. It is optional with every man whether he will enter or continue in a situation or office in which he must necessarily violate any religious obligation. Dr. Durbin's resolution is a manœuvre to draw the Legislature into a position, in which a certain religious party can say to the civil authorities, "Now you must enforce the law of 1794." And the boatmen and railroad men, travelers and laborers, with conscience or no conscience upon the subject, must lay by their occupations upon that day to please those who are determined to enforce submission, willing or unwilling, to a favorite dogma, despite the Constitution of the State, and the rights of others of their fellow citizens. It is understood, that certain men have made a vow that they will never cease to agitate the subject until this favorite object is accomplished! But let them look to it; there were once forty men who made a vow that they would never eat until they had killed Paul, yet Paul escaped their hands.

The law of 1794 inflicts a penalty of four dollars for every offence against Sunday-keeping, (or rather Sunday-keepers,) to be levied upon the goods and chattles of the offender; and in default thereof, imprisonment for one week; and says, there is no exception in favor of Jews or Seventh-day Baptists. No law could be framed more palpably contradictory to the Constitution of Pennsylvania, or more flagrantly opposed to the rights of conscience; and yet Judge Parsons and a large number of the clergy of Philadelphia are moving heaven and earth to have this law enforced! What do they mean? Have they excluded Jews and Seventh-day Baptists from their category of humanity? If they have, their Creator has not, nor has the Constitution, nor the people of Pennsylvania. Whatever has been done in past ages, it is not possible now for all the parsons in Philadelphia long to withhold the just rights of a peaceable, upright and injured class of citizens. Things were often done in times past, when people who were most interested in them knew not of it; but there is now a vigilant press to guard the rights of an injured people, and guarded they will be.

The law of 1794 is as plainly unconstitutional as it is possible for an act to be. The Constitution says, "No human authority can in any case whatever control or interfere with the rights of conscience." Yet the law above-named seeks to interfere with and control the consciences of all those citizens who religiously observe the seventh day of the week. It says, contrary to their consciences, "You shall religiously observe the first day of the week, notwithstanding you have religiously observed the seventh day, and believe that your Creator has authorized you to secularize the first day, as the five following days of the week, by his holy law." To compel a people to do that which is contrary to their consciences, is as arbitrary as to forbid them to do what they feel in conscience bound to perform. It is a poor apology for liberty, to tell the people of Pennsylvania, you may keep the seventh day, if you compel them, contrary to their conscientious belief, to keep also the first day.

It would be more tolerable, if this compulsion were exercised for state purposes; but it is the more odious and flagrant, because it is done to establish the religious tenets of a religious party. That party may be the majority in the State; but if it were ninety-nine-hundredths of the people of the State, it could not affect the constitutionality of the statute. The Constitution says, "NO preference shall be given by law to ANY religious establishments or modes of worship." What is the religious observance of Sunday but a mode of [illegible] It is a religious institution, and said to be instituted and observed in honor of the resurrection of the Saviour of mankind. For what purpose does the statute enforce it? Is it a civil or a religious object? Religious, doubtless. It may have some bearing upon the welfare of civil society; but so has every other institution of religion, and notwithstanding this, it is as exclusively a religious institution, a mode of worship, as is the observance of the Lord's Supper. In past ages, and in other countries, it has been so regarded; and the code which compelled the one compelled the other; and under the Constitution of Pennsylvania, it would be as consistent to compel this as that.

Judge Banks, in court at Easton, when commenting upon the religious rights of the people of Pennsylvania, said respecting this section of the Constitution—"This provision places the rights of conscience above the reach of human authority. It can exercise no power over this right. It cannot control, and indeed cannot interfere with it. The authority of the Executive branch of the government cannot do it. They cannot do it singly, nor can they by their united authority do it. And why? Because their authority is human, and incompetent to perform any such purpose. It is declared incompetent, not in particular cases, but it is declared that it cannot be done in any case whatever."

If Judge Banks' opinion be correct—(and it is a common-sense one)—then the efforts of all the Sabbath Associations in Pennsylvania will be in vain to enforce the law of 1794, although it be not repealed; for this declares that all the authority in the State is incompetent to interfere with the rights of conscience. Yet to compel a Seventh-day Baptist to religiously observe the first day, is to interfere with the rights of conscience; for he believes that the God who sanctified the seventh day, secularized the first day, and that to put this in the place of that, is an offence against his holy law. With Judge Banks' view of the meaning of the Constitution, it would be impossible for any unbiased court to convict an intelligent Seventh-day Baptist of offence against the first day, commonly called Sunday. If he made a proper representation of his case, he must be acquitted, because the Constitution, which the courts are sworn to defend, declares that no human authority whatever is competent to intefere with his conscientious refusal to observe that day. Every man has a constitutional right to omit to do what his conscience forbids, as really as he has to do what his conscience obliges him to perform, provided it is not prejudicial to the just rights of others. Now the non-observance of Sunday by one citizen is in no way prejudicial to the just rights of another citizen; because the non-observance of it by one does not hinder or incapacitate the other for its observance. People attend church on every day of the week, when all mechanical and manufacturing operations are in full clangor; and the observers of the seventh day keep it as a holy day, while the multitude of their follow citizens are in full pursuit of their common avocations. Let these views of the matter be widely disseminated, and the law of 1794 must become inoperative upon all conscientious observers of the seventh day as the Sabbath. Let them hereafter assert their constitutional rights with all the confidence of upright and just men, and they must be awarded them.

We would not, however, throw a single doubt upon the justice of the Legislature of Pennsylvania. Let the subject be fairly and respectfully laid before them, and whether they repeal the law or not, they will unquestionably pass a law to exempt Seventh-day Baptists from the penalties of the statute for Sunday-keeping, and protect them from suits at law, and civil and military service, on the seventh day of the week which they observe as the Sabbath. A more peaceable or upright class of citizens is not to be found in the State, and their rights will be respected where they are suitably represented.

Pennsylvania has as just and liberal a Constitution as any State in the Union, and she cannot afford to have it disregarded for the gratification of any religious party whatever. She has a fair name for religious freedom. From her commencement, rarely has her soil been polluted by religious persecution; and she may not suffer it to rage against the Sieben Tæger, whose fathers nursed and fed the dying patriot who was wounded and fell in defense of his country's freedom.

Although there may be but little sympathy with the religious peculiarities of those who observe the seventh day, they will find many advocates of equal rights, who will favor their cause so soon as it is fairly presented. We trust, therefore, that they will make a general and vigorous movement to effect this just purpose, and that all other Seventh-day Baptists in the State will unite with them in a respectful application to the Legislature during the present winter.

DEACONS WANTED FOR THE WEST.

The duty of ministers of the Gospel to cast their eyes over the waste places of the West, and in some cases to make great personal sacrifices for the purpose of cultivating them, is generally acknowledged. Yet there is another class of religious men, equally needed, and who might be equally useful, concerning whom the same obligation is not near as widely felt. We refer to such pious and discreet brethren as are qualified to fill the office of deacon. It is well known, that comparatively few men of this stamp are found in the far West, while some of those who are qualified for the station by education and experience, are so completely secularized in mind and habits as to render them quite unavailing. The consequence is, that the responsibilities and duties usually devolved upon deacons, are either wholly neglected, or are transferred to the minister, who is thus compelled to neglect his pastoral duties, or submit to an amount of labor which is ruinous to his mental and physical health. It is impossible to estimate the good which might be accomplished in that new country by a supply of men, with such business habits as would qualify them to take charge of the temporal interests of the churches, and such spiritual graces as would fit them to superintend the Sabbath-Schools, Bible-Classes, and benevolent operations of the day. They would greatly augment the usefulness of the ministry, and might each become a nucleus around which to gather the elements of a wide-spread and salutary moral influence. Let some of the "good men and true" who throng the eastern churches, and whose dissatisfaction with their present situation leads them to contemplate radical changes, lay these considerations to heart, and in making their changes inquire not only where their personal interests will be best secured, but also where they can do most to build up the waste places of Zion. If they would act upon this plan, a pressing want would be supplied, and their own true interests in the highest degree promoted.

The Church in Richland, N. Y.—We are glad to learn, that this little church, which was organized about a year ago, mostly of persons who had recently embraced the Sabbath, is in a prosperous condition. By a letter from their pastor, Eld. Elias Burdick, we are informed that a kind Providence has favored them with a comfortable house to worship in, which is owned by them in company with the Methodists, being occupied by one congregation on the Sabbath, and by the other on the first day. It was dedicated on the 14th of October last, by appropriate and interesting services, in which Eld. Joel Green of Watertown, and Eld. Holmes of Mexico, participated.

The Revival in Scott.—Several weeks ago we published some account of an interesting revival in the Sabbath-keeping Church at Scott, N. Y. We rejoice to learn, by a letter from Bro. Luke P. Babcock, that the work continues, and increases in interest. There has never been a time of deeper feeling, or a more encouraging state of things in the church. Thirty-four persons had been baptized when the account which we published was written; twenty-seven have since been baptized; making sixty-one in all to whom the ordinance has been administered.

System in Giving.—The following paragraph was evidently written by a man of experience and observation. We wish its thoughts could be indelibly impressed upon the mind of every member of our churches. Then would there be less occasion for missionaries at home, and no difficulty in supporting them abroad. Read it carefully, and answer to yourself candidly, whether you are justly chargeable with neglecting the duty of which it speaks:—

"The duty neglected in a great many cases is to teach young churches to adopt a regular system in their operations. I have seen this duty neglected more than almost any other. It should not be so. If there is a small church of twenty-five members, collected in a new country, where none are rich, and all find enough to do to live and meet their wants, even here the members of the small and poor church should be taught to pay as freely and as regularly for the support of the public worship of God, as they do to support their families, improve their farms, or erect their buildings. If they are not taught this when poor and few, they will not attend to it when they become numerous and rich; and then an awful blight will come over a covetous church. If a young and poor church do all these things systematically and punctually, as far as they are able, and increase their contributions as their wealth increases, those who unite with them will imbibe the same spirit, and pursue the same course, and that church will prosper. To teach and preach these things, is the minister's duty."

Marriage Extraordinary.—The two somewhat noted anti-slavery lecturers, Stephen S. Foster and Abby Kelly, were joined together in "the bands of holy matrimony," at New Brighton, Pa., on the 21st ult.

"Sabbath Convention."—We see it stated in some of the papers, that the clergy of Alabama have called a Sabbath Convention to be held in Mobile on the 26th of February next.

THE DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

Alfred, Jan. 6, 1846.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I send you the following communication from the Rev. James R. Irish to me, as Agent of the Stockholders of the De Ruyter Institute. Will you please give the same a place in your paper?

It may be proper here to say, that the De Ruyter Institute having been sold a year ago last July for its debts, it has since been redeemed by a number of the members of our denomination; and as the result of their liberality, is about to be re-opened for the instruction of our youth, with the prayer and hope, that it may yet subserve the great end for which it was first erected.

Something farther may be looked for on this subject before many weeks.

Respectfully, Lucius Crandall.

West Genesee, Jan. 4, 1846.

Bro. Crandall—Agreeably with your request, I take the earliest opportunity to forward to you an answer to your proposition in behalf of the Stockholders of the De Ruyter Institute, for me to engage as Principal of the same.

Though I have reason to fear that I am unequal to so responsible a charge, yet I am impelled by considerations which you have urged, and such as are suggested to my own mind, to devote myself to the work. I do this with a confident expectation, that the undertaking will be seconded by the united co-operation of the denomination in that vicinity, and others interested in the prosperity of De Ruyter Institute.

I am happy also to inform you, that brother Gurdon Evans will join me as a co-laborer in the charge. A Preceptress is not yet engaged, but we hope to secure one that will be qualified to redeem all reasonable expectations in relation to that department.

You may then say to the Stockholders and Patrons of the Institution that, by Divine permission, we will be in readiness to wait on them and their youth as early as may be most expedient for a spring term.

Yours in the Gospel,

Jas. R. Irish.

German Jews and the Sabbath.—A paragraph has appeared in several papers, stating in effect, that a considerable number of the Jews in Germany have abandoned their Sabbath, and determined to have service performed in the Synagogue on Sunday. An Israelitish correspondent of one of these papers speaks of the subject as follows:—

"I perceive that you have made an extract from an exchange paper, setting forth that the Jews in Germany had substituted Sunday for Saturday, as their Sabbath. A few in Frankfort, anxious to accommodate themselves to the business facilities of Saturday, have made that change, but not the Jews in all Germany. There is no human power which can change the laws and ordinances of God, and every sensible and true Christian will admit that Saturday is the Sabbath of the Lord, as laid down in the commandments, and Sunday is the Sabbath by adoption—the Sabbath of the Christian Church. When the Jews give up keeping the seventh day, they surrender the great pillar of their faith, and none will regret it more than true Christians. I have no belief that it ever will be abandoned."

Taking Newspapers.—Many persons speak of taking newspapers just as though they really thought the money expended for them was so much given outright to the object for which the paper was established. We think differently, and should heartily recommend the discontinuance of any paper which does not furnish to every subscriber, in the course of a year, sufficient valuable matter to repay his subscription fourfold. There are but few papers which will not do this. Only comply with the following directions of a cotemporary, and you will in the end find it so:—

"Every one who takes a weekly newspaper, (and some one in every family ought to take such a paper,) should carefully preserve its successive numbers, and every two or three years get them bound. Every man who does this, leaves a valuable book to his children, who will respect his memory and value the bequest more than ten times its cost. A volume of newspapers sixty years old, would now sell at more than cost any where. A newspaper is the very best history of the times which can be found; and after a long lapse of time they are resorted to by scholars snd antiquarians, with great interest."

Missionary Meetings.—A series of thirteen missionary meetings were recently held in different Baptist churches of Philadelphia, which were attended by the returned missionaries, Messrs, Judson, Kincaid, and Abbott. They resulted in securing collections and subscriptions to the amount of fourteen thousand two hundred dollars.

The Christian Parlor Magazine for January contains its usual variety of religious and literary matter, with a fine plate of "Smyrna (Asia Minor) from the Harbor." Those who think that Magazines, to be tasteful, must be filled with light reading and useless trash, should examine this. Darius Mead, 141 Nassau street.

The Mothers' Magazine, published at the same office, and edited by Mrs. A. G. Whittlesey, Rev. D. Mead, and Rev. D. Clark, contains many articles well adapted to the class of persons for whom they are designed.

No. 2 of The Pulpit, a Monthly Publication, containing Sermons, Sketches and Plans of Sermons, from living ministers, with other miscellaneous matter, has just been issued by O. Scott, from No. 5 Spruce street.

The Jewish Chronicle for this month has full reports from the missionaries of the principal Societies for promoting Christianity among the Jews. Published at No. 23 Nassau street.

Cassius M. Clay, of Ky., addressed a very large and respectable concourse of the citizens of New York at the Broadway Tabernacle on Monday evening last. He was introduced to the audience by Horace Greeley, Esq., with a few words of allusion to his past history and present attitude, after which he spoke for about two hours in behalf of the policy, necessity, and justice of emancipating all who are held in bondage except for their own crimes. His address was warm and fervent, and in some parts eloquent. It was received with enthusiastic cheers by the largest audience ever crowded together in the Tabernacle.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

The Senate seems to have but little public business before it at present, and therefore spends most of its time in executive sessions. Nothing of general interest was done last week.

In the House of Representatives there was a warm discussion about Oregon, which occupied a part of every day last week. It commenced on Monday, when Mr. C. J. Ingersoll, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a resolution advising the President to give notice to Great Britain of the termination of the Joint Commercial Occupation, which he moved to make the special order of the day for the first Monday of February. Mr. Davis of Ky., also read a minority report, declaring that the House has nothing to do with the business, but that the subject is a proper one for the action of the President and the treaty majority of the Senate. Mr. Adams of Mass., Mr. Giddings of Ohio, and several other distinguished Representatives, spoke in favor of giving the notice. Mr. Rhett of S. C., was one of the warmest opposers of it. The notice seems to be regarded as necessarily leading to a war, and various mercenary motives are charged upon those who are in favor of it. Some western men are charged with favoring it for the purpose securing the election of a western President in 1848. Some northern men are charged with favoring it for the purpose of having a war which will give the slaveholders trouble, etc. etc. The subject was under discussion when the House adjourned on Saturday.

Several notices were given of bills to be introduced, among which was one for the prospective abolition of Slavery in the District of Columbia, another to grant every white man, who may be willing to work it, 160 acres of the public land. Mr. McConnell, of Ala., moved a series of resolutions for the annexation of Ireland to this country!

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE.

The Legislature of New York convened at the capitol in Albany on Tuesday the 6th inst. In the Assembly, Wm. E. Crain, of Herkimer, was chosen Speaker; Wm. W. Dean, of Otsego, Clerk; S. S. Wood, of Westchester, Sergeant-at-Arms; and H. G. Pope, of St. Lawrence, Doorkeeper.

After the usual formalities, the Governor's Message was received, read, and ordered to be printed. It is a lengthy document, which most of our readers in the State of New York will probably receive through some other medium, and will not therefore thank us to publish. The Governor gives a cheering account of the state of Common School Education, and of the various philanthropic institutions, and represents the past year as having been one of very great prosperity in nearly every respect.

In the Assembly, on Wednesday, several notices were given of intention to introduce bills, which indicate that the Legislature will have no lack of business for the winter. Among these notices of intention to introduce bills, was one by Mr. Collins, of Allegany County, to amend the Act of 1839 relative to the Seventh-day Baptists. We are glad to see that this subject is brought up at so early a period in the session; and we are assured by those acquainted with Mr. Collins, that he will spare no effort to secure that attention for his bill which the subject of it deserves.

On Wednesday resolutions were introduced in the Assembly, and unanimously adopted, approving the present low rates of Postage, and instructing the Senators and Representatives of the State in Congress, to use their best endeavors to prevent an increase.

The Anti-Rent discussion has commenced in earnest, and bids fair to occupy a prominent place this winter.

Jewish Worship in Algeria.—The Moniteur publishes a royal ordinance dated the 9th ult., instituting an Israelite consistory at Algiers, and two provincial consistories at Oran and Constantine. The authority of the first is to extend over all the French possessions in the North of Africa, and that of the latter is to be confined to their respective provinces. The Algerian consistory is to be composed of four lay members and a great rabbi, and each of the provincial consistories of three lay members and a rabbi. The lay members of the former, directly appointed by the King, are to retain their functions during four years, and those of the latter during three. The salaries of the great rabbi and the provincial rabbis, as well as the cost of the administration, are to be paid by the State. The members of the consistories, on the day of their installation, are to take the following oath: "Before the Almighty God, creator of heaven and earth, who forbids His name to be taken in vain, and punishes perjury, I swear fidelity to the King of the French, obedience to the laws, ordinances and regulations published, or which shall hereafter be published, by his Government." The duties of the consistories are, to maintain order in the interior of the synagogues, to prevent the formation of private religious meetings without a special license, to appoint the ministers and other agents of the temple, particularly the schohets; to attend to families sending their children to the the asylums and schools; to encourage Israelites to exercise useful professions, and to devote themselves in particular to tillage, &c.

General Intelligence.

LATER FROM SIERRA LEONE.—We have received advices from Sierra Leone to the 30th August, and the information in regard to the slave trade is very interesting. It appears from a list published, that during the period between the 1st of April, 1844, to the 17th of May, 1845, sixty vessels were captured, on board of which nearly 5000 slaves were found; five of these vessels were destroyed and the remainder condemned.

Among the slavers captured was the "Africano." At the time it was taken there were 589, of which number 28 died on her passage to Freetown, and on the first night of her arrival there, thirty men were hurried into eternity. It appeared that there were two distinct tribes among the negroes, and during the night they commenced quarrelling, and being mutually exasperated commenced beating each other with billets of wood, and whenever opportunity offered, strangling each other. The next morning thirty were found dead, and within two days after five more died. Five hundred and twenty-four were at length landed, and the Watchman says:

An eye witness informs us that the poor creatures were so thirsty that they drank the water out of the ends of old canoes, which were hauled up on the beach, surrounded them like so many hounds after a hard chase, each pushing the other for a drop of water. On reaching the African yard, they were supplied with water which they drank out of mess-tuns with avidity. There was no Slave Deck on board of this vessel, and several of the poor creatures got jammed between the casks and were severely bruised; these casks formed their beds to lie upon.

The officer of the Navy, who brought the "Africano," stated that the towns of Lagos, on the slave coast, have been completely destroyed. A Chief, who was banished from Lagos by the King about three years ago, returned in July last, with a force of ten thousand men, drove out the reigning King and his people, and took possession of the rivers and town of Onee. It is said that in the contest upwards of five thousand persons were slain, and during several nights, the glare of burning towns illuminated the air for miles around.

REV. DOCTOR MACLAY.—It gives us pleasure to inform the numerous friends of this venerable and respected clergyman, who have been for the last few days in painful anxiety as to his fate, that he is one of those who escaped with life from the wreck of the steamer Belle Zane, which was overturned by striking on a snag in the Mississippi on the 18th of December, with 90 souls on board, 40 of whom are supposed to have perished.

Dr. Maclay, who was in bed when the boat struck, jumped from his berth and waded across the cabin, breast deep in water, and with only his night clothes on. He with others floated upon the hurrican deck for more than four hours, during one of the coldest nights of the season.

Several of the passengers were so badly frozen as to render their limbs useless, and Robert Burns, of Newport. R. I., was frozen to death after reaching the shore. Incredible as it may appear, Dr. Maclay, although at the age of 69, and exposed to the terrors of such a night, from his vigorous constitution and wonderful powers of endurance, escaped with trifling injury.

A NEW WAR INSTRUMENT.—A Mr. McDowling, manufacturer of Surveyor's and Nautical instruments at Newark, N. J., has, according to the Eagle, invented a very formidable missile, to be used in war, for the destruction of vessels, armies, &c. It consists of a conbustible dart and ball, to be thrown together or separate. It may be so constructed as to suit the bore of a cannon or musket, and can be discharged from either, or thrown by hand. When the dart strikes an object, both explode, causing destruction in every direction. It may be made sufficiently powerful to destroy a vessel of war at the distance of two miles.

A PROFESSOR OF PHRENOLOGY.—Dr. Weir, physician to the Infirmary of Glasgow, has at length been appointed in a chartered University. The Andersonian University of that city has a royal charter. Twelve hundred students, four hundred of whom are medical students, are on the books, and it enjoys all the privileges of the more ancient Universities. This is the first University in Europe that has established a chair expressly for Phrenology. It is expected that Heidelberg will be the next example.

SMALL POX IN PHILADELPHIA.—About one hundred deaths from small-pox in four weeks have been reported in this city, and cases cured variously estimated from six to ten thousand. One fact related to me by a merchant here, is worthy of note. He was suddenly taken very sick with the small-pox; but none of his family took it, although his children had not been vaccinated, and were allowed to come in his room, and the smaller one on his bed. The preventive was a thorough ventilation of his house and room every day, and a slow fire in his room and under his bed of tarred rope, which killed the contagious effect of the disease. From which he argues that by perfect cleanliness, the spread of that disease to any alarming extent would be prevented.

A COLORED COLONY.—The Detroit Daily Advertiser states that a project is on foot to establish a colony or community of the colored people on the State or government lands north of the Grand River in Michigan. An agent from Xenja, Ohio, has been out to look at the country and make a report to his brethren in that State. The purpose is, to buy a large tract, equal to one of the organized counties, and settle it exclusively with the colored race. They think in this way the Legislature will be forced to give them political and municipal rights and privileges. The colored people have a large and flourishing colony in Mercer county, Ohio, which has been in successful operation some years.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—On Friday last, a Mrs. Eaton, of Exeter, was found by her husband, burned almost to a cinder! Mr. Eaton had been married but twenty-four hours, and having occasion to leave his house on business, returned in about three-fourths of an hour, and found his wife, whom he had just before left in good health and spirits, in the dreadful condition above described. There is a mystery hanging over the affair which can never be unfolded. The probability, however, is that Mrs. Eaton was visited by a fit and fell forward into the fire. The funeral sermon was pronounced by Rev. E. G. Carpenter.

SPECTRAL VISION.—A gentleman of this city, known for his intelligence and enterprise, for years past has been entertained with a singular spectral visiter, whenever he enters a certain gate in front of a relative's house on Washington-st., bordering on Roxbury. He is met by a large, full-faced, florid-complexioned man, dressed in a broad-brimmed white hat. This occurs at all hours of the day. The spectre recedes from him as he advances, and near the front door is lost in air. He assures us he takes pleasure in looking his intangible visiter full in the eye—examines the color and cut of his garments, and now regards him as an old, familiar acquaintance. The gentleman is not conscious of having defective vision. It is evident that a morbid action takes place in his brain, through its connection with the optic aparatus—and that the spectre is reproduced by local causes existing at the gate, which cannot yet be explained.

ARTIFICIAL STONE.—The process by which this is made, is to pulverize the flint, granite or marble used, and to work it up into a thick paste. This paste is placed in moulds of any design; and upon being subjected to the action of an oven, the contents of the moulds become vitrified. Thus the most compact and beautiful designs in slate, granite or marble are produced, applicable alike for ornament or for substantial purposes. It withstands all atmospheric changes, and is as durable as flint.

WATER-CURE IN THE UNITED STATES.—There are now in the United States six Water-Cure establishments, or places where patients are treated more or less thoroughly according to the Hydropathic System, located as follows:

New York city, Dr. Joel Shew; Brattleboro', Vt., Dr. R. Wesselhœft; New-Lebanon, N. Y., D. Cambell; Northampton, Mass., David Ruggles; Philadelphia, Dr. Schiefferdecker; Harrison Co., Mississippi, Dr. Byrenheidt.

There are already in existence two monthly periodicals devoted mainly to the explanation and defence of the system—'The Water-Cure Journal' of this city and 'Green-Mountain Spring' at Brattleboro', Vt.; and Sylvester Graham has issued a Prospectus for a third. These facts would seem to indicate that the Water-Cure is rapidly gaining ground in this country.

COMPLIMENTARY TRIBUTE.—The King of Prussia has transmitted to Dr. Howe of Boston, a medal for "scientific merit," as a testimony of His Majesty's appreciation of Dr. H.'s services in the cause of the Institutions for the Blind, and of his method of instructing the deaf and dumb, who are also blind. The medal is of gold, of large size, and beautiful workmanship. On one side of it is Apollo in his chariot, with four horses, with the zodiac at their feet. On the reverse is the head of the present King, with the legend Fieidr. William IV. Koenig von Preussen. It is not a little singular that this tribute should come from the country in which Dr. Howe was imprisoned in 1830, for his interest in behalf of the Poles.

A MIRACLE.—The Editor of the French Courier, of this city, says that M. Bocchiere, a Neapolitan chemist, has discovered a healing agent of such marvellous power as to be capable of closing up wounds in arteries—even the largest of them. Two sheep were taken, at a public institution in Paris, and the corotid artery in each severed; one of them was treated in the regular way, and the other with the Bocchiere water. The first one died, but the other one was running about and eating grass within twenty minutes after the operation, and this caused the famous Lisfranc to say, "Gentlemen, here is a result which may be summed up in two words—here is life, and there is death." Other extraordonary cures, and among them that of spitting of blood, are mentioned as among its virtues. This water, the composition of which is a secret with the inventor, has in all cases to which it has been applied stopped hemorrhage within twenty minutes. It entirely heals blood vessels.

The Potato Rot, if it comes to be a permanent disease, will produce results, by far more important than a political revolution that should change every government in Europe. The Buffalo Commercial is of opinion, that, by long propagation, by tubers, the potato plant has come to its extreme old age, to be followed by dissolution. This hypothesis is not impropable. We know that fruits, after long propagation by slips and buds, run out—becoming seedless and valueless. The Buffalo Editor suggests, as a remedy, that resort be had to the original tubers, to be taken from their native soil in South America. We are not informed whether, in their wild state, they are continued in existence from year to year by tubers, or by seeds, or by both. If by tubers, they may have run their course in their native soil, and we cannot, therefore, place any more dependence on them than on our civilized and christianized Neshanocs and Pink-eyes. But if in their native clime they propagate themselves by seeds, the remedy of resorting to them for a new start in life, may prove valuable.

The native potato is found growing in the rocky cliffs on the coast of Peru, its blossoms always white.

AN AMERICAN AUTOGRAPH COLLECTOR.—Dr. Sprague, of Albany, the rector of the Presbyterian church in that place, is not less known as a collector of antiquities and autographs, than as an eloquent preacher. His collection of 15,000 rare pamphlets was given some time since to the Theological Library at Princeton, and his autographs would fill a very respectable private library. He has several thousand of them, among which are Calvin's, Bunyan's, a large number of European kings, and all the signers of the American "Declaration." Some time since he requested the autograph of Franklin from an ancient Professor of Natural Philosophy, of which he had possessed himself before. "Oh! you have one already," said the Professor. "No matter," replied the determined collector, "I want it for exchange—one Benny Franklin in Europe is worth two kings!" One of the daintiest compliments ever paid to a Boston printer's boy.

SUMMARY.

A Woolen Factory has just been put up in Richmond, 420 by 45 feet, and four stories high. It is capable of manufacturing 2,000 yards of flannel per week, and working up 210,000 lbs. of wool per annum.

Headly, in his "Letters from Italy," states that there is a Lake near Tivoli which has the remarkable property of petrifying its own borders. It is thus gradually contracting its limits, until it bids fair to become a solid mass of stone.

Yankee enterprise seems to keep pace with the times. The brig Henry is now loading at Newburyport for the Columbia river. Dr. Watson, of Newburyport, has taken passage in her, and persons desirous of going out can learn the necessary particulars of price of passage, &c., by addressing Messrs. Cushing and Johnson, Newburyport, Mass., post paid.

The export of New York for the month of December, was as follows:

To Calcutta, tons	50 0
St. Jago,	23 0
Kingston, Jam.	42 0
Demarara,	147
Total,	1,297

Mr. Vanhi has communicated to the Academy of Sciences at Paris, that he has discovered a process for rendering quicksilver so solid, that medals can be struck from it without any addition of other substances.

The botanist Gaubert, in a recent sitting of the French Academy of Sciences, attributed the remarkable mortality of the trees in the Parisian Boulevards to the nightly illumination with gas, since the trees as well as living creatures need to repose at night.

The Rochester Democrat says, that Mr. Daniel Sinclair, of Caledonia, Livingston county, N. Y., has a sheep in his possession sixteen years of age, which has never failed of shearing sixteen pounds of wool, and raising two lambs annually. The mother of this sheep was butchered in her sixteenth year, and yielded twenty pounds of tried tallow.

The editor of the Cincinnati Atlas estimates the flour in that city at the present time at 28,000 or 29,000 barrels. Of this quantity 22,000 barrels have been sold mostly on Eastern account, and are waiting shipment, leaving about 6600 barrels on sale.

The people of Alabama have decided in favor of biennial sessions of their Legislature by a majority of 50,952.

Copper 100 parts, tin 14 parts, when hardened and tempered after the manner of the ancients, will yield an edge nearly equal to that of steel.

The Ohio House of Representatives have passed resolutions, by a unanimous vote, requesting their Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote against an increase of the present rates of postage.

The Massachusetts Ploughman says, the art of engraving on glass, has considerably advanced of late in Europe, and has become as easy and complete as on copper or steel.

There are 900 different kinds of roses; pinks fifty.

The North British Review, in an article on phrenology, delivers the following judgement:—"We have been compelled, therefore, to regard phrenology as the twin-sister of animal magnetism; and, hanging phreno-mesmerism as a millstone round their necks, we willingly cast them into the sea."

The public printing at Washington is estimated to be of more pecuniary value than the office of President of the United States. From 1834 to 1840, inclusive, the printing amounted to $2,168,661, which at ten per cent., the estimated profit, would give $167,464, or $66,780 annually.

The Chinese make the sheets of their tea chest lead in the following manner:—Two men have caldrons of melted lead constantly ready; one sets beside a smooth flat stone, several feet across, with another flat stone to wield when necessary. The other man pours out a quantity of the melted lead on the stationary stone; when the moveable stone is instantly placed upon it, pressing it out into a thin sheet; they are made very rapidly.

When a young man has acquired a love of reading, and of course a healthful relish for intellectual pleasures, he has become possessed of one of the best preservatives against dissipation.

The wheel of fortune turns more capriciously than the wheel of a lottery. We perceive that a banjo player and negro singer named Neil Jamison has gone to Scotland to receive a legacy of £50,000.

There are eighteen persons now under sentence of death in the United States. All these unfortunates, according to sentence, will be executed before six months have elapsed.

A juror in one of the Philadelphia courts, was taken down by the small pox while hearing evidence.

We learn from the Colonization Journal, that Judge Leigh, the executor of John Randolph, has purchased a large tract of land in Mercer County, Ohio, on which to locate the slaves, some 300, manumitted by that remarkable man. A large quantity of land in Mercer county, comprising three or four townships, is now owned nearly altogether by colored persons.

The Warsaw Signal says: Two Catholic Priests passed through this place on Monday last, on their way to Nauvoo. Their object was to ascertain the particular nature and amount of property which the Mormons wish to dispose of to their Church, and on what terms it can be bought.

The November donations to the American Board of Foreign Missions amounted to $20,003 26. Legacies, 44,805 18. Total of donations and legacies, $64,808 44. Total of do. from August 1st to November 30th, $105,557 03.

☞ John Bromfield has presented to the Boston Athenæum the sum of $25,000, three-fourths of the income of which is to be expended in the purchase of books to replenish the Library of the Institute—the remaining fourth to be added annually to the principal.

We understand that the venerable Rev. Dr. Shepard, of Lenox, Mass. is dead. He had lived to see his three-score years and ten, and during the last year preached the fiftieth anniversary sermon of his settlement in that place. He is the last of the class of venerable divines who for so long a time were an ornament and an honor to old Berkshire.

At Lima, Iowa, a few days since, Dr. Blue, a Methodist preacher, was killed by his horse, which, becoming restive, pushed its owner, who was walking with the bridal over his arm by its side, against the hind wheel of a wagon they were passing.

At Canonsburgh, on Tuesday last, one of the buildings of Jefferson College was blown down, and now lies a mass of ruins, and the apparatus and all the other valuable property which it contained was destroyed. The loss must be very great, as the building was a valuable one. It was erected 16 years ago at a great expense.

A State Temperance Convention will be held in Harrisburgh, Pa., on the 28th inst., to which all the Temperance Associations throughout the State are to send delegates with reports, embracing the names and number of members belonging to the various associations, and other information proper to lay before the Convention.

The receipts at the Anti-Slavery Fair at Faneuil Hall, amounted to three thousand seven hundred dollars, being a thousand dollars more than the receipts on any previous occasion.

The Minister of War in Prussia, has addressed a circular to all generals holding command, stating that the king, in order to promote sobriety, has ordered that every soldier in confinement, in camp, in bivouac, who may be willing to give up his allowance of brandy, shall receive the value in money.

A hen, of the golden peasant breed, belonging to Mr. Richard Barnes, of Treals, which has been brought up a pet ever since it was a chicken, comes regularly into the house, and lays its egg on the lap of a child four years old. If the child is absent, it deposits it on the chair wherein the child is accustomed to sit. After it has laid its egg, it is indulged with a few pieces of oat cake, or wheaten bread.

In Peterboro', Madison county, 29 persons in 22 years have been licensed to sell intoxicating drinks. Five abandoned the business without any gain to themselves, but having occasioned great loss to their industrious neighbors. Twenty were still living, when the account was taken, all drunkards, and poor, and most of them a charge with their families upon the town. Four had died drunkards and poor.

We published a statement of the Commerce of the New York Canals for 1845, as compared with the previous year. The business of 1845 exceeded that of '44 by more than thirteen millions of dollars, and according to the best estimates the aggregate value of the property which has passed over the canals both ways, is equal to the whole amount of Imports and Exports at this Port, and only about $16,000,000 less than the entire Imports of the United States.

A negro named Thomas Thompson, who had been discharged from the State Prison at Charlestown, broke into his old quarters and stole therefrom sixty-four pounds of bristles and a brush, valued at $150. He scaled the outer walls by some means or other, and then broke into the shop where the bristles were kept, unperceived by the keepers or watchmen. He was taken by a watchman of the town in one of the back streets, else he might have escaped with his booty. We have often heard of people breaking out of prison, but never heard of one breaking into a prison before. The feat was worthy of Jack Shepard.

A fire kroke out a little past 12 o'clock on Tuesday night, in the extensive building at the Depot of the Concord Railroad Company, occupied by Messrs. Gilmore & Clapp as a Grocery establishment, and by the Railroad Company as a Car House, which, together with most of their contents were consumed. Loss $70,000.

A fire broke out in the town of Rome, in this State, on Tuesday morning, which laid thirty buildings in ashes, and destroyed a considerable amount of property. The extent of the conflagration was owing to the inefficiency of the Fire Department.

It is rumored that Mr. Gough will shortly change his vocation as Temperance Lecturer to that of the Orthodox Congregational ministry. He intends to spend the remainder of the winter in the South.

"Conscientious Fullness" is the phrase employed by the Morning News to describe the tedious prolixity of the Governor's Message.

The receipts of the last Fair of the American Institute were $12,600 43; Expenses, $8,098 22—leaving a balance of $4,502 21—$4,000 of which is invested in Bank. During the Fair, 135 new members joined the Institute.

Mr. Connor who was so dreadfully injured some four weeks since, on the railroad, as to be obliged to suffer the amputation of both legs above the knees, we saw riding in a sleigh thro' our streets to-day, looking as "hale and hearty" as ever. The accident occurred on the 6th of December. On the 25th, only 19 days subsequent, he attended Christmas services in St. Anne's Church.

DIED,

At Waterford, Ct., on the 4th inst., ELIZABETH GARDNER, consort of Benjamin Gardner, (formerly wife of Ezekiel Tinker, deceased,) in the 79th year of her age. Having patiently waited her appointed time, she died in hope of a glorious immortality beyond the grave. She has left a large circle of relatives and the community in which she lived, to mourn their loss. A funeral discourse was preached on the occasion by Eld. L. T. Rogers, from Psalms 73: 26—"My flesh and my heart faileth, but God is the strength of my heart and my portion forever."

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
IRA SAYLES, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathemat
GURDON EVANS, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. HARTSHORN, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. STILLMAN, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. MAXSON, Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences. The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

Misellaneous.

THE SAILOR'S BRIDE.

She sat in her chamber, her countenance beaming
All radiant with joy, an expectant of bliss;
From her dark flashing eye, true love's light wae gleaming
The sunshine of hope, as it glanced upon his.

The quick beating pulse, love's soft music, was stirring
The heart with its melody, thrilling and rare;
As she leaned on his bosom, no impulse demurring
And heard the fond words, he was free to declare.

To-morrow I leave thee, to traverse old Ocean,
To buffet his billows, and struggle with storm;
The last time, to witness those scenes of commotion,
Apprehensive of which, thou art filled with alarm.

But my heart remains with thee, and my mind will oft dwell
On thy love, far away on the watery waste,
And O how delighted, I scarcely need tell,
Will my heart be, when we again, homeward bound haste.

* * * * * * * * *

He departed in sadness. Deep sorrow came o'er her.
The darkest forebodings be-clouded her mind;
Yet fond hopes of the future, failed not to restore her,
To love's joyous feelings so gentle and kind.

In confidence soothing, hope bloomed forth in beauty
Its fragrance shed perfume and pleasure abroad,
She cheerfully moved in the pathway of duty,
And trustfully leaned on the promise of God.

Time pass'd slowly onward. Days, weeks, months and years
Roll'd by, but no tidings from him far away.
Fond hope, long enduring, at last disappears,
And her joys withered all now fade and decay.

That nobly built vessel, so gallant and bold
With streamers and canvass, broad cast to the wind
Had foundered at sea, though her fate was untold,
For no vestige of vessel or crew, could they find.

How awful their fate, who thus sunk in the wave
From the mid-day of life to the darkness of death,
With only a moment, God's mercy to crave
Ere the deep and dark waters deprive them of breath.

Thus he died whom she loved, but should see never more,
With a last thought of FREELOVE, a widow, alone
Thinking still of her WILLIAM, hoping on as before
Against hope, ere the whole dreadful truth became known,

THE WASHERWOMAN'S FAMILY.

BY REV. DANIEL M'JILTON.

The family consisted of a poor widow, with two children—a son of three years, and a daughter of seventeen years of age. The woman was well advanced in years, and full of infirmities. She was afflicted in her body, but she was using every exertion to support her little family. I asked her, how she supported herself and her children? She told me she took in washing when she could get it, and that with all her exertions she could make them but a most uncomfortable livelihood. She had then a few pieces to wash, and she said that when they were finished and taken home she would get twelve and a half cents for her labor. With this small pittance she intended to buy bread, to serve the immediate and most pressing necessities of her children. The little boy was then crying for bread. The pains of hunger compelled him to cry, and he looked most wishfully around the room, as if he thought the very walls ought to answer to his tears, and grant him that which would satisfy the demands of nature, and relieve him of his sufferings. The little girl appeared to be distressed greatly, but she had more command of herself, and bore her pains with a fortitude which would have been creditable to a more experienced sufferer. The scene was a touching one, and my feelings were brought up to a high state of excitement. I saw nothing comfortable about the room, nor the sign of a single article of food, nor anything that indicated its presence for some time before. Sickened at this sight of suffering, I hastened from the house with a determination to procure something to relieve such great destitution. I hurried to the house of a friend not far distant. There was a baking of bread, just ready to be removed from the oven. I told my story of wretchedness, which I had not finished when a loaf was handed me, neatly wrapped in a towel, and the countenance of the owner told me to fly with it, and save the poor children from further suffering. I flew with the gift, smoking in my hands, and delivered it to the wretched mother. Words were unnecessary. Every movement was well understood. The woman removed the towel from the bread. The little boy with a face all joy was at her side in a moment. The little girl gazed wishfully at the timely provision, and her eyes sparkled with pleasure at the prospect of speedy relief. The mother, with a heart overflowing with gratitude, had a slice for each in less time than it takes me to tell it. I remained until the half-starved children had finished their meal. I looked on them with a heavy heart while they were eating, and thought of the multitudes who were living in wealth, and amid a profusion of the good things of this life, while this needy family were suffering from want—want of the most pressing nature. O that those who have abundance might be induced to consider the poor, and to minister to their necessities! I asked the little girl, if she could read? She answered, Yes. I then asked the mother for a Bible, that I might hear her read it. She said she had no bible. Ah, thought I, poor, wretched creatures, as destitute of the bread of life as of the food that perisheth! Miserable destitution! I went immediately to the Depository of the State Bible Society, and procured a copy of the Scriptures from the agent, and returned with it to the house. I handed it to the little girl, with a desire that she should let me hear how well she could read. She opened it, and read as correctly and as sweetly as I ever heard a child read in my life. "My little child," said I, "where did you learn to read so well?" "In the Sunday School," she replied, "And," said I to the mother, "has she never been to any but the Sunday School?" "Never to any other," was the answer. Surely the Sunday school enterprise is the work of God. It is the work of his own glorious hands, and well is it suited to the wants of these modern times. Let those engaged in this labor of love be encouraged to go on in their holy enterprise. The hand of God is in it, and his blessing will attend the efforts of his faithful servants in its prosecution.

The proficiency of this child, and her better preparation to meet the responsibilities of life, I would hold up as an inducement to Sunday school teachers to persevere in the good cause. Go on, ye servants of the Lord. In the morning sow your seed, and in the evening withhold not your hand; for you know not which shall prosper, this or that, or whether both shall be alike good.

THE HERO OF THE PLAGUE.

When the plague raged violently at Marseilles, every link of affection was broken;—the father turned from the child—the child from the father—cowardice and ingratitude no longer excited indignation. Misery is at its height when it thus destroys every generous feeling—thus dissolves every tie of humanity. The city became a desert—grass grew in the streets—a funeral met you at every step. The physicians assembled in a body at the Hotel de Ville, to hold a consultation on the fearful disease, for which no remedy had yet been discovered. After a long consultation, they decided, unanimously, that the malady had a peculiar and mysterious character, which opening a corpse might develope—an operation which it was impossible to attempt, since the operator must inevitably become a victim in a few hours, beyond the power of human art to save him, as the violence of the attack would preclude their administering the customary remedies.

A dead pause succeeded this fatal declaration. Suddenly a surgeon, named Guyon, in the prime of life, and of great celebrity in his profession, rose, and said firmly--

"Be it so; I devote my life for the service of my country. Before this numerous assembly, I promise, in the name of humanity and religion, that to-morrow, at the break of day, I will dissect a corpse, and write down, as I proceed, what I observe."

He left the assemb-y instantly.—They admire him—lament his fate, and doubt whether he will persist in his design. The intrepid and pious Guyon, animated by all the sublime energy religion or patriotism can inspire, acted up to his word. He had married, and was rich; and he immediately made his will, dictated by justice and piety.

A man had died in his house within twenty-four hours. Guyon, at day-break, shut himself up in the same room. Full of enthusiasm, never had he felt more firm and collected. Kneeling before the corpse, he wrote;—"Mouldering tenement of an immortal soul, not only can I gaze on thee without horror, but even with joy and gratitude. Thou wilt open to me the gates of a glorious eternity. In discovering to me the secret cause of the terrible plague which destroys my native city, thou wilt render my sacrifice useful.—Oh, God! Thou wilt bless the action Thou thyself has inspired."

He began—he finished the dreadful operation—and recorded in detail his surgical observations. He then left the room—threw the paper into a vase of vinegar, and immediately sought the Lazaretto, where he died in twelve hours—a death ten thousand times more glorious than the warrior, who to save his country, rushes on the enemy's ranks—since he advances with hope at least, and sustained, admired and seconded by the whole army.

Physicians, who remain firm in the discharge of their duties, while the fears of their fellow citizens are prompting them to fly from contagion, display that moral courage which is as far superior to the physicial energy which sustains the soldier in battle, as mind is superior to matter.

PROGRESS IN CRIME.

A few years ago, as I was walking through my native village, on an errand in the dusk of the evening, I saw two young men rush from a shop, one pursuing the other. They were brothers. The oldest had a leathern strap in his hand. He caught his brother, and after a severe struggle, in which many blows were given and received, succeeded in throwing him down, and severely whipping him with the strap. I was then a child, and the scene produced an impression upon my mind, which will never pass away. This occurred about fifteen years ago. Since that time, I have neither seen nor heard from these two individuals, till a few days since, I read in a newspaper, that this very person, who then whipt his brother, is sentenced to death for the murder of his wife! The two events I could not but connect in my mind, though fifteen years apart. What a warning to parents to restrain the passions of their children. What a warning to children to avoid contention and check the risings of anger. [Abbott.

"I WANT MY MOTHER."

"Passing the Old Basin, we were attracted by the semi-suppressed sobs of a little girl, to whom bread and butter, or at least an overplus of it, seemed a stranger. Her face was unwashed, her hair uncombed, her dress was dirty, and as she sat by a wood-pile, tears tricked at intervals down her cheeks. Young as she was she seemed to feel—and to feel keenly—that she had been bereft of a mother's care. 'What is the matter?' we asked her. 'I want my mother,' she replied, and in a tone which showed the want was not to be supplied. 'Why do you not go home?' said we. 'I want my mother,' was the answer. 'Here, buy apples,' we said, offering her a small piece. 'I want my mother,' she said, refusing, or at least not stretching out her hand to take it. A neighboring woman saw us talk to the child and she briefly told us the history of her early privation.

Her father lives hardly. His poverty compels him to be from home daily to his labor. Her mother, a woman of the kindest maternal affections, died last week of the scarlet fever. Daily does the little girl sit at that wood-pile, shunning all associations with her former play-mates; and her constant reiteration is—'I want my mother! I want my mother!' We understood that a humane gentleman in the neighborhood is about to have her placed in one of the asylums."

It is as impossible for a person to draw near to God with the confidence of faith, while he lives in the love and practice of sin, as it is for a person to come to you and go from you at the same instant of time.—Ebenezer Erskine.

What madness it is in us to presume on our interest in God's favor for the securing of our sinfulness from judgment! The angels were deeper in it than we mortals can ever to be in these houses of clay, yet long since are ugly devils, and they who enjoyed the liberty of the glorious heaven, are now reserved in everlasting chains of darkness.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

THE BLESSED DEAD.

BY REV. WM. H. BREWSTER.

(Preached to the Sunday School of the W. M. Church, Fountain-street, Providence, R. I.)

Rev. 13th, 14th. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

Life is short—'tis soon gone. Men used to live several hundred years, but now few, very few, live to be 100 years old. How many, children, can you think of that are a hundred years old? More than one half the people die before they are 17. Most people calculate to live much longer than they do, and hence waste a great part of life.

You calculate to live to be old; you think what you shall do when you are men and women; but, dear children, you will not all live to be men and women. Children die! Go into the grave yard; how many are buried here! We walk over them continually. See, here is a little grave! How short and new; 'tis the grave of some precious little child of an afflicted mother. Did you ever notice how many there are? I have frequently to attend the funeral of infants. O, 'tis affecting to see these little, lovely things, as beautiful as dressed dolls, aid pale and cold in the coffin. I will here read some poetry descriptive of such a sight.

"'Twas summer, and a Sabbath eve,
And balmy was the air;
I saw a sight that made me grieve,
And yet the sight was fair,
Within a little coffin lay
Two lifeless babes as sweet as May.

Like waxen dolls which infants dress,
Their little bodies were,
A look of placid happiness,
Did on each face appear.
And in the coffin, short, and wide,
They lay together, side by side.

A rose bud, nearly closed, I found,
Each little hand within,
And many a pink was strewed around,
With sprig of jessamine,
And yet, the flowers that round them lay,
Were not to me, more fair than they.

Their mother, as a lily pale,
Sat by them on the bed,
And bending o'er them, told the tale,
And many a tear she shed,
Yet oft she cried amid her pain,
My babes and I shall meet again."

You see how narrow my hand is. The Bible says, "our days are as an hand's breadth." Did you ever go into a factory, where they weave cloth, and see how swift the shuttle flies? Job says, "my days fly swifter than the weaver's shuttle." What is your life? It is even as a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. Did you ever go out in the morning when a fog or vapor hung over the river, hiding the vessels, and boats, and some of the houses on the banks? A short time the sun rises clear and bright, the vapor is all gone. So you and I shall pass away in a little while.

I am going to tell you of a beautiful young man, who, when a boy, wrote some fine poetry. His name was Henry Kirk White. One day he felt sad to think he was going to die so soon, and wrote: "Fifty years, and who will hear of Henry? Alas, no one! I shall fall as falls a stranger in the streets of London. A little crowd collect, and all's forgotten." He has died, but is not forgotten; he did so many good things, he is remembered. Men dread to die; fear to die. A few years ago, one cold night, a steamboat down in the sound here, with a great many people on it, some good, and some wicked, took fire. The poor people must now burn to death, or jump in the water and drown. There were men there who had been swearing and drinking, but now they must die. Some of them got on to pieces of plank, others on to bales of cotton, and floated round there in the dark waters, and if they could, would rather have staid there a whole year than to die. Now what made these people afraid to die? They suffered more on these planks and cotton bales, than they would to have died at once. Men will have their limbs cut off, and undergo almost any thing, rather than die. Why? Because they are afraid to meet God; because they have sinned before him. Some persons desire to die. They are Christians. They love God and desire to be with him; they love Christ, and desire to see him in glory. Job says, "I would not live always." Paul says, "I desire to depart and be with Christ." The text says, "Blessed (i. e. happy) are the dead which die in the Lord." To die in the Lord is to die Christians. But, you ask, how can the dead be happy? Because that part of you which is happy, don't die.—What is it when you smile and look cheerful that is happy? 'Tis not your face, is it? No, 'tis the mind, which we sometimes call the soul.

2. Such go and see God.—When you see the sun, and moon, and stars, don't you sometimes think you would like to see God who made them. You have heard of Christ, that he came to earth and died for us. O, how much he suffered! he groaned and fainted, prayed, and after lingering out "three dreadful hours in pain," he bowed his head and died. How much he loved us. But this good friend I have never seen, and never shall till I die; but if I die in the Lord I shall be with him.

3. There are angels too, bright sinless beings, they have watched us. When you were sleeping infants, they watched around your cradles though we could not see them.

4. You have heard of good men, Luther, Wesley, Bunyan, Paul, David, and Abraham. These are all in heaven. They have on white robes, and bright crowns on their heads, much brighter than the sun—harps in their hands, with which they praise God, and sing so sweetly, that all the music of earth is nothing to it. There are, too, millions of children, infants there. Your little sister, that died so soon after she began to laugh and play, and look so pretty, is there, and she looks much prettier now than then. These little children look as lovely as little angels, and sing as sweetly. O how pleasent 'twill be to go and see them. The mother that dies in the Lord will there see her little sweet babe, who will say, Mother, you wept when I died, but how could you if you knew I was coming to this blessed place.

'Tis a place of rest. "They rest from their labors." There is no suffering in heaven. None are hungry, or cold, or disappointed, or afflicted. None feel pain, none are sick, none die. There are no graves, no coffins, no funerals—

"No groans to mingle with the songs
Which warble from immortal tongues."

There are no wicked persons there; no unkind words are spoken; nothing to mar the peace of all. "There is no night there."

"No midnight shade, no clouded gloom,
But sacred, high, eternal noon."

GOSPEL LIGHT SHINING IN DARK PLACES.

Upon many a dark heathen land the light of the gospel has begun to dawn. It is not yet the brightness of day; but there are a few streaks of light which show that the morning will soon break. May it go on, shining brighter and brighter, until it shall be said of every part of the earth, "The darkness is past, and the true light now shineth," 1 John ii. 8.

Gospel light has begun to shine on China. A lady, engaged in teaching the little Chinese girls, thus writes from that distant land:—"A slight incident occurred the other day that pleased me much, because so unlike the native character—the Chinese being about the most perfect in deception of any people that ever existed. A Chinese girl, named Beenio, was in my room, examining the little things on the table, and amongst them noticed a letter-folder, of which she inquired the use. I told her, and then gave her a new book to cut open for me. Whilst so doing, I heard the paper, as I thought, tear, and called out to her to stop, as I suspected she was injuring the book; to which she replied, 'Tidak,' which means "No." She put away the book, and I never thought of it more; but next evening, when school was over, she followed me up stairs, and I saw she was not the same bright, merry, laughing child as usual. I looked at her, concerned to know what was the matter; and she said, "When I was cutting the book open yesterday, the leaves were torn before I touched them; but I did tear them more, though I said "No" to you; and I have been so unhappy since I denied it. Last night I could not sleep for thinking of it." Surely, if it be said of the redeemed that "no guile is found in their mouth," this dear child seems likely to be ranked among their number. Nor is this by any means a single instance of her uprightness of character. The Chinese motto is, that the person who knows not how to lie cleverly and boldly, is a weak and silly person. So openly, alas! do they proclaim their parentage, as taught us in John viii. 44."

Gospel light now shines in the South Sea islands. A missionary, in one of the islands, preached from the text, "Let him that stole, steal no more," Eph. iv. 28. The next morning, when he opened his door, he saw a number of the natives sitting on the gronnd before his dwelling. He asked what made them sit there so early. They said, "We have not been able to sleep all night: we were in the house of God yesterday: we thought, when we were pagans, that it was right to steal when we could do it without being found out. Hiro, the god of thieves, used to assist us. But we heard what you said yesterday from the word of God, that the Lord had commanded that we should not steal. We have stolen, and all these things that we have brought with us are stolen goods." Then one of them lifted up an axe, a hatchet, or a chisel, and cried, "I stole this from a carpenter of a ship," naming the vessel: others held up a saw or a knife; and, indeed, almost every kind of property was brought and shown with similar confessions. The Missionary told them to take the stolen goods home, and restore them to the owners when an opportunity should occur. They all said, "Oh no! we cannot take them back; we have had no peace ever since we heard it was displeasing to God, and we shall have no peace so long as they remain in our houses; we wish you to take them, and give them back to the owners whenever they come." The influence of Christian truth, as seen in their conduct, much encouraged the missionaries in their work.

Let us now turn to another part of the world, and trace the gospel light as it has begun to shine in New Zealand. An English carpenter, who was building a new church at one of the stations, engaged a native convert, promising to pay him for his labour. As soon as the native had finished, he went to the carpenter for his wages; but one of the workmen told him to go away, and then struck and kicked him very cruelly while lying on the ground. The native Christian bore it all patiently; but when the other had ceased his cruel conduct, he started on his feet, seized him by the throat, shook him, and taking in his hand a sharp tool, he brandished it over the head of the trembling man. "Now," said the native, "you see your life is in my hand. You owe your life to the preaching of the gospel. My arm is quite strong enough to kill you, and my arm is willing to kill you; but my heart is not, because I have heard the missionaries preach the gospel. If my heart was as dark as it was before I heard them preach, I would strike off your head. You owe your life to the preaching of the gospel."

Now, in these three anecdotes we see how the light of the gospel shines into the hearts of the heathen. By it, the little Chinese girl was led to see the evil of lying; the South Sea islanders were convinced of the sin of theft; and the hands of the New Zealand savage were kept from shedding the blood of one who had injured him. If it had not been for the gospel, they would have lied, stolen, and murdered, and not have known they had done any wrong; they would even have boasted of their deeds. Has this holy gospel shone into your heart, my young reader? Has it made you to see the evil of lying, dishonesty, revenge, and all other sin? Has it made you humble, patient, and kind? Has it caused sorrow for all the iniquity of your life, and led you to seek for mercy through the Lord Jesus Christ? These are serious questions; may they lead to prayer and self-examination.

DEATH OF CHILDREN.—Leighton thus wrote on hearing of the death of a child:—

"Sweet thing, and is he so quickly laid asleep? Happy he! Though we shall have no more the pleasure of his lisping and laughing, he shall have no more the pain of crying, nor of being sick, nor of dying. Tell my dear sister, that she is now so much more akin to the other world; and this will be quickly passed to us all. John is but gone an hour to bed, as children used to do, and we are undressing to follow. And the more we put off the love of the present world, and all things superfluous, beforehand, we shall have the less to do when we lie down."

THE WATERFALL.

The above picture represents a beautiful waterfall. We have visited a number of waterfalls, but are not sure that we ever visited the one here represented, and hence we will not attempt a particular description of it. You may see the mountain streams leaping from the high rocks, and dashing themselves down into the gulf below. And when the children observe the green trees and shrubbery, they will think how cool and delightful it must be around the waterfall in summer.

THE SULKY GIRL.

Mr. Robert Raikes visited the parents and children of his schools at their own houses. He called on a poor woman one day, and found a very refractory girl crying and fretting. Her mother complained that correction was of no avail, obstinacy marked her conduct, and it was very bad. After asking the parent's leave, he began to talk seriously to the girl, and concluded by telling her, that, as the first step towards amendment, she must kneel down and ask her mother's pardon. The girl continued sulky. "Well then," says he, "if you have no regard for yourself, I have much for you. You will be ruined and lost if you do not begin to be a good girl; and if you will not humble yourself, I must humble myself and make a beginning for you." With that he kneeled down on the ground before the child's mother, and put his hands together with all the solemnity of a juvenile offender. "Pray forgive," &c. No sooner did the stubborn girl see him on his knees, on her account, than her pride was overcome at once, and tenderness followed. She burst into tears, and immediately falling on her knees, earnestly entreated forgiveness. Afterwards she never occasioned her mother any trouble. [London Child's Companion.

OPPOSITION TO MISSIONS IN INDIA.

It will soon be ten years since we sailed for India. To us the result of our labors seems very small, and we still witness many discouragements, which nothing but a confident assurance that we are in the path of duty, and that the Lord will fulfil his promises in the conversion of the heathen, could enable us to bear. I may here mention a circumstance which will show you something of the kind and amount of opposition, against which we have to work our way. Having obtained funds to build a church in the city, the next object was to find a suitable site on which to erect it. Only three places were to be found where great publicity and free circulation of air could be secured. The magistrate of the station accompanied me to the town to examine these sites, and to endeavor to persuade the occupants of the shops either to sell out or to give them on ground rent; and an annual sum, much greater than is obtained for the shops which have to be kept in repair at a considerable expense, was offered for the ground alone, but all to no purpose. A few seemed willing at first to oblige us, but their Hindu and Mahomedan friends got around them, and what with misrepresentations as to our object, and working on their prejudices, and threatening, &c, their minds were soon changed, and they absolutely refused, at last, to give us the ground on any terms! So much has Satan these people under his influence. The adversary trembles when he sees efforts made to erect a house for the worship of the true God, in the midst of his own abominable temples. But our prayer is, that He who has Satan in chains, would providentially open up the way which is now closed, and cause His house to be built in spite of all opposition. In the mean time we must continue the practice of preaching at the corners of the streets, and delivering our message to the crowds, whether they will hear or whether they will forbear.—Missionary Advocate.

THE ONE LEAF.—There was once a caravan crossing, I think, to the north of India, and numbering in its company a godly and devout missionary. As it passed along, a poor old man was overcome by the heat and labors of the journey, and, sinking down, was left to perish on the road. The missionary saw him, and, kneeling down at his side, when the rest had passed along, whispered into his ear, "Brother, what is your hope? The dying man raised himself a little to reply, and with a great effort succeeded in answering, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin!" and immediately expired with the effort.

The missionary was greatly astonished at the answer; and, in the calm and peaceful appearance of the man, he felt assured he had died in Christ. "How, or where," he thought, "could this man, seemingly a heathen, have got this hope?" And as he thought of it, he observed a piece of paper grasped tightly in the hand of the corpse, which he succeeded in getting out. What do you think was his surprise and delight, when he found it was a single leaf of the Bible, containing the first chapter of the first Epistle of John, in which these words occur? On that page the man had found the gospel.—Children's Missionary Newspaper.

COLORED MEN IN OFFICE.—The Chief Justice of Dominica is a mulatto; the Attorney-General and the Judge of Appeals in Barbadoes are mulattoes; the Governor of Nevis is a mulatto. Thirty-two editors of newspapers in the British West Indies are negroes and mulattoes; twenty-one magistrates are mulattoes; in the legislative councils and houses of representatives there are seventy-two mulattoes and two negroes making laws for their former masters. Two thirds of the military force are composed of African soldiers, commanded by white officers. The ministry is abundantly supplied with colored men; and the jurymen are almost all negroes or mulattoes.—Facts for the People.

PLAIN LANGUAGE WHICH OUGHT TO BE HEEDED.

Our attention has frequently been called to the studied manner in which certain advocates for a stricter observance of Sunday, speak of the duty of all men to "keep a Sabbath," to "rest one day in seven," to "work six days and rest one," &c. We have thought it might be well for such men to know exactly how their manner of speaking strikes a person who objects to keeping any Sabbath; and we have therefore copied the following paragraphs from a book written by one of this class, which we shall send to several of the men who are most notorious for their use of the form of speech in question. Our author represents the advocates for Sunday as attempting to support its claims by the fourth commandment, and he therefore proposes to bring their arguments to the test of severe logical scrutiny. The following is his language:—

In the first place, let us suppose their arguments to be correct, that the Sabbath is a portion of the universal moral law. The first question that presents itself is, do they observe it? The fact is notorious that they do not. How then do they produce a seeming consistency between their conduct and professions? By a direct perversion of the language of the Scripture. Observe the evasive artifice, the sneaking dexterity, the shuffling perversion of Scripture language with which their argument is put. A Sabbath is a portion of the moral law. Mark the artful and false use of the indefinable article, a Sabbath. Every child knows that in the commandment the definite article is used,—"KEEP THE SABBATH day to sanctify it." "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH of the LORD thy GOD." Deut. 5: 12, 14. The language of Scripture is express and precise, so clear that no mistake can he made, and he that runs may read. It is to mock, delude, and insult our reason and common sense to attempt to make us believe that the command, positive and precise in its nature, which orders us to keep holy THE SABBATH, is fulfilled by keeping holy a Sabbath; that we fulfill a commandment to keep holy expressly THE SEVENTH day, by keeping a seventh day. If I can fulfill the commandment by sanctifying a seventh portion of my time, why do they compel me to keep the Sunday? Why might I not keep a Monday, or a Tuesday, or any day? If the command be left indefinite, why is not the practice? But in their capricious tyranny, they will not let it be either the seventh or a seventh day. They infringe the day of the commandment, and, spurning the command of God, insolently compel me to keep a Sabbath of their institution. They trample upon the very commandment they quote. They boldly break the Sabbath that God instituted; and while they hold this very fourth commandment menaciously in my face, telling me openly that hell and damnation will be the result of my breach of it, these insolent and impious tyrants command me, in direct opposition to the commandment they affect to revere, to keep holy a day that it does not sanctify, while they desecrate, by every species of worldly avocation, the great and sacred day of the Lord's rest, which its solemn and dreadful injunctions hallow. Thus they are guilty of impiety at the very moment they are affecting the highest sanctity, and boldly transgress the law of God, while, by the dark deceitfulness of an hypocrisy by which they hope to deceive heaven as well as earth, they are, with bowed-down heads, pretending to the most submissive and humble obedience. Impious hypocrites! daring perverters of the language of Scripture! I tell you your indefinable article is an alteration of that sacred language which God himself has commanded you neither to add to, nor to diminish from. The commandment ordains the seventh, not a seventh—the Sabbath, not a Sabbath—to be kept holy. If, therefore, the commandment be of force and obligation now, you are yourselves the most daring and impious of Sabbath-breakers.

2ndly. It is by the bold impiety of a similar artifice and similar falsification of the language of Scripture, that in order to produce a seeming harmony and concord between their practice and the commandment, they dare to call the Sunday the Sabbath day. This is a devout trick—a pious fraud. It is an imposture to call Sunday the Sabbath day. It is to falsify the Scripture, history, truth, to give it this denomination. It is to insult God and to mock men—to trifle with the awful language of God himself. It is to dare the lightnings and to defy the thunders of SINAI to affirm that Sunday is the Sabbath day of the fourth commandment, the great day of the Lord's Sabbath and repose after the labors of creation.

AN AFRICAN TRIBE.—And is it necessary for us to make an ideal journey to Africa to learn practical Christianity? So it appears. Well, then, let us go. Here we are, in the midst of burning plains and savage hords. Now look at yon band of sable Christians. 'This little Christian band,' says Moffat, 'had met on a Sabbath morning, with the people in the centre of the village, to hold the early prayer meeting before the services of the day. They were scarcely seated, when a party of marauders approached from the interior, whither they had gone for plunder, and not having succeeded to their wishes, had determined to attack this Corrana village on their return. Mosheu arose, and begged the people to sit still, and trust in Jehovah, while he went to meet the marauders. To his inquiry what they wanted, the appalling reply was, 'Your cattle; and it is at your peril you raise a weapon to resist.' 'There are my cattle,' replied the chief, and resumed his position at the prayer meeting. A hymn was sung, a chapter read, and then all kneeled in prayer to God, who only could save them in their distresses. The sight was too sacred and solemn to be gazed on by such a band of ruffians; they all withdrew from the spot without touching a single article belonging to the people.'

What a reproof to British Christians! In seasons of danger, we cry, 'To arms!—to arms!' The Africans, 'To prayer!—to prayer!' Which cry savors most of Christianity? Which is the most consistent with our professions of righteousness? Which is the most acceptable to the God of peace? Brethren, brethren, let us rely on prayer. It is stronger and safer than an army; and, moreover, it is the most in accordance with our profession of faith in the living God.

THE INTERIOR OF AFRICA.

This is yet almost a terra incognita. We know Europe pretty thoroughly. Asia has been traveled in all its length by civilized travelers. With the geography of America we may call ourselves familiar. But how little do we know of the vast continent which lies almost wholly within the tropics, and of which the greater part seems shut up as effectually against the advance of civilization as if it were upon another planet! Indeed, the 'mountains of the moon' would be subjected to more accurate observation were they situate upon the satellite from which they derive their name. The efforts of civilized travelers have been for centuries directed to the recesses of this continent, yet four-fifths of it is blank upon our maps. Its whole centre is one broad unexplored region, and the information obtained by recent travelers is of the most aggravating kind, showing us mines of wealth which it is impossible to work.

Before giving the results of these discoveries, let us look upon Africa as the world has known it, and as it may be familiar to most of our readers. Egypt, an old and worn out country, in its antiquities one of the most interesting places on the continent, occupies a small portion of its north-western border. The river Nile has been explored to its sources by Bruce and other travelers, who have given us some curious facts. The Barbary States occupy the northern portion bordering on the Mediterranean. South of this, and stretching from the Nile to the Atlantic, is the great desert of Zahara. Along the whole western coast are small establishments or factories for trade in slaves, gold dust, ivory, palm oil, and other vegetable productions. This trade has been nearly monopolized by the English until lately, but now American enterprise has taken a large portion of it out of their hands. On this coast are the settlements of Sierra Leone and Liberia, established as colonies for emancipated slaves; but both, we have reason to belive, are in a wretched condition. The English possessions are at the Cape of Good Hope. On the eastern shore there are a number of independent sovereignties, which carry on a limited trade. The Imaum of Muscat is a prince of considerable liberality and enterprise. Quite recently, the English have made a settlement at Aden, near the mouth of the Red Sea. Having once obtained a foot-hold, they, English like, began to push about them, and one of their first discoveries was a river, where none was marked upon any chart, and upon this they steamed three hundred miles without finding the least obstruction.

Having, now passed around this continent, let us look into the interior. For half a century the English government has been expending lives and treasure in partial exploration. They have found that this whole tract of country is one of amazing fertility and beauty, abounding in gold, and all sorts of tropical vegetation. There are hundreds of woods, invaluable for dyeing and architectural purposes, not found in other portions of the world. Through it for thousands of miles sweeps a river, from three to six miles broad, with clear water, and of unsurpassed depth, flowing on at the rate of two or three miles an hour, without rock, shoal, or snag, to interrupt its navigation. Other rivers pour into this, tributary waters of such volume as must have required hundreds of miles to be collected, yet they seem scarcely to enlarge it.—This river pours its waters into the Atlantic, through the most magnificent delta in the world, consisting perhaps of a hundred mouths, extending probably five hundred miles along the coast, and mostly broad, deep, and navigable for steamboats. Upon this river are scattered cities, some of which are estimated to contain a million of inhabitants, and the whole country teems with a dense population. Far in the interior, in the very heart of this continent, is a nation in an advanced state of civilization. The grandeur and beauty of portions of the country thro' which the Niger makes its sweeping circuit, are indescribable. In many places its banks rise boldly a thousand feet, covered with the richest vegetation of tropical climes.

But all this vast and sublime country, this scene of rich fertility and romantic beauty, is apparently shut out forever from the rest of the world. It is the negro's sole possession. He need not fear the incursions of the white man there, for over this whole lovely country broods one dreadful malaria, and to the white man it is the "valley of the shadow of death." In expedition after expedition sent out from the English ports on the island of Ascension, not one white man in ten has returned alive; all have fallen victims to this seemingly beautiful, but awful climate. It seems impossible for any Englishman to breathe that air. So dreadful is it, so small the chance of life, that criminals in England have been offered pardon, on condition of volunteering in this service, more terrible than that of gathering the poison from the fabled Upas. This country, tempting as it is, can only be penetrated at the risk of life; and it is melancholy to think, that those who have given us even the meagre information that we have, did so at the sacrifice of their lives. CONVERTED HEATHEN.—The London Missionary Society has received $5,000 from its stations in Southern India, as a contribution to the Jubilee fund. One fourth of this sum was given by a single native church.

THE LONELY MOTHER.

BY FRANCES BROWN.

My home is not what it hath been,
When the leaves of other years were green,
Though its hearth is bright and its chambers fair,
And the summer beams fall brightly there;
But they fall no more on the clear young eye,
And the lip of pleasant song,
And the gleamy night that was wont to lie
On the curls so dark and long.

O! pleasant is the voice of youth,
For it tells of the heart's confiding truth,
And keeps that free and fearless tone
That ne'er to our after years is known:
I hear it rise in each hamlet cot,
O'er evening prayer and page,
But wo for the hearth that heareth naught
But the dreary tones of age.

The glow is gone from our winter blaze,
And the light hath passed from our summer days;
And our dwelling hath no household now,
But the sad of heart and the gray of brow:
For its young lies low 'neath the church yard tree,
Where the grass grows green and wild;
And thy mother's heart is sad for thee,
My lost, mine only child.

But a wakening music seems to flow
On me from the years of long ago,
As thy babe's first words come sweet and clear,
Like a voice from thy childhood to mine ear;
And her smile beams back on my soul again
Thy beauty's early morn,
Ere thine eyes grew dim with tears or pain,
Or thy lovely locks were shorn.

Alas! for the widowed eyes that trace
There early lost in that orphan face.
What after light will his memory mark,
Like the dove, that in spring-time sought her ark?
For long in that far and better land
Were her spirit's treasures land
And she might not stay from its golden strand
For the love of hearts that fade.

But wo for her on whose path may shine
The light of no mother's love but mine,
O! well if that lonely path lead on
To the land where her mother's steps have gone—
The land where the aged find their youth,
And the young no whitening hair:
O! safe, my child, from both time and death,
Let us hope to meet thee there.

From the London Friend.

ELIZABETH FRY.

At a meeting specially summoned in consequence of the removal by death of Mrs. Fry, the following minute was adopted:

White Hart-court, Lombard-street, Nov. 3, 1845.

The Committee meet this day under circumstances of deeper solemnity and more oppressive interest than they have ever before known. They acknowledge the sovereignty of the Lord, in having removed from them their beloved Friend, who was instrumentally the source of this Society's existence, the main spring of its progressive operations, and to have been associated with whom they deem one of the pleasures and privileges of their lives.

There are present those, whose memories will bear mournful testimony to the past, in regard to their lamented Friend, and who desire to glorify God in her who they believe has entered upon her eternal rest and inheritance. They will long delight to dwell in recollection, upon the mild dignity of deportment with which she was wont to go in and out amongst them, the gentle affability of manner which won the regard of all around her, and the deep feelings of her heart, often breathed forth in the language of prayer, or in devout addresses to her Friends, before entering upon the business of their meetings.

The committee would acknowledge how much has been vouchsafed to them through this servant of the Lord, by means of the wisdom of her arrangements, and the power with which she was often enabled to execute them, the calm decisions of her judgment, and the unswerving continuance with which she sought as far as possible to promote the object in view; and above all by her frequent and fervent prayers for the aid of the Holy Spirit in carrying forward their undertakings. She reflected the character of Him who was "meek and lowly of heart," never desiring to maintain that pre-eminence which would have been yielded her, but seeking rather to mingle as one amongst the number of her fellow laborers, far less gifted than herself. The mild but powerful influence of her whole demeanor amongst them will not easily be forgotten; indeed, a moral atmosphere seemed to be infused by her presence, the effect of which must have been experienced in order to be understood; an atmosphere in which it was scarcely possible for discord or any unholy passion to manifest itself, but which fostered every thing that breathed benevolence, and harmony, and love.

She delighted in that "unity of the Spirit and bond of peace," which so much knit together the little band of the Society's Committee, and rejoiced to recognize the broad and independent basis of Christian truth and affection upon which that union was founded. When the infirmities of sickness long prevented her from personally joining them, tender were the messages of affection she sent them. Her last communication addressed to the Committee is as follows:—

"MY MUCH LOVED FRIENDS.—Amidst my many sorrows that have been permitted for me to pass through, and bodily sufferings, I still feel a deep and lively interest in the cause of poor prisoners, and earnest is my prayer that the God of all Grace may be very near to help you to be steadfast in the important Christian work of seeking to win the poor wanderers to return, repent, and live; that they may know Christ to be their Savior, Redeemer, and hope of Glory! May the Holy Spirit of God direct your steps, strengthen your hearts, and enable you and me to glorify our Holy Head in doing and suffering even unto the end, and when the end comes, through a Savior's love and merits, may we be received into glory and everlasting rest and peace.

In Christian love and fellowship,
I am, affectionately your Friend,
ELIZABETH FRY.

I hope to be remembered in your prayers."

It was the privilege of some members of the Committee frequently to be with her in her visits to the inmates of Newgate and other prisons, and they know, in conjunction with many others, how exquisitely she could touch cords of sympathy, which vibrated through the hearts, not only of her more favored hearers, but in many cases, through those of the sunken and sorrowful ones around her.

There was vouchsafed to her a skill peculiarly her own, in applying the remedy contained in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, to those whose sinful and degraded state lay so near her heart; she felt that Christianity, and Christianity alone could eradicate the deep and appaling evils before her; hence she was continually seeking to press home its vital truths contained in the Holy Scriptures; and many a neglected wanderer, unused to kindness, and who had long been under the fierce tyranny of her own unsubdued passions, was soothed and softened by the accents which fell from her lips, nor was she without encouraging proof, that the Holy Spirit had effectually sealed the truth to the conversion of souls. While engaged in these high objects and extensive labors, she was not prevented by them from entering into the minutest details of prison discipline: it was a remarkable feature of her character, that she abounded in those little acts of kindness and attention which are truly grateful to the recipients of them, and was prompt to relieve the most trivial wants which her poor suppliants made known to her.

At the anniversaries of our Society, a large number of friends had from year to year the opportunity of meeting her, and she was always anxious to make these opportunities the medium of extending good. On such occasions, she usually related many facts which her widely spread sources of information enabled her to gather, and with remarkable simplicity the results of her practical efforts and personal experience, and came forth with a spirit burdened as it were with the desire of advancing the best interests of persons in various grades of society, and especially those of her own sex. Mistresses of families will remember how constantly she urged upon them the domestic duty of caring for the welfare, the religious welfare, of their servants; visitors of prisons, how touchingly she pleaded the cause of neglected criminals, and recognized the claims of those who are laid under the straits of poverty and disease in workhouses and hospitals; and instructors of the young may be encouraged by recollecting that neither children nor even infants were overlooked in the circle of her benevolence.

The last of these anniversaries was held on the 3d of June, 1845. The shadow of the event which has removed her from earth to heaven, seems to have fallen upon it, and to have left it sacred in the recollections of many who had long loved, and who had in some degree, labored with her.

Contrary to the usual custom, the place of meeting fixed on was not in London but at Plaistow, in Essex; and the large number of Friends who gathered around her upon that occasion, proved how gladly they came to her, when she could no longer with ease be conveyed to them. The enfeebled state of her bodily frame seemed to have left the powers of her mind unshackled, and she took, though in a sitting posture, almost her usual part in repeatedly addressing the meeting, and urged with increased pathos and affection, the objects of philanthropy and Christian benevolence, with which her life had been identified. After the meeting, at her own desire, several members of the Committee and other Friends assembled at her house. They were welcomed by her with the greatest benignity and kindness, and in her intercourse with them, strong were the indications of the heavenly teaching through which her subdued and sanctified spirit had been called to pass. Her affectionate salutation in parting, unconsciously closed, in regard to most of them, the intercourse which they had delighted to hold with her, but which can no more be renewed on this side the eternal world.

The Committee are reminded, while contemplating the grave of their late revered Friend, that "All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof, is as the flower of the field;" but they "sorrow not even as others which have no hope," knowing that "what is sown in corruption is raised in incorruption, what is sown in weakness is raised in power."—"The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever."—They would with renewed vigor, and in the short time that may yet be granted them, seek to carry forward those objects in which their beloved Friend so diligently labored, remembering the words often upon her lips—"We must work while it is day."—"Be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord;" and encouraged by the thought, that all created excellence is but as a beam from that divine source of light and love, which shines with unabated splendor, from Him who declares, "I am the Lord, which exercise loving kindness, judgment, and righteousness in the earth, for in these things I delight saith the Lord." Therefore, "He that glorieth let him glory in the Lord."

In a volume lately published by Bernard Barton, entitled Household Verses, are some lines addressed to the honored and lamented subject of the above minute. We give them below.

TO E. F.

On her Reappearance among her Friends at the Yearly Meeting, 1845.

Once more thy well-known voice lift up,
A Savior's goodness to proclaim;
Take in thy hand salvation's cup,
Call on thy God, and bless His name!

It harmonizes with the past
Of a devoted life, like thine,
That thus serenely to the last
Thy setting sun should brightly shine.

Long since first shone its morning rays,
Its noon-tide splendor may be spent;
Can coming night avert our gaze,
While stars are in the firmament!

Faith, hope, and love, as stars come forth,
Making a more than noon of night!
And bear this witness to thy worth,
'Tis eventide, and round thee—light!

From the Advocate of Moral Reform.

CHARACTER AND REPUTATION.

What is Character? and what is Reputation? and what are the relations between them? The term character is sometimes used to designate real intrinsic excellence, and especially moral worth. In this sense of the term, an individual destitute of these qualities, is said to have no character. It is in this sense, that I shall employ the term in this communication. Real intrinsic excellence then, and especially moral worth, moving in the varied relations and circumstances of life, in the line of duty, is what I now mean by character. Reputation, on the other hand, is "character by report." It expresses the light in which an individual stands in the estimation of the public. Reputation may sometimes be as character, and sometimes exactly the reverse. Without character, an individual may be in high repute with the public, and with it in its highest perfection, he may be with that same public, as the "offscouring of all things." Character creates a sacred right to an unsullied reputation, a boon always rendered to the truly virtuous in every community where virtue is practiced, and consequently respected. But in communities where virtue is not practiced, and as a consequence many of its divinest forms disesteemed, and their advocacy, but specially the condemnation of opposite vices reprobated, the cost of possessing character, in other words, of being truly virtuous, is the making of ourselves of no reputation. All men are required to deserve reputation, that is, to possess character. But in a world of unrighteousness, no man is required to possess reputation, or to be well spoken of. Even in a world of unrighteousness, any one may possess character in its divinest forms. In such a world, however, reputation is not in the power of any. All the powers of the universe cannot, in the least degree, sully character, without the consent of the subject. Despite of all our efforts to the contrary, reputation may vary like the colors of the chamelion, and become the foot-ball of an unrighteous public sentiment. Character cannot be sullied without an infinite loss. The individual, who, for the sake of character, "makes himself of no reputation," in other words, who sacrifices reputation at the shrine of duty, makes the nearest approach to the example of the Son of God, and becomes possessor of the treasures of the universe. The individual who forfeits character, that is, departs from the line of rectitude, to preserve his reputation, will, in the end, lose what he aims to preserve, and at last be covered with "everlasting shame and contempt." Character is power, the most efficient and resistless in the universe. God values it, and Satan fears it above all things. It is the leaven of earth, the moral capital which God has reserved for its renovation. Reputation with character as its basis, is a good to its subject, and a means of good to the world. Without character as its basis, it is a valueless, powerless thing, a bubble floating upon the tide of time, empty, insubstantial, and of momentary duration. With character without reputation, the church once "subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, put to flight the armies of the aliens," and turned the world upside down. With reputation without character, she lost her hold upon the heart and consciences of mankind, and became herself "the mother of harlots."

With God, reputation is as character. Just as character lies out under his omniscient eye, such is reputation with angels within the circle of eternity. There all is weighed in an even balance. Such too is the changeless destiny of the immortal subject of character, or of the want of it. What God requires of his creatures as a condition of employing them for the accomplishment of his own plans of infinite wisdom and love, is, not reputation but character. For every individual who has character, whatever his reputation may be, God has an important post of influence and usefulness in his kingdom. Real usefulness ceases with no one but with the loss of character. While his people possess character, though in respect to reputation they may be among the "foolish, the weak and the despised things of earth," God can yet use them to "confound the wise and the mighty." Yet though in this respect they be among the "things that are not," still God can use them to bring to "nought things that are."—But what can he do with them, with reputation, without character? "Reprobate silver" shall they ere long be called, "for the Lord hath rejected them." God asks of his children no reputation but what character secures them. With the truly virtuous, reputation is the shadow which character reflects upon the surface of a perpetually fluctuating public opinion, and its power and dimensions, while the substance remains will be ever such as renders the subject most pleasing and acceptable to God, and most capable of being employed in his service.

Such, as I understand the subject, are reputation and character. My object in the above observations is to prepare the way for a few suggestions, which, to my mind, are of permanent importance at the present time.

The first that I notice is this, the changeless condition of possessing and perpetuating character in such a world as we now live in; character such as God approves. It is a full and distinct consent to "make ourselves of no reputation." In a world of unrighteousness where many of the divinest forms of virtue, forms which we must put on, or totally sully character, are disesteemed, and where many the worst features of vice are in repute, every one who would move in the line of duty, in other words, possess character, must be content "to be as his Lord, without reputation." This should most distinctly enter into the reckoning of every one who would lay the foundation and raise the superstructure of character which shall stand the test of eternity. Yet, as it appears to me, this is the very point where most individuals fail in counting the cost of virtue.

How foolish, not to say morally wrong, in the light of the principles above elucidated, does the alarm and vexation which many manifest when their reputation is assailed before the public, appear. In becoming Christians we cease to "seek the honor of man." With us it becomes a "very small thing to be judged of man's judgment." Suppose we never gain reputation. Shall we grieve at not attaining that which we have ceased to seek? Suppose that, having attained this good by the possession and revelation of character, having become entitled to it by right, we are, in consequence of "all manner of evil being said against us falsely," defrauded of the blessing which has become ours, by possession and right both. Shall we now become despondent and disconsolate? Shall we conclude that our usefulness is at an end, and that God can no longer use us for His kingdom and glory? Does He esteem and love us less for having "suffered the loss of all things" for His sake? Is our reward less great in heaven? The loss of reputation to one who has character, is like clouds veiling the sun. The clouds remain not upon the face of the sky forever, but the sun abideth forever, and when he re-appears the glory of his countenance will not be less resplendent in consequence of the temporary obscuration. So it is with character. Let this be our earnest concern, to preserve that unsullied. Character with God is capital. Wherever it exists, He will not suffer it to lie unemployed. Calumny may veil it for a time; but God at length will remove the covering, and we shall then find that the service rendered during the period of obscuration is not the least important or acceptable to Him to whom our account is to be rendered.

Another remark, which I deem it important to make, is this: The severest test to which character is ever subject, is when an unrighteous assault is made upon reputation. Many seem to think, that under such circumstances, they are allowed to indulge resentment and ill will towards the wrong doers, forgetting that thus we cease to possess the right to that of which we have been deprived, an unsullied reputation. Thrice happy the individual whose character when subjected to such an ordeal shall be "found unto praise, and honor, and glory!" Let us remember that if, when reviled, we cease to bless, or when defamed, we cease to entreat, we have suffered an injury far greater than the loss of reputation. Character has received a blight. . . . . —

Let us never permit the bold, the calm and placid serenity which conscious innocence and integrity throws upon the countenance, to depart from us, till our own consciences affirm that we ought to be put to shame; and let us remember that then we cannot hang our heads too low. For myself, whatever report may affirm and whoever may report it, I shall never hang my head before the public, as if I were guilty, till my own conscience accuses me of guilt. To do otherwise is one of the worst forms of hypocrisy we can put on. Let us verify in our example the truth of the declaration—"the righteous are as bold as a lion."

It may be our duty to defend our reputation from time to time against calumny, just as it may to defend our property against fraud.—Both, however, should be defended in the same spirit, and both should be parted with when they cannot be retained with the same peaceful serenity.

In conclusion, I would simply add, that in this view of it, the subject appears in a very different light from that presented in the oft quoted passage from the bard of Avon:

"Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something—nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he who filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed."

The individual who has character has infinite treasures—treasures perpetually increased by whatever take you from the possessor. Much more to the purpose is the saying of a heathen poet:

"Virtus, repulsæ nescia sordidæ;
Intaminatis fulget honoribus;
Nec sumit, aut ponit secures
Arbitrio popularis aurœ.
Virtus, recludens immeritis mori
Cœlum, negatentat iter via,— Cœtusque vulgares, et udam
Spernit humum fugiente penna."

The meaning of the above passage may be thus expressed: Virtue, regardless of foul repulse, shines with unsullied honors. It neither takes nor lays down the symbols of power at the will of the popular breath. Virtue, opening heaven to them who deserve not to die, attempts the journey by a forbidden way, and with soaring wing spurns the grovelling world and the cold earth.

If the sun is going down, look up to the stars; if the earth is dark, keep your eyes on heaven! With God's presence and God's promises, a man or a child may be cheerful.

LAW AND GOSPEL.

NUMBER NINE.

It is sometimes argued from the inspired preface to the Decalogue—"I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt. and out of the house of bondage"—that it was intended for none but national Israel. But this argument overlooks the distinction between the original ground of the duties enjoined, and the special occasion of promulgating them. In this way the fourth commandment is stripped of all its authority, and the foundation laid for denominating it a "Jewish" institution. Yet it must be obvious, even to a child, that a special reason for the performance of a duty may be added, which shall be very different from the one on which that duty is originally predicated. For example, a son may, through the kind interposition of his father, be delivered from a cruel bondage, in which he had been held for a long time. The father may have paid a large sum for his ransom, and even risked his own life to rescue him, [illegible] This kindness of the father becomes a special reason, why the son should ever afterwards honor him. But is it the original ground of the duty? Would it not be the son's duty to honor the father, though no such special kindness had ever been shown him? Was it not his duty to do so, before he was brought into bondage? Unquestionably it was; and though in all their subsequent intercourse the father may make this special kindness, which he has shown his child, the ground of appeal, whenever he may wish to excite him to duty, yet it would be absurd to suppose that the father has no prior claim.

No less is the absurdity, when redemption from Egypt is made to be the original ground of the duties enjoined by the Decalogue. The absurdity is as great in regard to the fourth commandment as any of the others; and, if any thing, a little greater, because it exists in face of God's plain and explicit declaration of the original ground of the institution. As to the other commandments, he has not said what is the ground of them, but has left it to our reason to determine, contented with simply announcing them. But of the fourth, he speaks plainly and emphatically.

That redemption from Egypt was a special reason, why the Israelites should observe all the commandments of the Decalogue, and a very strong one too, is abundantly evident. But it is by no means the original reason. The original ground of all those duties we have shown to be the natural relation, which men sustain to God as his creatures, and to one another as fellow creatures.

That redemption from Egypt was also a special reason for the observance of the fourth commandment in particular, is also clear. (See Deut. 5: 15.) We have no wish to deny it. But it is passing strange, that this special reason is the only one that our opponents can look at. We frankly admit, that this special reason has no bearing upon the mass of mankind; and if there were no prior reason for the observance of the Sabbath, it would at once be given up as a Jewish institution. But, as we have already seen, the original ground of the institution is the work of creation.

Our conclusion is, that the inspired preface to the Decalogue furnishes no argument for the belief that that code was intended for none but national Israel. *

LOW ESTIMATE OF THE MINISTERIAL OFFICE.

Many ministers of the Gospel have so little reverence for their office, and place their standard of excellence in it so low, that it serves to lower rather than exalt their whole character. They seldom inquire what kind of mental discipline they need—what subjects they ought to investigate—what books they may profitably read—in what places and in what manner they ought to preach—or what portion of their time should be devoted to social and religious interviews with their people. Their estimation of the ministerial work is not high enough to prompt them to ask such questions, and then perform the labor which may be necessary to carry out their decisions. Hence they jog on through a certain round of religious exercises, without plan, without feeling, and without satisfaction to themselves or profit to others. Now it ought to be distinctly understood, that no minister of the gospel can live in the healthful discharge of his ministerial duties, who does not possess that respect for his calling, which will make its labors appear to him always important, and will lead him at times to put forth the highest effort of his best powers. "The moment we permit ourselves," says an eminent English divine, "to think lightly of the christian ministry, our right arm is withered; nothing but imbecility and relaxation remain; for no man ever excelled in a profession to which he did not feel an attachment bordering on enthusiasm; though what in other professions is enthusiasm, is in ours the dictate of sobriety and truth."

A Good Example.—The New York Observer contains the following story of a widow lady. She has been a widow ten years. Her husband left her two thousand dollars, and the use of the farm during her life; and from these sources, notwithstanding that the $2,000 had been almost swallowed up in the failures of the banks and the bankruptcies of individuals with whom it was deposited, she had contrived to pay to Foreign Missions $450, Home Missions $550, to the Education Society $600, to the Bible Society $200, Tract Society $100, Colonization Society $110, and Seaman's Society $120.

Father Harvey.—The New York Baptist Register says, that Father Harvey, who is now in the 111th year of his age, and is probably the oldest minister of the Gospel living, recently preached in the Broad Street Baptist Chapel in Utica. He spoke from a passage in Ecclesiastes, "For God will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." His text was given from memory, as his eye-sight was too much decayed to admit of his reading it.

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

The Seventh-day Baptist Central Association held its second semi-annual session with the Church in Verona, on the 6th and 7th instants. There was a good delegation present, from most of the churches.

After a discourse by Eld. G. M. Langworthy, two reports of missionary labor performed in Richland and vicinity were presented. These reports showed, that the labors performed in that vicinity had been attended with good. One more person had embraced the Sabbath, and the little Church in that place stood firm, with a prospect of additions.

The subject of obtaining an amendment of the law passed in 1839 for the protection of the Seventh-day Baptists, was discussed at considerable length by several individuals present. A deep interest was manifested, not only for the protection on the Sabbath which the law contemplated, but also for the interests of the Sabbath cause in the action that might be had on the subject. It was thereupon resolved, that a delegate be sent to Albany this winter to attend to the matter; and fifty dollars was voted to defray the expense, most of which was pledged at the time. In view of this action, it becomes important that the Petitions for the amendment of the law should be numerously signed, and forwarded immediately to Albany. Let them be sent, post-paid, to some member from the county where the petitioners reside, with the request that they be immediately presented, and early action secured. This course will shorten the stay of the delegate in Albany, and very much promote the passage of the law.

The following resolution was discussed by several brethren, and adopted:—

Resolved, That we recommend our churches to aid, according to their ability, in sustaining the Foreign Mission about to be established by our denomination.

The Association also made appointment of four Missionaries, to as many different stations, for the next six months.

Two manuscript Tracts—one on Communion, the other on Baptism—were read and ordered published in tract form. They will be ready at the meeting of the Association in June next at Scott.

The session was perfectly harmonious, and tended to strengthen the cause for which it was held. The missionary spirit is receiving new strength. And the brethren present, and the churches, seem now resolutely set to act well their part as guardians of the truth.

OBITUARY.

"The memory of the just is blessed."

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Some time since, there appeared in the Recorder a notice, from the Schenectady Reflector, of the death of Mr. ABEL WARD, of Schenectady, in which mention is made of his moral worth, warm and generous disposition, and his valuable services as a citizen. But this is not enough to say of this most excellent man. If, as a citizen, he was respected for his habits of industry—his moral and social virtues—he was still more worthy of the affections of his friends, on account of his unwavering and steadfast integrity to his Lord and Master.

Brother W. was among the first fruits of my ministry in Schenectady. He was born in the vicinity of that city, (I think,) in 1798. In 1819, his mind was awakened to the interests of his soul, and he soon gave satisfactory evidence of genuine conversion to God. Against many embarrassing circumstances, he embraced the Sabbath of the Bible. He was baptized in the Mohawk river at the city of Schenectady, and became a member of the Branch of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I., which at that time was formed in Schenetady. In 1823, he removed with his family to Homer, Cortland Co., N. Y., where he was associated with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Scott. He resided here a few years, and then returned to Schenectady, where he afterwards resided during his life. When the Seventh-day Baptist Church was organized in that city, he was one of the number; and when the members of that small church removed to other parts, so that there was not a sufficient number left to sustain the public worship of God on the Sabbath, he still remained firm in his regard and observance of that day, till death released him to join the church triumphant, where the Sabbath will never end. His pious attention to the duties of his profession as a Christian, gained for him the esteem of his fellow Christians. It was truly said of him in the Reflector, that he was endeared to a large number of friends, who deeply feel and lament his death.

In his last sickness, he was remarkably supported and comforted by the religion of Jesus, which had guided him through his earthly pilgrimage. He has left to his afflicted widow, and only surviving child, (Mrs. W. C. Kenyon, of Alfred Academy,) every desirable evidence of his happy departure to a better and happier world.

Romanism and the Church of England.—The recent instances of conversion from the English to the Roman Church, have, it seems, excited a hope among the Romanists, that England may yet come under allegiance to the Pope. As an evidence of this, note the fact that Dr. Wiseman, a Catholic Bishop, has written a letter to all the prelates of France, demanding their prayers for the re-conversion of Great Britain to the Catholic faith. The Universe publishes this letter, and adds: "We learn, with the liveliest satisfaction, that the several Bishops have already expressed to Mr. Wiseman the warm interest they took in his proceedings, and are preparing to comply with his wishes. The Bishop of Nantz published on the subject a pastoral letter, which was read from the pulpit at high mass, on Sunday. The venerable prelate directs that a novena be performed throughout his diocese, and that prayer be offered to Heaven for the conversion of England."

Trouble yet among the Baptists.—The organization of the American Baptist Union, it was thought, would put an end to the trouble among Baptists about receiving slaveholding contributions and appointing slaveholding missionaries. But it has not done it. There is now quite a strong party opposed to the Union, and unwilling to cooperate with it. We read expressions of dissatisfaction from many correspondents of Baptist papers in different parts of the country; and a paper has been started in Boston, called "The Free Missionary," which is, we believe, avowedly hostile to the principles upon which the Union is based. From these facts it is evident, that real union of feeling is a good way off yet. We apprehend it will continue to be, while the system of slavery, which makes the desturbance, is permitted to exist.

Elijah the Prophet.—One Samuel S. Snow, who figured somewhat largely in connection with the Millerite movement of 1843, has recently announced himself as the veritable Elijah the Prophet, and is now laboring to establish his claims in the city of New York. He is said to have 80 or 100 followers, some of whom profess to have seen a dove, white as snow, descend and light upon him, while they were assembled in a private room for religious worship. They have gone so far as to publish the first number of a paper to advocate their views, and it would not be strange if they should succeed in creating another stir among a certain class concerning the time of the Lord's second appearance.

Piety in the "People's House."—If the Washington letter-writers are to be believed, there is a great deal more religiousness at the capitol this winter than usual. One of them says, "Mrs. Polk sets down her foot against all dancing in the people's house. As Mrs. Polk is connected with the Presbyterian Church, so Mrs. Walker, the wife of the Secretary, is connected with the Methodist, and loves the ways of Zion."

Religious Revolution.—From a recent letter of Dr. D'Aubigne, of Geneva, published in the Presbyterian, it appears that a very large secession from the National Church has just taken place in the Swiss Canton de Vaude. The arbitrary measures adopted by the civil government in reference to the Church, have at length driven the Evangelical clergy to make a bold and formal declaration of independence. Dr. D'Aubigne says:

"The news is of great moment; one hundred and fifty parsons of the Canton of Vaud have given in their demission. Students, matured men, and aged men, are all of one mind. The majority of the others will follow beyond doubt. We have resolved upon a public meeting of prayer to-night; and our General Committee has appointed a commission for corresponding with our Vaudois brethren. I have also advised that the Vaudois ministers should write to Dr. Chalmers to ask him for his decided advice in regard to founding a Free Church in our country. I think we shall form a Free Church which will embrace French Switzerland and France. It has just been told us, that a Vaudois layman has already contributed 60,000 francs in behalf of the Free Vaudois Church."

The College of the Propaganda, at Rome, has one hundred students from other countries than Italy, of whom eleven are from the United States. One of the United States students is a son of the late Dr. Ives, of New York.

Freewill Baptists.—The Repository says that there has been a decrease in this denomination, during the past year, of one quarterly meeting, eight churches, six licentiates, and 2,561 communicants, and an increase of five ordained ministers.

The Re . Dr. Babcock, who has for a time past acted as Secretary of the American and Foreign Bible Society, has resigned that post, and accepted a call from the Baptist Church in New Bedford. His ability for the business of his important station, not less than his general urbanity, endeared him to many friends of the Bible cause, who will be sorry to part with him. The Rev. Dr. Maclay is talked of as his successor.

Rev. Wm. Knibb, the distinguished Baptist missionary in the island of Jamaica, died at Kettering on the 15th of November last, of the yellow fever, after an illness of four days. Ministers of several different denominations united in the exercises of his funeral, and a large concourse followed him to the tomb.

Rev. Elon Galusha.—By a communication in the N. Y. Baptist Register, we perceive that the church in Perry, N. Y., have reconsidered their act disfellowshiping Eld. Galusha. They add, "We are also of opinion, that a little time will find him battling manfully by the side of his old friends as formerly."

Notice.—The Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, wish to employ one or more Missionaries to itinerate in the Western States; and would therefore be glad to receive proposals from brethren desirous of engaging in that work, accompanied by suitable testimonials from well-known members of the denomination. By order of the Board,

Sabbath Petitions in the Legislature of New Jersey.—The Senate and General Assembly of New Jersey met at Trenton on Wednesday the 14th inst. Petitions relating to the Sabbath were presented at an early period, and received that respectful attention which they deserved—as will be seen by the following paragraphs, which we copy from the correspondence of the Bordentown Palladium:—

January 14.—"A petition was presented by Mr. Phillips, from Middlesex, for a modification of the laws for the suppression of vice and immorality, which conflict with the civil and religious rights of those who religiously observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath; which petition was read and referred to a select committee: Phillips, Cory, Caskey, Garrison, and Simpson."

January 16.—"This morning Mr. Cannon presented a memorial from Wm. M. Fahnestock, M. D., of your town, and a large number of the most eminent men of the State, praying for an amendment to the 'act for the suppression of vice and immorality,' so as to exempt from the penalties contained in that act a large and respectable body of Christians who religiously observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath. It was referred to an appropriate select committee."

A Case of Conscience.—The N. Y. Observer vouches for the truth of the following story illustrative of the power of conscience when roused after long years of slumber:—

"Some eighteen years since a gentleman in one of the interior towns of N. H. employed a man to assist him in his farming operations for several successive years. At the final settlement, the laborer received, to his own knowledge, twenty dollars more than was his honest due, after which he immediately moved and settled in an adjoining State. Sixteen years passed away, and he experienced religion. Though poor in this world's goods, he procured and returned the money by mail to the real owner, stating the facts in the case in his letter. The money being received, the gentleman takes it from the letter, replaces it with other bills equal in amount, and returns them to the sender as a present for his honesty."

Mr. John B. Gough delivered a Temperance Address in Brooklyn on Friday evening last, for the benefit of the Parent Washingtonian Society. His remarks embraced a rehearsal of the various cases of intemperance which had come under his observation. They contained only a little that was new, but showed that he was more earnestly impressed than ever with the importance of the cause which he is engaged in advocating. In conclusion, he alluded to his enemies, remarking that there might be some who had come out of sheer curiosity, "just to hear what the fellow had to say." To such he would say, that he wished himself and his affairs to pass into oblivion; for what was he to the great cause of temperance, but a bubble on the water?

The N. Y. Medical and Surgical Reporter.—This semi-monthly medical journal, under the editorial supervision of Clarkson T. Collins, M. D., increases in interest and value. The last number contains a report of five clinques, three of Dr. Parker, and two of Dr. Mott. Physicians in the country may learn through this medium, at small expense, the most important improvements in medical practice.

THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY WORK.

We have already noticed a series of meetings recently held in Philadelphia, in the course of which more than fourteen thousand dollars were raised for Foreign Missions. At one of those meetings, the venerable Mr. Judson, first missionary for this country to a foreign land, spoke as follows:—

"It is a common remark, and one that missionaries love to make, that Jesus Christ was the first missionary. He was sent on a mission of mercy to this fallen world, in accordance with the Eternal Counsel of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and they may well be called the Eternal Missionary Society. Jesus Christ, in his own person, acted the part of a missionary. He called the twelve apostles, and afterwards the seventy, to the same work, and finally commissioned his disciples to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," and that this command applies to the Church in every subsequent age is evident from the promise, "Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Is not then, this command as binding on Christians of the present age, as the command, "to love the Lord our God with all our heart," and ought not every soul to ask, have I, to the extent of my ability, honored this command? Some must in obeying this command go personally among the heathen. Let me then respectfully ask whether you have put the question, "Ought I to go?" If it appears that it is God's will that you should not go, let me again ask whether you have sought to know how you could, in an indirect manner, contribute to sustain those who do go? And, as I hope every person present is desirous of doing something for this work, allow me to suggest three ways in which aid may be given. 1st. All can contribute by fervent prayer. In the 2d place, you may by conversation and writing, influence the minds of others in favor of the work; and again you can indirectly support the cause of missions, by contributing of your property. Those who go among the heathen, must without interruption or anxiety, devote themselves to their work. Here then is ample field for putting forth efforts to obey the last command of the Saviour."

HINTS TO PREACHERS.

The following hints, which we copy from the editorial columns of "The Pulpit," are too plain to be misunderstood, and too good to be forgotten. This is our reason for copying them, and our apology (if any is needed) for giving them so prominent a place.

Long Sermons.

Long sermons are not profitable—scarcely sufferable.

It is only on extraordinary occasions, and from extraordinary speakers, that they can be tolerated at all; and it is doubted whether, on any occasion, or from any man, a sermon of an hour and a quarter to two hours in length, can be as useful as one which comes short of an hour. Three-quarters of an hour is full enough for the average length of sermons. It were better that they should fall short of that time, than exceed it. Young preachers can be seldom justified in preaching more than thirty minutes.

There are many preachers who are always unpopular where they labor, who would pass well if they would put all the thoughts of an hour's performance into one of half an hour, or less. A young preacher who can talk good sense and good divinity for twenty minutes, does well, and he stands a thousand times better chance to make a useful preacher, if he be content with that, than he does to act from the notion that brevity is a mark of a small mind, and that, to pass well, he must preach as long as the generality of preachers do. Dr. Clarke said, when he was well advanced in the ministry, that he often preached but ten or fifteen minutes, and that for the reason that he had no more to say upon that subject at that time; and what he had said he did not consider worth a repetition then and there. A preacher should never exhaust his subject, but leave it fruitful; then the people will come again.

Apologies in the Pulpit.

These are seldom justifiable. The time spent in them is worse than thrown away. It is seldom necessary to inform the congregation that "we feel embarrassed in coming before them"—that "we have not had time to prepare," &c. And then, in the discussion of the subject, we should avoid the practice of many who are constantly advertising the congregation that much more might be said upon this part of the subject, and much more upon that—and that such and such things must be passed over for want of time—promising to come to a close, and still continuing to speak—drawing, apparantly, to a close, and then branching out again—frequently remarking, "I fear I shall weary your patience."

Pulpit Phraseology.

It is very common to hear a minister of the gospel, when speaking of himself alone, in the pulpit, say "we." In private conversation he speaks of himself only in the singular, but when he gets into the pulpit he suddenly becomes plural. To assume to be more than one anywhere, is certainly not very modest, though some, probably, adopt this phraseology through a mistaken notion, that to use the personal pronoun, "I," is more immodest. The pronoun, "I," should be sparingly used; yet when one speaks of himself alone, it is always more modest to be "I," than to assume to be "we." The term "we" should sometimes be used in the pulpit; for instance, when the faults of the people are referred to, in the room of saying you, a speaker may couple himself with the congregation, and say we. And when he speaks of himself in connection with other ministers, the term "we" should be used. But when he gives notice of what he proposes to do, firstly, secondly, or thirdly; or of what he has done, let him never stretch himself beyond his measure, and get into the plural. These suggestions are in accordance with the practice of some of the best modern speakers.

The same errors are seen in the correspondence of many who write for periodicals. They, however, drop from the pen with the same impropriety as from the pulpit. Kings and editors only should say "we," when they mean "I." The writer is not very partial to the use of the term among editors; but it is almost a universal practice, and so it passes.

Excessive Modesty.

Some preachers are so excessively modest, that they commence their public exercises in so low a tone as to be scarcely audible. Weak lungs are sometimes made an excuse for this, but it is a groundless excuse in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred. Let a minister give out his hymns, read the Scriptures, commence his prayer, and give out his text clearly and distinctly, pitching his voice on a medium key. It is distressing to hear some ministers commence in a whisper what should be distinctly uttered. But while, as preachers, we guard against the stillness and moderation of death on the one hand, we should guard against abruptness and irreverence on the other.

THE CASE OF MAXSON vs. ANNAS.

☞ Let none of our correspondents suppose that their favors are overlooked or rejected because they do not at once appear in the Recorder. We have several articles on hand which shall appear as soon as we can find time to prepare them for the press. If they are really valuable, they will not suffer from the delay. If they are not, the longer they are delayed the better.

General Intelligence.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

In the SENATE, nothing of general interest was done until Wednesday, when Mr. Crittenden introduced a resolution authorizing the President, at his discretion, to give to the British Government notice of the cessation of the joint occupancy of Oregon, provided that said notice shall not be given till after the close of the present session of Congress. This resolution was read, ordered printed, and made the order of the day for the 10th of February.

In the HOUSE, a great part of the time was spent in debate about Oregon. Resolutions were presented from the Legislature of New Hampshire in favor of cheap postage, and against any increase of the present rates. A Resolution was introduced instructing the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions to report a bill for the payment of pensions to widows of Revolutioners, who were married after 1794 and before 1800, allowing such persons to draw the same as widows married before 1794; no action upon the resolution.

—Hon. WILLIAM TAYLOR, of Virginia, "a most useful, excellent, and examplary" member of the House of Representatives, died at Washington on the morning of the 17th inst.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Six Days Later.

By the packet-ships, Oxford from Liverpool, and Iowa from Havre, London papers have been received in New York to Dec. 10.

The question of a repeal of the Corn Laws had been a topic of unparalleled excitement. The London Times announced that Parliament was to be assembled during the first week in January, and that the Royal Speech would recommend the repeal of the Corn Laws. But the announcement, it seems, was premature, and only served to excite hopes which were to be disappointed.

England is said to be making very extensive preparations for war, by strengthening the defences of her principal seaports at home and abroad.

The Liverpool Mail, in speaking of the famine in Great Britain, says: "It is as we anticipated, and it is delightful to record the fact, than the monster 'Famine,' with which the nation was threatened, has begun to devour its insolent and mendacious authors. Every post brings the cheering intelligence that the potato failure, the distemper, are fallacies not engendered by the brain, but proceeding from the heart—fearful falsehoods, invented for a sordid and dishonest purpose."

The disease among cattle has again broken out in South Lancashire, and many farmers have lost the greater portion of their stock. The present disease appears to be a violent affection of the lungs, and in many cases it is quite incurable. Sheep, on the other hand, are doing remarkably well.

News had been received in England that a fearful fire had taken place in Bombay on the first night of the Dewallee (Lamp Festival) of the natives. It took its origin from some fireworks in a shop where a quantity of powder was stowed. Having destroyed nearly 200 houses of various descriptions, it was stopped by the energy and activity of the Europeans. Fifteen persons lost their lives. Bombay escaped an awful calamity, for about 4,000 lbs. of powder were removed from the houses on fire. If that powder had blown up, the consequences would have been appalling; thousands would have been killed.

A letter from Hartz in Germany, says:—"The emigrations from our mountains for Texas, have lately been so numerous, that several of the villages are entirely deserted. In less than three months, more than six thousand persons have quitted a country abounding with mines of iron, lead, and mercury, which demanded only the application of labor to give rich results, to tempt fortune at a distance of four thousand leagues."

Four Days Later Still.

The packet ship Liberty has arrived, bringing advices from Liverpool to the 13th Dec.

The news is important. The Peel Ministry has resigned, and a new Cabinet has been organized by Lord John Russell.

Parliament was prorogued to the 30th Dec.

The price of Cotton has advanced.

The London Sun of Dec. 11, says: "The Ministry of Sir Robert Peel has resigned. The country at large may be startled by a circumstance so unexpected, but such is the fact. Yesterday morning the majority of the Cabinet, comprising the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Buccleuch, Sir Robert Peel, Sir James Graham, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Stanley, Mr. Goulburn, the Earl of Lincoln, and Mr. Sidney Herbert—in all, nine out of twelve or thirteen composing the entire Cabinet, proceeded by special train to Southampton, and were conveyed by the royal steamer Fairy to the Isle of Wight. At a court held at Osborne House they tendered their resignation to her Majesty, which was graciously accepted!

HORRIBLE CASE OF LYNCHING.—A noted negro thief, by the name of Yeoman, having been arrested near Albany, Baker Co., Ga., and subsequently discharged by Judge Warren on a writ of habeas corpus, was immediately re-arrested, says the Savannah Republican, and under charge of Messrs. Mallory, Brinson and Adams, conveyed at once to Florida. On his way thither, he confessed to the gentlemen in whose charge he was, that he was one of an organized gang of negro thieves and murderers—that during the Florida War they had carried on their operations under the guise of Indians, and that since the war they had stolen negroes in Thomas and Lowndes Counties, Ga., and Jefferson Co., Fla., to the value of $10,000. He confessed his crime in detail, and offered them $1,000 cash for his release, alledging that if carried to Florida he knew he would be unceremoniously hanged.

On his arrival at Jefferson Co., Fla., the citizens assembled to the number of ninety, and after an investigation of the facts, took a formal vote, which resulted, 67 in favor of hanging, and 23 against it. Yeoman was accordingly executed at 12 o'clock on the 2d inst. The principal reason for this summary execution of the law was, the insecurity of their jails, and the fact of his having a band of accomplices in the community, who would, in all probability, have effected a release. A reward of $1,000 has already been offered by the citizens for the arrest of others known to be connected with him who has already suffered. One of those implicated was arrested a few days since, we are informed, near Newton, Baker Co., Ga., and after the infliction of 75 lashes, released on the pledge that he would leave the State in five hours.

DELIRIUM.—"Never was drunk but once in my life," said a chap once in my hearing, "and I never mean to be again. The streets seemed to be very steep, and I lifted my feet at every step as if I was getting up stairs. Several cart-wheels were making revolutions in my brains, and at one time I fancied my head was a large carving and turning establishment, the lathes of which were keeping in motion with my own feet. I couldn't conceive what was the reason that the town had turned into such an enormous hill; and what made it worse was, that it seemed all the time to be growing higher and threatened to pitch over on me. Stop, stop, said I, and I'll head this old hill yet, or at least it shan't head me. I turned round to go down and get at the bottom; tell me! if the town didn't turn right round with me, heading me all the time, and presenting the high bluff in front of me. Well, sure enough, the ground flew up and struck me on the forehead; and as soon as the stars cleared away, I commenced climbing with my hands and knees. The next thing I saw was a big brick house coming full split round a corner and I believe it run right over me, for I don't remember any more. [Picayune.

DEPOPULATION OF VIRGINIA.—A correspondent of the National Intelligencer, writing from Wilton, Va., says:—

"It often seems to me that as yet there are no people here, and I wish, therefore, to see them come. I have to take up a spy-glass to see the houses of my neighbors, they are so far off, and yet so near am I to a capital of about 24,000 inhabitants, that I can see its spires and steeples, and almost hear the hum of its laborers. Back of me and below me, off the river as far as I have explored, I cannot find much else but woods, woods, woods. I ride for miles and miles in the forest, looking for people. And yet this is the first settled and oldest settled part of Virginia! The people have gone off; they have settled in Georgia, Alabama, Kentucky, Missouri, Mississippi, Louisiana, Florida; and now, as if there are too many people left, a bribe is held out to the rest to go to Texas! It is a shame that this beautiful country, so blessed in climate and so little needing only the fertilizing hand of man, should be without people. Here is a venerable river running by my door, older than the Hudson, which is now lined with towns and villages—much older than the Ohio, older in settlement and geography I mean, but where are the people? For a hundred and fifty miles, from Richmond to Norfolk, the first explored river running into the Atlantic ocean, the home of Powhattan and the scenes of the chivalrous John Smith—where are the people? Gone, I say, to the South and West; the trumpet is blowing among them now to go to Texas! Virginia has here depopulated herself to make homes elsewhere."

STYLOGRAPHY.—We have had the pleasure of examining a specimen of a new style of engraving, invented and now perfected by Mr. J. C. Crossman of this city, and to which he has given the name of Stylography. The invention consists in producing relief engravings—that is, engravings which can be printed from the surface, like woodcuts and types—by a shorter and less expensive process than that of engraving on wood. The specimen we have seen of Mr. Crossman's Stylography is a map, which is executed with great neatness—bearing a close resemblance to copper-plate, and vieing in beauty and distinctness with the best plate engravings. The result of this process is similar to Morse's Cerography; but in our opinion the Stylography excels the Cerography in the sharpness, ease, and freedom of the lines and in the delicacy and beauty of finish.

Mr. Crossman has devoted much time and attention to this interesting development of art, and has now, after a patient series of experiments, brought it to a high degree of perfection. The discovery will be of great practical utility. Its superiority will consist in producing maps, architectural designs, and all outline engravings, at a wonderful reduction of expense, as compared with copper-plate engravings. The stylographic plate has the great advantage of being an exact re-production of the drawing. The drawing is made upon a tablet, and from that a stereotype plate, in relief, is obtained, from which copies—exact facsimiles of the original sketch—may be multiplied indefinitely. CURIOUS.—Among the pageants at the coronation of Queen Mary, in 1553, was the following singular feat, related by Hollinshed:—

"Then there was one Peter, Dutchman, that stood on the weathercoke of Paule's steeple, (in London,) holding a streamer in his hand of five yards long, and waving thereof, stood sometimes on the one foot and shooke the other, and then kneeled on his knees, to the great marvel of the people. He had made two scaffolds under him, one above the crosse, having torches and streamers set on it, and another over the crosse, likewise set with streamers, and torches, which could not burn, the wind was so great. The said Peter had sixteen pounds thirteen shillings given him by the Citie for his costes and paines, and for all his stuffe."

QUALIFICATIONS OF AN EDITOR.—He must possess the constitution of a horse, obstinacy of a mule, independence of a wood-sawer, endurance of a starving anaconda, impudence of a beggar, spunk of a chicken-cock, pertinacity of a dun, and entire resignation to the worst of all earthly treadmills.

So says an 'exchange.' It might have added to the list of needfuls, imperturbable good temper, a faculty of doing nine things at once, skill to read the most illegible manuscripts, leisure at all times, and a great knack of going without his dinner while waiting upon the irregularities of the mail. [N. Y. Com. Adv.

NEW BANKING SYSTEM.—A Bank has been established in Cincinnati, called the Citizens' Bank, calculated, if conducted honestly, to afford much accommodation to a class which is generally overlooked by banks, the class of small borrowers. Its loans are at this time 922 in number. Of these 735 are in sums of from $10 to $100—154 from $100 to $300, and 33 over $300. The Bank lends for a single day or longer, on either a responsible name or good notes of hand left as collateral, or any other approved security. It also receives money on deposite, payable with a liberal interest on demand, so that whether a deposite remains in the Bank but a single day or longer, it draws interest for the time. The amount of its loans Oct. 3d, was $64,015; on the 3d of January they were $107,652.

A NEW PROJECT.—A large meeting was held at the County Court House in Philadelphia, on the 12th inst., to discuss the expediency of appropriating the proceeds of the public lands for the abrogation of slavery. A resolution to that effect was introduced by Thomas Earle, Esq. After a number of speakers had addressed the audience, amongst whom were Messrs. Earle, Cavender, Rankin, Benson, Coggins, and a colored man named Harrison—whose remarks were received with great applause—the resolution asking Congress to consider the expediency of appropriating the proceeds of the sale of public lands for the purchase of Southern Slaves, was submitted to the meeting, and was carried with few dissenting voices.

After appointing a Committee, to petition Congress in conformity to the intention of the resolution, the meeting adjourned.

BIELA'S COMET.—This very faint Comet, which revolves in six and three quarter years, is now on its return to the sun, and has been visible in large telescopes for a month past. The close agreement of its positions with those given in the ephemerds, shows that its elements are well ascertained. It was detected by Mr. Challis, at Cambridge, England, as early as December 1st, 1845, with the aid of the Northumberland Telescope, and has now become tolerably conspicuous in instruments of less capacity. When last observed here, on the 31st of December, with a low power, and aperture of five inches, the comet appeared like a faint nebula, about four minutes in diameter, with a decided gradual condensation. As it is approaching both the sun and the earth, it will continue to increase in brightness. It will pass its perihelion on the 11th of February, 1846.

This celebrated comet, which produced so much consternation in 1832, particularly in France, when it was apprehended by the public that it would come in contact with the earth, gave occasion for M. Argao to write a treatise on the nature of these bodies, and particularly this one, in order to dispel the apprehensions of the people.

TIMING THE HOUSE.—The correspondent of the Argus writes, that while Mr. Cobb, of Georgia, was speaking a few days ago, "seventeen individuals crowded around him, as the place where of all other places, they might catch the Chairman's eye. As Mr. C. turned to look at the clock, to ascertain when his hour would expire, the seventeen braced themselves, throwing back one leg, pushing forward the head, and partly extending the right hand, with the most intense anxiety exhibited in every muscle. In the middle of a sentence, down came the hammer, announcing the expiration of the hour. "Go!" shouted a waggish member from Alabama at the top of his voice, and instantly the seventeen sprang to their feet, crying "Mr. Speaker" as loud as they could bawl! Ladies in the gallery were frightened into hysterics, an immense roar of laughter echoed through the Hall, while Mr. Holmes of South Carolina, was seen with horror depicted in his countenance, counting, with his pointed finger, the numerous aspirants for the floor. It was a rich scene, one which would have made Hogarth's pencil laugh."

SUMMARY.

Mrs. Catharine Webster, grand-daughter of the noted chief of the Onondaga Tribe, Captain Frost, died at the Castle, on Monday, 12th inst., aged 17 years. She has left an only son, about four years old, who is one of the Head Chiefs of the Six Nations.

During the month of December there were 8 prisoners discharged at Sing-Sing Prison, and on the 1st of January there remained 803 males and 65 females—total 868.

A meeting of slaveholders was held at Centreville, Md., for the purpose of taking some action in reference to the frequent loss of their slaves by absconding, and of adopting such measures as might be deemed advisable for the better security of such property in future. A series of resolutions were adopted in referenc to the escape of some runaway slaves who were arrested in Delaware, through the assistance of Abolitionists.

We learn that within the last week no less than forty wagons, with families, negroes, horses, cattle, sheep, &c., have crossed the Mississippi at the mouth of the Red River—the great Texas Crossing, as it is called—all bound for the new State.

The True Sun says:—Passing through Hudson street last night, we saw a watchman gravely promenading on his beat with a label on his back, having the inscriptions, "The stars do wink with over-watching." "One of the boys caught me asleep and put this card on my coat."

A Mr. Leland Selby, of Porttown, Ohio, was frozen so badly, while under the influence of intoxicating drinks, as to cause a horrid death in a short time afterward. Yet many men drink liquor to keep off the effects of cold weather. He was 56 years of age.

On New Year's Eve, two of the College buildings at Bloomington were entirely destroyed by fire. The main building, containing the extensive libraries, apparatus, &c., escaped with but little injury.

A case of small pox has within a few days occurred at the Lane Seminary. The patient is a Mr. Rankin from Illinois, who took the disease, it is supposed, while engaged in the benevolent work of distributing tracts.

The Magnetic Telegraph between Philadelphia and Norristown has commenced operations, and several persons have conducted correspondence by it. All but seven miles of the route to New York is completed.

The earth loses in the course of a year sufficient heat or caloric to melt several feet in depth of snow over its whole surface, at least so think the scientific.

The Portsmouth Journal gives an account of the chase of a fox by the locomotive on the Eastern railroad. Poor Reynard ran like the wind for a mile or more, but was finally overtaken, and as he turned his head to escape from his pursurer, was struck by the engine wheel and crushed to death.

The Missouri Convention to revise the Constitution has amended that instrument so as to make clergymen eligible to office.

A writer in Blackwood's Magazine says, the number of paupers in Great Britain is four millions, or a seventh part of the population of the Empire. In Ireland, 2,300,000, England, 1,500,000, Scotland, 200,000.

Since 1815, the people of England have been taxed £200,000,000, or one thousand millions of dollars for the relief of the poor.

There are 70,000 persons whose annual revenue is $200,000,000, or $2,857 each, in England.

A correspondent of the London Times mentions that the safety of a train on the South-Western railway was endangered on a recent occasion, from a strange cause. Two elephants were conveyed from London, the animals became restive; and near Wimbledon, on an embankment, they grew so outrageous as to smash the cages in which they were confined. The passengers were not released from their terrors until the train arrived at Wimbledon, where the carriage of the elephants was detached.

A letter from Currituck Co., N. C., states that there had been some rare sport in that neighborhood about the 30th ult. It appears that the great fires in the Dismal Swamp last fall, having destroyed their food, had driven great numbers of bears to seek sustenance on its borders; and as they were making very free with the pigs, &c., of the farmers, a party turned out in pursuit of them, and in the course of a few days they killed no less than nineteen full grown bears, besides taking one alive, which was treed by the dogs.

A young, beautiful, and intelligent girl, whose family are reported to be very wealthy, eloped on Tuesday evening at New Haven with a colored man, and was wedded to him at 9 o'clock by a colored clergyman. Her friends hearing of it, pursued and arrested the bride, but after a hearing before the Court she was surrendered to the keeping of her yellow 'lord and master,' a writ of habeas corpus having been taken out by him.

S. D. Parker, Esq., Commonwealth Attorney for this district, made his annual report to the Secretary's office yesterday. During the year 1845 he examined 932 cases of criminal complaints. The amount of bail forfeited in the municipal courts, which he has paid into the treasury during the year, is $9,447 90. Fines and costs paid in, through the sheriff, $7,598 16. Total cash for crimes in the county for one year, $17,046 04. [Boston Post.

The Detroit Free Press, of Jan. 7, says, that on Friday last, the dwelling of Mr. George Miller, of Ecorse township, Mich., with its contents, was consumed by fire, and sorrowful to relate, two of his children were also consumed. The father had absented himself for a few moments, when the house was discovered on fire, and all attempts to secure the children were unavailing.

A fellow went into the hall of a boarding-house in Barclay street a few nights since, while the boarders were at supper, and gathered all the hats on the table. He was making his way out with his booty, when a boarder a little behind time came in, and asked him what he was about. 'Oh,' says the thief, 'I am taking the gentlemen's hats around to Leary's to get smoothed.' 'Well,' replied the boarder, 'take mine along too.' 'Certainly, sir!' said the accommodating rascal, and vanished.

Henry Inman, the Painter, died on Saturday at noon, in the 45th year of his age, leaving a wife and five children. Mr. Inman was the President of the National Academy of Designs, and stood in the very front rank of American Artists. His fame is a part of the history of the country, and his many virtues endear his memory to all who knew him. His death was in consequence of an organic disease of the heart, against which his health has been for a long time feebly strugling.

Rev. Charles W. Dennison, has been unanimously expelled from the First Baptist Church in Boston, and deposed from the ministry on a charge of lying and obtaining money under false pretences. He has friends who regard him as a persecuted man, and he was to commence preaching on Sunday last under the sanction of 'The Independent Bethel Society of the port of Boston.'

During the holidays, the colored population held a bazaar or fair in the basement of the 'Broadway Tabernacle, the proceeds of which were to be given to the Colored Orphan Asylum. To their credit it is announced, that on Saturday they paid over to the Itstitution nearly seven hundred dollars, besides presenting the inmates with a large quantity of cakes and other dainties. This shows that they rightly appreciate and gratefully acknowledge the benefaction to their race conferred by the Society.

The Steamer Belle Zane, which was recently snagged on the Missippi river, had on board 125 persons, of whom only 64 reached the shore, and four of them froze to death afterwards.

EXECUTOR'S SALE.

WILL be sold at public vendue, on Tuesday, the 17th of February, at 1 o'clock P. M., on the premises, the Residence late of Jonathan R. Dunham, deceased, containing about 10 acres of excellent land, with a large and convenient Dwelling House and Barn; also a Tan Yard, Bark House, Shoemaker's and Currier's Shop, together with a Carriage House, and other out-buildings, and a good variety of fruit trees. It is situated on the main road from Plainfield to Bound Brook, about 2½ miles from the former and 3½ from the latter place, and about ¼ of a mile from the New Market Depot on the Elizabethtown and Somerville Railroad, from which place the cars make three trips to New-York daily. It would make a pleasant country residence for any gentleman wishing to live in the country and do business in the city; or an excellent Tannery, it being in the immediate vicinity of sufficient quantity of the best of bark, a stream of water runs through the premises, and the Water-Pit in said yard contains a living Spring of excellent water, which is said to make the best of Leather. Terms of payment made easy.

Also, a small Dwelling House and seven acres of good land adjoining the before described property.

Also, a small Dwelling House and Garden, adjoining the first mentioned property.

For a further description of the said premises, application may be made to Mrs. Dunham, on the premises, or to
RANDOLPH DUNHAM, Plainfield, or
DAVID DUNN, New Market, Executors.

N. B.—All the described properties are offered at private sale until the day of sale, and if any are sold notice will be given.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
IRA SAYLES, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathemat
GURDON EVANS, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. HARTSHORN, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. STILLMAN, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. MAXSON. Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences. The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition. per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense. SAMUEL RUSSELL,

TOBITT'S PRINT, 9 SPRUCE ST.

Misellaneous.

The following lines from Tennyson are touchingly beautiful. Believing their perusal will gratify our young readers, we insert them. Who that "saw the sun set" the last day of '45 is sure to see the same again at the close of '46? Whose eye that glances over these lines shall then be glazed in death? Child! Parent! You who, but yesterday, together "saw the sun rise upon the glad New-Year," remember, Death may part you ere another New-Year's dawn. Prize and improve life's blessings while you have them—be grateful to the giver and fail not to obey the injunction, "seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness."

THE LAST NEW YEAR.

If you're waking call me early, call me early, mother dear,
For I would see the sun rise upon the glad New-Year—
It is the last New-Year that I shall ever see,
Then ye may lay me low i'the mould, and think no more o' me.

To-night I saw the sun set; he set and left behind
The good old year, the dear old time, and all my peace of mind;
And the New-Year 's coming up, mother, but I shall never see
The May upon the blackthorn, the leaf upon the tree.

Last May we made a crown of flowers: we had a merry day:
Beneath the hawthorn on the green, they made me Queen of May;
And we danced around the May-pole, and in the hazel copse,
Till Charles's wain came out above the tall white chimney tops.

There 's not a flower on all the hills; the frost is on the pane;
I only wish to live till the snow-drops come again:
I wish the snow would melt and the sun come out on high—
I long to see a flower so before the day I die.

The building rook 'ill caw from the windy tall elm tree,
And the tufted plover pipe along the fallow lea,
And the swallow 'ill come back again with summer o'er the wave,
But I shall lie alone, mother, within the mouldering grave.

Upon the chancel-casement, and upon that grave of mine,
In the early, early morning the summer sun 'ill shine,
Before the red cock crows from the farm upon the hill,
When you are warm asleep, mother, and all the world is still.

When the flowers come again, mother, beneath the waning light,
Ye'll never see me more in the long grey fields at night;
When from the dry dark world the summer airs blow cool,
On the oat grass and the sword grass, and the bullrush in the pool.

Ye'll bury me, my mother, just beneath the hawthorn shade,
And ye'll come sometimes and see me where I am lowly laid;
I shall not forget ye, mother, I shall hear ye when ye pass,
With your feet above my head in the long and pleasant grass.

I have been wild and wayward, but ye'll forgive me now:
Ye'll kiss me, my own mother, upon my cheek and brow;
Nay,—nay, ye must not weep, nor let your grief be wild,
Ye shonld not fret for me, mother, ye have another child.

If I can, I'll come again, mother, from out my resting place;
Tho' ye'll not see me, mother, I shall look upon your face;
Tho' I cannot speak a word, I shall hearken what ye say,
And be often—often with ye when ye think I'm far away.

Good night! Good night! When I have said good night forever more,
And ye see me carried out from the threshold of the door,
Don't let Effie come to see me till my grave be growing green;
She'll be a better child to you than ever I have been.

She'll find my garden tools upon the granary floor;
Let her take 'em—they are hers,—I shall never garden more:
But tell her, when I'm gone, to train the rose-bush that I see,
About the parlor window, and the box of mignonette.

Good night, sweet mother! Call me when it begins to dawn:
All night I lie awake, but I fall asleep at morn;
But I would see the sun rise upon the glad New-Year,
So, if you're waking, call me, call me early, mother dear!

The Oregon Question.

The following speech was delivered by the Hon. J. R. Giddings of Ohio. The South must be growing tame or they could not sit and hear such a speech.

Mr. Giddings said that, owing to the difficulty which he had experienced heretofore in obtaining the floor, he was induced to avail himself of his present position to indicate the considerations that would govern him in voting for the resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is due to myself (said Mr. G.) to say, that, in a former Congress, I was opposed to terminating the joint occupancy of Oregon. That vote was given under the circumstances which then surrounded us. Now we are placed in a totally different position. Since this subject was before us our Union has been changed in its essential elements, and its fundamental principles have been overthrown. The Union founded by our fathers has been subverted, and a new slaveholding Confederacy has been formed, giving to the Southern portion the balance of power, and subjecting the free labor of the North, the dearest rights of the free States, to the tender mercies of a slaveholding oligarchy. They now have the entire direction of the Government.—The people of the free States have been politically bound head and foot, and delivered over to the slaveholding interest, and it is now worse than mockery to talk of maintaining the manufacturing interests of Pennsylvania or of New England. They are now under the inexorable power of the South.

This then, is our situation, as we are all perfectly conscious. The nation has been plunged without my aid into this condition, but against my will. I have believed, and still believe, that this policy of acquiring territory must inevitably, if carried out, subvert the Government and dissolve the Union.

Mr. Chipman called Mr. G. to order, and was understood to say that to speak of the dissolution of the Union was irrelevant, and was throwing a fire-brand into the House.

Mr. Giddings proceeded. I was stating our present situation, and the liability of this new Union to fall asunder from its own weight, when this system of extension shall he carried out.—And it is under these circumstances that I am called to express my opinion of the proposed policy. I am led to the conclusion, to the irresistible conclusion, that war, with all its horrors and its devastation of public morals, is infinitely preferable to a supine, inactive submission to the slaveholding power, that is to control this nation, if left in its present situation.

seen enough of war to form an opinion of its effects, its miseries, and the extent of its curse. Yet, sir, I greatly prefer them, for a few years, to the quiet apathy which has already subjected us to a change of the Government formed by our fathers.

Here I will take occasion to say, that I differ from my venerable friend from Massachusetts as to the probability of war. I am of opinion that if we take the whole of Oregon, it will produce war. I say this, although I have heretofore, in nine cases out of ten, found myself mistaken when I have differed from that venerable statesman. The consequences of a war have not escaped my consideration.

It must inevitably produce great destruction to the commercial wealth of New England.—Here let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. Winthrop,) who the other day made so eloquent an appeal in favor of peace, and who represents the commercial interests of that Stste, that I fully appreciate his motives and feelings. But, sir, this situation is one of his own choice. He was among the first distinguished men of that State who gave in his adherence to the change of Government, and the leading commercial men of Boston were the first in that State to declare their submission to this new slaveholding confederation with Texas. This was done with a full knowledge of the policy which had been adopted of extending our territory. That State had declared her people under no obligation to unite with Texas in consequence of any action of Congress. I then held, and still hold, the action of this Government imposed no obligation upon my State, either political or moral, to enter into this new confederacy. No, sir, if she come into it, as she will, it will be the choice of our people, and not from any obligation resting upon her by reason of the joint resolutions of Congress. And, if my colleagues coincided with me in opinion, no Representative from Ohio would retain a seat in this Hall beside those of Texas, upon such terms as have been imposed upon us. But the gentleman from Massachusetts voluntarily preferred to have his State become a party to this new union. I hope the people of that old commonwealth did not intend, in going into it, to stop this policy of adding territory to our present Confederacy. They could not have desired to remain under the despotic sway of the slave power. They must have expected that the balance of power was to be restored by the addition of territory at the North to counterbalance Texas. They ought now to oppose the regaining of those rights which have been voluntarily surrendered by the North. And this destruction of their wealth will be merely the legitimate consequence of their submission to the proposed policy. But, sir, the manufactures of New England, and New York, and Pennsylvania will be promoted by a war. The agricultural interests of the West will not be likely to suffer. Indeed our principal burden will not be the defence of ourselves or the taking of Canada; but the protection of the South—the weak, helpless, Slaveholding South. That portion of the Union must suffer most. I have seen the horror manifested by Southern papers. The Cotton interest, say they, must of course suffer. Slave labor will be rendered worthless, and Slave property depreciated. True; but this policy of adding territory to our original Government is the offspring of the South. They have forced it upon the Northern Democracy. The objects of the South are now answered. Texas is admitted.—They have attained their ulterior designs, and they now require the party to stop short, to face about, and leave the power of the nation in their hands. They now see before them the black regiments of the West India Islands landed upon their shores. They now call to mind the declaration of British Statesmen, that "a war with the United States will be a war of emancipation." They now see before them insurrections, which torment their imaginations. Murder, Rapine and Blood now dance before their affrighted visions. Well, sir, I say to them:—This is your policy, not mine. You have prepared the cup, and I will press it to your lips until the very dregs shall be drained!

Let no one misunderstand me. Let no one say that I desire a slave insurrection; but, sir, I doubt not that hundreds of thousands of honest and patriotic hearts will "laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh." No, sir; should a servile insurrection take place—should massacre and blood mark the footsteps of those who have for ages been oppressed, my prayer to God shall be that justice—stern, unyielding, and unalterable justice, may be awarded to the master and to the slave. Then, sir, we shall have the scenes of 1780 again acted over, when South Carolina sent to the Continental Congress a delegation to inform that body that it required all her troops to protect her people against their slaves, and that that chivalrous State must depend on her Northren sisters for troops to defend her against the common enemy. Then, sir, the people of Ohio will be compelled to go to the South, to Alabama, South Carolina, Mississippi, and Texas, to protect them from the emancipated slaves of the West Indies, and the desperation to which their own servile population will be driven. Sir, our sons must go there and bare their breasts in defence of the slave institutions of those States. Then, sir, the people of the North will be compelled to look this institution in the face; they will see the degradation to which they have become subjected by this new slaveholding Confederacy.

And, sir, no twelve hundred thousand dollars will be likely to be paid to Southren slaveholders by the British Government for the purpose of obtaining peace. But, sir, there is one vast and important consideration that ought not to escape my notice. A war with England, in the present state of the two nations, must inevitably place in our possession the Canadas, Nova Scotia and New-Brunswick. Six States will be added to the Northern portion of the Union, to restore the balance of power, surrendered up by the Annexation of Texas. This, Mr. Speaker, is the policy declared by the party now controlling this nation at their Baltimore Convention. I say to them, carry out that policy! I demand of them not to leave the nation in its present state of subjection to the slaveholding oligarchy of the South. I will vote to give them the means of doing so. But, sir, I am bound to say that I believe the Nothern Democracy to have been betrayed. Their Southren slaveholding allies will now desert them. We see them in every part of the Hall begging and beseeching Whigs and Democrats to save them from this dread policy, which is to prostrate Southren interests and involve them in blood and massacre. A master-spirit of the South has left his retirement and taken his position in the other end of this Capitol, with the open and avowed purpose of defeating the identical policy, the promotion of which occupied his whole intellect only twelve months since. It remains to be seen whether he is able to control the nation.

Sir, should the measure be carried through Congress, I say to Northern Democrats that the Executive will save the institutions of the South from the apprehended danger of a war with England. Yes, sir, I verily believe that he will surrender up all that portion of Oregon lying North of the forty-ninth parallel of latitude, rather than hazard the dangers of a war. Yes, gentlemen, be assured he will do it; and, in my opinion, he will effect it before the day proposed by the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for discussing this resolution. Let no man misapprehend or misrepresent me. I say, this policy is not mine. I have at times opposed it. I am still convinced that its consequences are destructive to our Government. But it has been forced upon us, and those who have adopted it are responsible. I wash my hands from all participation in it; but I prefer that they should carry it out, rather than leave us where we are. When this policy shall be fully carried out, it will leave the North and the South in the enjoyment of something like equal advantages. And when, from its broad extent, this Republic, like the Roman Empire, shall fall asunder of its own weight, the free States will stand redeemed from the foul contagion of slavery which now rests upon them.

THE PILOT'S BOY.

The storm raged loud and fierce. The wind swept wildly over the waste of waters, catching the spray in its embrace and hurling it furiously onward, so that the ocean seemed a vast sheet of foam. The clouds hung low and dark, scowling on the terrible vortex below. It was one of the most awful tempests that had for years devastated the Atlantic coast.

On a low, sandy beach, against which the waves thundered until the ground shook beneath them, stood a mother and her daughter, gazing anxiously seaward, regardless of the storm. So powerful was the wind that they could with difficulty stand; yet they fearlessly kept their watch, shading their eyes with their hands to keep off the spray, apparently looking for some object on the ocean. Suddenly the child cried:

"Mother! there they are!'

She pointed with a trembling finger as she spoke, and following its direction, the mother beheld a white speck, like a flake of snow, amid the dark waters, on the horizon. It rose and fell, but kept increasing in size as if approaching.

"O, Lord! I thank thee!" said the mother, clasping her hands and looking up to heaven. "The father of my babes yet lives; save him for my sake."

It would have melted the sternest heart to have heard the deep emotion with which she breathed that prayer. Then with hands clasped before her, she stood silent, watching the little bark which contained her husband and her only boy. And bravely did that gallant craft struggle through the tempest. Now it would be lost to sight in a whirlwind of foam as it plunged through a head sea, and now it would re-appear, its white sail glancing like the wing of a gull. At times the wind would press with such force on the close reefed canvass, at to lay her mast nearly level with the billows, so that the mother's heart nearly sunk within her, for it seemed then as if the brave bark would never recover herself; and again the frail spar would struggle upwards, and the boat skim along for a space, like a spirit walking the deep.

For nearly half an hour the little bark was thus visible; and during that period the suspense of the mother was worse than the most intolerable agony. One while she saw herself bereft of those she loved, and again hope would resume its sway in her bosom, only, however, to be again overthrown by the next surge that broke over the devoted craft. It seemed a miracle that the boat had lived so long; and even the sanguine hopes of a mother could not long persuade her she should see her darling boy again.

At length, one mountainous billow was seen advancing, its huge breast lifting itself slowly up, the masses of waters piling one over another until they seemed to mingle with the black clouds above; then a speck of foam suddenly appeared on the extreme top of the wave, which spreading rapidly to right and left, until the crest was every where crowned with it, the huge bulk of piled up waters tumbling headlong, and the boat, which had been seen a second before laboring in the trough of the sea beneath, was lost to sight forever in the white and chafing whirlpool.

The mother held her breath as the waters fell, and remained, like one struck by a basilisk, gazing on the fierce vortex, as if hoping against hope, that the boat would re-appear; but moment after moment passed, until it seemed to her as if hours had elapsed, and yet no sign of the bark was visible. At length the waters partially subsided; another billow swept over the place where the first had broken, and then the mast of the little craft rolled upward; but the hull was no where visible.

"They are lost! oh! my dear father—and Harry—mother, can't you save them?" said the child, in accents of the most heart-breaking grief.

But the mother answered not. She looked wildly at her daughter, and then ran like one distracted to the edge of the surf, venturing so far down with the undertow that it appeared incredible that she could escape the angry breakers. Here she strained her eyes again to see if she could catch a glimpse of the crew of the ill-fated boat. But nothing was visible except the black surges, capped with foam; and no sound was heard but the roar of the hurricane: "Oh! Father in heaven!" she cried, in accents of that stony grief, which once heard, lives forever in the memory, "Save my child—save him even yet!"

At that instant a dark mass appeared on the crest of a breaker, and with a cry of joy the mother saw the form of her darling boy close at hand. The next moment the boy was hurled towards her, and rushing recklessly into the surf, she caught the child by its clothes and hurried inward to gain the dry land before a second surge should overtake her. Twice she was struck down before reaching the beach; twice the weeping daughter lost sight of her mother; but the energy of the parent finally triumphed, and she bore her prize to land and laid the senseless form on the beach. The moment after, the hardy frame of the pilot was seen struggling with the surf; and he too at length reached the shore in safety. The first object that met his gaze was the body of his darling extended on the beach.

"My boy! my boy!" he cried, casting himself beside it. "Oh God! he is dead!" with a heart-broken exclamation, and wringing his hands, he looked up to heaven, his whole face convulsed with the fearful agony of a bereaved father. It was a touching spectacle. In the foreground lay the figure of the boy, cold and wet, his beautiful hair washed back from his face, and his little arm extended by his side, as if he had been sleeping. Over him knelt the afflicted mother, her form half prostrate on his, and her face buried in her hands. Her garments, and those of the father were flying wildly in the wind. The back ground of the picture was filled up by the white foam of the surf, and the whirling masses of clouds overhead. In the distance, scarcely visible through the darkness of approaching night, was a little fishing village.

"But may he not yet live?" suddenly said the mother, as if a new hope had struck her. "Oh! if we had him at home, we might do something for him!"

The father started up from his momentary stupor, and every feature af his face was now instinct with energy. Catching the senseless body in his arms, without a word, he strode onwards to the village almost on a run, the rest of his family following eagerly behind, the mother in breathless silence, her heart agitated with hope and fear alternately, and the daughter clinging to her dress and sobbing as if her heart would break.

The neighbors met them before they reached their home, all eager to lend their aid; for they knew that the pilot had been abroad that day, and the rumor of his wreck soon reached every hearth. The senseless body was laid on the bed; those who could be of service remained in the room, and the rest anxiously awaited the result in the apartment without. After some time hopelessly spent in the attempt to revive him, and when the neighbors were beginning to despair, the mother thought she saw some faint signs of life. Their exertions were now redoubled, and at length he faintly breathed.

"My boy lives," said the mother, fervently, and though she breathed no prayer in words, her heart was poured out in thankfulness to her Father in heaven as she looked on.

Before the night was very far spent, the child thus rescued from the jaws of death was able to sit up; and many and heartfelt were the thanks for his recovery breathed to heaven that night, by the mothers of the little fishing village, for each felt that it might yet be to her own darling, as it had been that day to the PILOT'S BOY.—*C. WE'VE HAD OUR SHARE OF BLISS.

BY MRS. EMELINE S. SMITH.

We've had our share of bliss, belov'd,
We've had our share of bliss;
nd,' mid the varying scenes of life,
Let us remember this.
If sorrows come, from vanished joy
We'll borrow such a light
As the departed sun bestows
Upon the queen of night;
And, thus by Memory's moonbeams cheer'd,
Hope's sun we shall not miss.
But tread life's path as gay as when
We had our share of bliss.

'Tis true our sky hath had its clouds,
Our spring its stormy hours,
When we have mourn'd, as all must mourn,
O'er blighted buds and flowers;
And true our barque hath sometimes near'd
Despair's most desert shore,
When gloomy look'd the waves around
And dark the land before!
But love was ever at the helm—
He could not go amiss,
So long as two fond spirits sang
"We've had our share of bliss."

These holy watch-words of the Past,
Shall be the Future's stay:
For by their magic aid we'll keep
A host of ills at bay.
Our happy hearts, like tireless bees,
Have revel'd 'mid the flowers,
And hiv'd a store of summer sweets
To cheer Life's wintry hours.
While Memory lives, and Love remains,
We'll ask no more than this;
But ever sing in grateful strains,
"We've had our share of bliss."

ADVICE TO A DAUGHTER.

There is one point, my daughter, which is too important to be omitted; I refer to the deportment which it becomes you to maintain towards the other sex. The importance of this, both as it respects yourself and others, you can scarcely estimate too highly. On one hand, it has much to do in forming your own character; and I need not say that any lack of prudence in this respect, even for a single hour, may expose you to evils which no subsequent caution could enable you effectually to repair. On the other hand, the conduct of every female who has the least consideration, may be expected to exert an influence on the character of every gentleman with whom she associates; and that influence will be for good or evil, as she exhibits, or fails to exhibit a deportment which becomes her. So commanding is this influence, that it is safe to calculate upon the character of any community, from knowing the privileged standard of female character; and that can scarcely be regarded as an exaggerated maxim, which declares that "women rule the world."

Let me counsel you, then, never to utter an expression, or do an act, which even looks like soliciting any gentleman's attention. Remember that every expression of civility, to be of any value, must be perfectly voluntary, and any wish on your part, whether directly or indirectly expressed, to make yourself a favorite, will be certain to awaken the disgust of all who know it. I would not recommend to you anything like prudish or affected reserve, but even this is not so unfortunate an extreme as an excessive forwardness. While you modestly accept any attentions which propriety warrants, let there be no attempt at artful insinuation on one hand, or at taking a man's heart by storm on the other.

Be not ambitious to be considered a belle. Indeed I had rather you would be almost any thing else, which does not involve gross moral obloquy, than this. It is the fate of most belles, that they become foolishly vain, think of nothing and care for nothing beyond personal display; and not unfrequently sacrifice themselves in a mad bargain, which involves their destinies for life. The more of solid and enduring esteem you enjoy, the better; and you ought to gain whatever of this you can by honorable means; but to be admired, caressed and flattered, for mere accidental qualities, which involve nothing of intellectual or moral worth, ought to render any girl who is the subject of it, an object of pity. You are at liberty to desire the good opinion of every gentleman of your acquaintance; but it would be worse than folly in you to be ambitious of a blind admiration.

I will only add, that you ought to be on your guard against the influence of flattery. Rely on it, the man who flatters you, whatever he may profess, is not your friend. It were a much kinder office, and a real mark of friendship to admonish you tenderly, yet honestly, of your faults. If you yield a little to flattery, you have placed yourself on dangerous ground, and if you continue to yield you are not improbably undone.—Sprague.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

From the Advocate of Moral Reform.

STORY OF A MISSIONARY PIONEER.

My dear Children, I am going to tell you a true story, and one that you can understand and remember. You have ofter heard about Missionaries, and some of you have seen them and heard them talk of the little heathen children, and their heathen mothers, and try to show you how much greater the blessings God has given to you than to the poor heathen. Perhaps some of you will recollect how kindly the good Missionary, Doct. Scudder, talked to you, and perhaps you could tell now if you should try, some of the things that he said to you. Missionaries, my dear children, like good ministers, are the Lord's servants, and if you mind what they say to you, you will please our Heavenly Father. The Lord Jesus Christ was a great and good Missionary. He came here to save lost sinners, and when his mission was almost done and he was going away from earth, he bid his disciples, those whom he came to save, by dying for them—to "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." He told them also, that he would be with them always, even to the end of the world. They were not to see him as when he spoke to them here, but he was to be with them unseen, and do for them what they asked, just as much as though they could see him.

More than thirty years ago, Mr. Judson, of whom I am going to tell you, read what the Lord Jesus said to his disciples, and then he heard a kind voice whispering softly in his heart, and bidding him go far away and tell the poor heathen that Jesus loved them, had purchased salvation for them—a crown of glory and treasures in Heaven, that they might have for nothing if they would only forsake sin and give him their hearts.

With a few other beloved fellow-Christians, he often went to a retired grove to pray that God would open a way for them and direct them in this great work. Mr. Judson loved the Lord Jesus Christ more than he loved his parents, or his home, or country, and he wanted to do just what he would have him, and so he bid his friends in America farewell and set sail in a ship, to cross the stormy ocean. Mrs. Judson went with him, and so did Mr. and Mrs. Newell. They were the first Missionaries ever sent from this country. They did not go alone at all, for God went with them, as he had promised, and they felt that he would protect them and bless them. This thought made them very happy—though they were going to a dark, unfriendly, heathen country, where their lives would be in peril and they must see great trials. Well, the great God watched over them till they got safe across the wide ocean. Dr. Carey, a good Missionary from England, met them on their arrival and bid them welcome to India. But they were soon treated unkindly by the Government, and ordered to go away in the same ship in which they came, and they had no quiet abiding place for many months. While thus unsettled they were exposed to great perils on the sea and on the land, and in a few weeks one of their number, Mrs. Harriet Newell, was taken from them to Heaven. Every little boy and girl who has not read the life of this good woman, should read it, and pray to the dear Savior to make them as good as she was, and as willing to lay down their lives for his sake.

After some time, Mr. and Mrs. Judson began their Missionary work in Rangoon. There they labored alone, surrounded by none but poor heathen idolaters, till they had learned the Burman language and could begin to tell the natives of the love of Jesus. Then Mr. Judson wrote tracts for the people, and some more Missionaries arriving with a printing press, the tracts were printed. Mr. Judson then commenced the translation of the Gospel of Mathew, and before it was done, he began to have evidence that God was blessing his labors. He toiled on from year to year, and by and by had the pleasure of preaching the gospel in a Burman Zayat (Church) to a small company of converted heathen. This made him very happy, and repaid him a thousand times for all he had suffered. But the worst of his trials had not yet come.

In the year 1824, a war was commenced against the Burmans, and very soon Mr. Judson was seized on suspiscion of being a spy—his limbs were bound with an instrument of torture, and he was then, by order of the King, put in three pair of iron fetters and thrust into a death prison. Here his kind companion was allowed to visit him, and though almost overcome by the sight of his suffering, God gave her strength to do much in his behalf. This good man was shut up in a loathsome prison for near two years, deprived of wholesome air, and much of the time of the use of his limbs, afflicted with fever and frequently expecting to meet a cruel death. Not long after his release, his beloved wife, worn down by the care, fatigue and suffering that she had endured during his imprisonment, was taken dangerously ill and soon died. Mr. J. felt his loss very much, for she had been as an angel of mercy to him through all the trying scenes of his Missionary life. Never did woman evince more untiring devotion to the companion of her life—more true Christian heroism, meekness and fortitude in days of peril and adversity. She was spared while he most needed her, and then "she was not, for God took her." Her kind husband felt how sweet it must be for her to rest her weary head on Jesus' bosom in the mansions above, and he could not wish her back again. He was left companionless, but the God of missions was still near him, and his heart was made strong for his great work.

As years rolled on, more and more of the poor heathen were converted. He continued to preach to them and to teach them, write books and translate the Bible for them, and thus he has spent the best part of his life in doing good. Others have joined him in these labors of love, and there are now many Churches and many hundreds of converts in Burmah. In Arracan and the Churches east, it is said there are now three thousand one hundred converts.

A few years after the first Mrs. Judson died, the Lord gave to Mr. J. another of his dear children to take her place. She too was a faithful help-meet, and God spared her to him for nearly ten years, and then he called her also, to his own glorious home. Mr. J. left Burmah with her last April, hoping the sea voyage and change of scene would restore her health. They had three small children with them and left three others in India. But Mrs. J. did not live to come to America. At St. Helena, a rocky Island far off in the Ocean, she died, and was buried, leaving her husband again alone, and his dear children motherless.

Do you think, dear reader, that this good man loves the work of missions any less because he has had so many trials? No, no. He is now in our country for a little while, but he says, he wants to go back again and toil and die among the heathen. If all the souls that he has been and shall yet be the means of saving, are set as stars in his Heavenly crown, don't you think he will have as large a reward as he can desire?

My dear Children, you are young now. The journey of life is yet before you, and God permits you to choose what path you will take. As you grow older, will not some of you choose, as Mr. Judson did, to be Missionaries? There are yet many millions of heathen on the earth who have not had the Bible and have never heard that Jesus died to save them. If you should live, and could do as much as Mr. Judson has to make precious souls forever happy and forever holy, would you not like to do it at any cost? Would not this be far better than to become as rich as Mr. Astor, or as great as Napoleon? Don't you think if you make up your minds to live to do good and then do it, that you will be glad of having made such a choice when you come to die? Think of it, dear children, and when you read your Bible in your room alone, and kneel down to pray, ask sincerely for a holy heart; ask for grace to fit you to be the servants of Christ, and while you live on earth, to do his will "as it is done in Heaven." Then if the Lord should call you as he has others, you will be ready to answer, "Lord here am I, send me." Children now as young as you, will by and by, have a great work to do (either at home or abroad,) in the conversion of this wicked world; will you not go ask your parents to please to train you for this best of service?

A WEEK IN PHILADELPHIA.

I spent a week in Philadelphia, to transact some business with which I was providentially connected. I arrived on the day after the close of the public meetings which the Baptists had been holding to aid Foreign Missions. It is generally known, that several of the untiring, self-denying, and cross-bearing missionaries from Burmah are now in this country. A meeting was held in each of the Baptist churches in the city, where collections and subscriptions were taken. The amount collected and subscribed was fourteen thousand dollars. This they intend to pay yearly; and surely they can do it, for the gold and the silver is the Lord's, not ours.

Attending these meetings, were Mr. Judson, Mr. Kincaid, and Mr. Abbott, who have been faithful missionaries in Burmah for many years. Notwithstanding my time was much taken up with my business, yet I was favored with a number of interviews with Mr. Judson, and heard much from his own lips that was truly interesting. He left New England, the place of his nativity, thirty-three years ago, in company with three others. The history of the American Baptist Missionary Society is identified with him. The general opinion among people is, that Mr. Judson is an old man. We do not wonder at this, when we consider what he has passed through, having been persecuted, whipped, imprisoned, and sentenced to death, from which he was providentially delivered. He has buried two wives who were faithful baborers with him in the gospel, and a number of children. Well may people suppose that he is a man beginning to show the effects of infirmity and age. But he exhibits the activity and vigor of youth. His age is fifty-eight, yet he might easily pass for a man of forty-five.

It has been reported, that he returned to this country for his health. He says that is not so. He has always enjoyed good health. But he returned for his wife's health, hoping that a sea voyage, and a change of climate, might again restore her. But in this he was disappointed. She died on the passage, and was buried on the Island of St. Helena. Another object he had in coming was to bring his children, that they might be bred up in this favored country. One of them is ten, the other eight, and the third seven years old.

It was reported, also, that he had lost the use of the English language, and could only speak through an interpreter. This is a mistake. He mingles more or less with English society, and has always used the language when necessary. On his passage to this country he took a cold, which affected his throat, and having naturally a weak voice, he found that it would not admit of his addressing large congregations, so that he often spoke a few sentences to an individual who communicated it to the assembly. He could now address a small assembly, though he has not attempted it but once or twice.

He is very sociable indeed, and delights to converse upon subjects connected with the salvation of the heathen. He often speaks of the prospects in Burmah, but is rather unwilling to talk about his troubles and trials; and whenever I referred to them, he would be much affected, and for the moment past the power of utterance. His interests are identified with the cause of God in Burmah. He considers that as his country, and the people there as his people, and always prays for the churches there established. He wishes to return in the spring, to resume his labors in that land of sin and darkness. His three children he designs to leave in this country, where they will be brought up by kind friends. This is a great trial to him, but he is satisfied that it will be for the best to leave them here in a Christian land.

Mr. Judson has lived to see idolatry tremble, and lose many of its votaries. About sixty churches have been established, numbering not far from six thousand communicants. He has translated the entire Bible into the Burmese language, and parts of it into various other languages by the help of others, besides preparing many other books of minor importance, such as Hymn Books, Grammars, Spelling Books, &c. He is now engaged in preparing a Dictionary in the Burmese language, which he is anxious to complete. He is also anxious to revise the Bible which has been published.

Knowing that I was a Seventh-day Baptist, the subject of our difference was often the theme of our conversation. He took the position, at first, of sweeping the Old Testament clear by the board, as a law-book, to be used only as a book of reference for past events; that there is nothing obligatory but what is expressed more clearly in the New Testament than in the Old. He considered the ten commandments to be a meager set of rules, not even expressing love to God. His object appeared to be, to get clear of that old "Jewish" Sabbath, which has so much bondage in it. Having blended the moral law with the Abrahamic covenant, he could not see how we could keep the Sabbath and not be tinctured with Judaism. He was brought up in the belief, that that covenant was yet perpetuated by infant baptism. And when he renounced that error, he says the fourth commandment went with it. But he is no more willing to do without a Sabbath than others of a similar sentiment. Hence he substitutes the first day, not only because it is generally believed that Christ rose on that day, but, putting many small things together, he thinks that it amounts to something. He is not certain that Christ rose on that day, neither is he certain that the apostles always assembled on that day, though he has been of that opinion. About this he is not so particular; but his object is to put away the Sabbath which God has commanded us to "remember and keep holy." That awful Jewish Sabbath, though it was made for man, yet some seem to suppose that God was cruel in its appointment, and that there must be bondage in it. O, when will the Sabbath be to the church a delight? Lord hasten that happy time! Some may be astonished at such views, but they are not uncommon. We find more disagreement among Christians on this point of theology, than any other, in theory if not in practice. Their building must be like the tower of Babel; it can never be completed, for their language is already confounded.

Notwithstanding in this we think Dr. Judson in a great error, yet he is the man who for years has had our prayers, and we have been made glad by hearing from time to time that the work of the Lord was prospering in his hands. Long since, I trust, we have learned to put on that charity which covereth a multitude of sins. He is, humanly speaking, a great man. To see him and hear him talk, is to see the man as he is—the man of God, both in nature and in grace. It is desirable that he may return to Burmah, and live long to complete the works he has now in progress, as no one could finish them as well as himself.

The cause of religion in Philadelphia, as in other places, is low. O that Zion may arise and trim her lamps, that her light may shine forth in the midst of darkness.

DEPRAVITY.

That man is depraved, is admitted by all Christians, but all do not hold the same views respecting the nature and extent of the moral defection. It may, however, turn out that the difference lies more in the words and phrases employed to express depravity, than in the sentiment intended to be communicated.

All depravity must have its seat in the soul, and develope itself in the thoughts and feelings of the mind, and these thoughts and feelings are not to be distinguished from the mind itself, for they are the mind, thinking and feeling. The term depravity then, does not express something deposited in the soul, separate therefrom, but it describes a particular state of the soul, which is the reverse of a state of holiness; hence, it is the soul that is depraved.

The human mind possesses certain powers and susceptibilities which render it capable of various mental operations, feelings, and emotions, called mental states; when these are all right, when they are excited only by such objects as should excite them, and only in the direction and degree which is proper, the mental state is a state of holiness, or there is no depravity. But when they are excited by what ought not to excite them, and are excited in an undue degree, and in a wrong direction, the mental state is a state of depravity or unholiness.

The powers and susceptibilities of the mind are all good in themselves, while depravity lies exclusively in their perversion, or in a tendency which they have imbibed through the fall to be wrongfully excited, as described above. Anger, hatred, malignity, and revenge, are developements of depravity, yet the susceptibility of the soul which renders man capable of these passions and feelings has not been acquired through the fall, is not depravity, for God imparted that susceptibility to man when he formed the first human soul; and hence, depravity does not lie in the susceptibility itself, but in its perversion, or tendency to be improperly excited as stated above.

The above view may be illustrated thus: The susceptibility of the emotions of love and hatred was given to the human soul by the hand that formed it, that man might love that which is good and hate that which is evil, but the power of loving God and of hating evil is so perverted through the corruptions of the fall, that when certain forms of evil are presented, the feeling of hatred is not awakened but the feeling of love; and when certain forms of goodness are presented. the feelings of love are not awakened but the feeling of hatred, insomuch that sinners are said to be "haters of God." Thus the susceptibility which rendered man capable of loving God and of hating evil, is so perverted that he loves evil and hates God, and this constitutes depravity. When we talk of native depravity, or say that man is born depraved, we mean that his moral nature is so perverted that there is in his soul a tendency to the excitement of love by the approach of certain forms of evil, and a tendency to the excitement of hatred by the approach of certain forms of goodness. The excitement itself is a development of depravity, but the root of the evil must lie back of that, in the strong tendency to be thus excited to love by what should excite hatred, and to be excited to hatred by what should excite love. If the depravity consisted exclusively in the excitement, there would be no depravity in the absence of the exciting object, which we regard as absurd. In such case, a man might sleep away his depravity, for the excitement would not exist in sleep only as he should dream. Suppose the absence of what most inflames a man's most evil propensity, suppose something else for the time being to engross his attention, that evil propensity slumbers, that is, there is no evil excitement in that direction, but depravity is there in the tendency of the soul to the excitement, which renders the approach of the object only necessary to set it all on fire with sin. That there is now in the human soul a tendency to be excited to hatred by what should excite love, and to be excited to love by what should excite hatred, which did not exist in the soul of Adam before the fall, and that disease or weakness of the soul is a coming short of the perfection which God's perfect law requires, and consequently, is depravity, appears so plain that it is difficult to see how any one can deny it.

This view of depravity cannot fail to shed light on the subject of regeneration. Regeneration is the renewal of the soul. But in what sense is the soul renewed? The answer is, only in that sense in which it is depraved. If then, as has been maintained, depravity consists in the perversion of the powers and susceptibilities of the soul, regeneration must imply the reverting of those powers and susceptibilities to their proper office and direction. As the powers and susceptibilities of the soul, through which depravity is developed, are original and good in themselves, so regeneration is not a creation of new powers and susceptibilities, but a reclaimation of the perverted powers already existing. Keeping the illustration in view, depravity consists in loving what is hateful, and in hating what is lovely, so regeneration simply reverses this order of things.

The above view of depravity cannot fail to shed light on the subject of remaining corruption after regeneration. It consists in the remaining liability to the unholy excitements above described. For instance, a man has been particularly depraved in the passion called anger; he has indulged it, and has never received an insult without being sinfully angry.—He is regenerated, and of course this passion is renewed, but it is not pretended there is not remaining a greater liability of the soul to this passion than there would have been had he never indulged it. There is a weakness which is not felt by others and which he does not feel on other points, and this remaining weakness or tendency to be excited to anger is remaining depravity. But this is to be overcome by grace through faith. The first insult the man receives is felt as a powerful assault upon his soul, and he is strongly tempted to anger; but if he resists the temptation, which he may do, the next insult will be less powerful, and so he will grow stronger and stronger until he gets the entire victory, so that when he is smitten on one cheek he can without anger turn the other.

HINTS FOR YOUNG LADIES.

If young women waste in trivial amusements the prime season for improvement, which is between the ages of sixteen and twenty, they will hereafter regret the loss, when they come to feel themselves inferior in knowledge to almost every one they converse with; and above all, if they should ever be mothers, when they feel their own inability to direct and assist the pursuits of their children, then they find ignorance a severe mortification and a real evil. Let this animate their industry, and let not a modest opinion of their capacities be a discouragement to their endeavors after knowledge. A moderate understanding, with diligent and well directed application, will go much farther than a more lively genius, if attended with that impatience and inattention which too often accompany quick parts. It is not for want of capacity that so many women are such trifling, insipid companions, so ill qualified for the friendship and the conversation of a sensible man, or for the task of governing and instructing a family; it is often from the neglect of exercising the talents which they really have, and from omitting to cultivate a taste for intellectual improvement; by this neglect they lose the sincerest pleasures, which would remain when almost every other forsakes them, of which neither fortune or age can deprive them, and which would be a comfort and resource in almost every possible situation in life.

CLAY'S WIFE AND MOTHER.

Every one of these handbills was dictated by me to an amanuensis, whilst my hands and head were continually bathed with cold water, to keep the fever down to a point below the delirium. Every relative believed I would be murdered on Monday, and all but my wife and mother advised me to yield up the liberty of the press; but I preferred rather to die.—Cassius M. Clay.

Blessed be that wife and mother!
Woman's words are still the oil
For the torch when fails another,
In the night of bitter toil.

Woman's words are "half the battle,"
When the strife grows fierce and strong!
Heard, as music, 'mid the rattle
Of the crucifying throng.

"Give me," cried the gallant sailor,
"Thy sweet name, my lady fair!
It shall stir to deeds of valor
For some victim of despair."

Let the thunders of the million
Break from clouds of pent up wrath!
Underneath love's broad pavilion,
Smiles will greet the lightning's path.

Blessed be that wife and mother
By the couch of Freedom's Son!
Thou art strong, heroic brother!
Be the cry "On, Stanly, on!"

DR. WOLFF AMONG THE RECHABITES.

I left Saneef on November the 28th, and proceeded on the road to Sanaa, which I learnt was besieged by the Rechabites. Of course the caravan with which I was traveling, ran no small risk on this account. I therefore took a mule, and went on alone to Sanaa, desiring the chief of the caravan to wait until he heard from me. As soon as I had passed Matna, I saw a swarm of the Rechabites rushing to me, exclaiming, 'Hoo, hoo hoo!' Holding up my Bible, I stopped them at once, and they shouted, 'A Jew a Jew!' We dismounted, and sitting down, I told them that I saw twelve years ago, one of their nation in Mesopotamia, Moosa by name. Rechabites—Is your name Joseph Wolff?' W—'Yes.' They then embraced me. They were still in possession of the Bible I gave to Moosa twelve years before my arrival in Yemen.

I spent six days with the children of Rechab (Beni Arhad.) They drink no wine, plant no vineyards, sow no seed, live in tents, and remember the word of Jonadab the son of Rechab. With them were children of Israel of the tribe of Dan, who reside near Terim in Hatramawt, who expect, in common with the children of Rechab, the speedy arrival of the Messiah, in the clouds of heaven. Neither party now offers sacrifice. They requested me to remain among them and teach the doctrine of the Messiah, as they called the gospel, and to marry one of the daughters of Rechab. The children of Rechab say, 'We shall one day fight the battles of the Messiah, and march towards (Kuds) Jerusalem.' They are the descendants of those whom the Mohammedans call Yehood Kiaibar, who defeated Mohammed in several battles, but they were at last themselves defeated, for they had sinned, and the Lord of Toor (Sinai) was not with them. I sent them to the chief of the caravan to fetch about eighty Hebrew Bibles and Testaments, which I gave them. One of their party, Looloe, belonging to the powerful tribe of Hamdam, a friend of Beni Arhab, escorted me and the whole caravan safely within the gates of Sanaa, where I entered in the month of December. SINGULAR CEREMONIES OF THE NATIVE MEXICANS.

On the last day of the great cycle, (of the Mexicans, consisting of fifty two-years,) the sacred fires were extinguished in all their temples and dwellings, and the people devoted themselves to prayer. At the approach of night, no one dared to kindle a flame—their vessels of clay were broken, their garments rent, and whatever was precious destroyed as useless in the approaching ruin. In this mad superstition, pregnant women became the objects of peculiar horror to men; they covered their faces with paper masks; they imprisoned them in their granaries; and believed that when the final catastrophe occurred, these unfortunate females, transformed into tigers, would join with the demons, and avenge themselves for the injustice and cruelty of men. As soon as it became dark on that awful evening, a grand and solemn procession of new fire was commenced. The priests put on the garments of the various idols, and, followed by the sad and bewildered people, ascended a hill about six miles from the city. This mournful march was called the "procession of the gods," and was supposed to be their final departure from their temples and altars. When the solemn train had reached the top of the hill, it rested until the pleiades ascended the zenith, and then commenced the sacrifice of a human victim, stretched on the stone of a sacrifice, and covered on the breast by a wooden shield, which the chief priest inflamed by friction. The victim received the fatal blow, from the usual obsidian knife of sacrifice; and as soon as life was extinct, the machine to create the fire was put in motion on the board over his bosom. When the blaze had kindled, the body was thrown on an immense pile, the flames of which instantly ascended into the air, and denoted the promise of the sun's return. All who had been unable to join in the sacred procession of the departing gods, had climbed to the terraces of houses, and the tops of Teocallis, whence they strained their eyes towards the spot where the hoped-for flame was to appear, and, as soon as it burst upon their sight, hailed it with joyful shouts and acclamations, as a token of the benevolence of their gods, and the preservation of their race for another cycle. Runners, placed at regular distances from each other, held aloft torches of resinous pine, by which they transferred the new fire to each other, and carried it from village to village, throughout the empire, depositing it anew in every temple, whence it was again distributed to the dwellings of the people. When the sun arose above the horizon on the succeeding day, the shouting and joy were renewed by the people in the city, toward which at that moment, the priests took their line of returning march. It was the restoration of their gods to their deserted shrines. The imprisoned women were immediately released, the whole population clad themselves in new garments; the temples were purified and whitened, and every thing that was requisite for domestic comfort, splendor or necessity, was renewed, under the promise of renewed life and protection from the gods.

SHEPHERDS OF JUDEA.

Shortly after leaving the city, we met several flocks of sheep, preceded by their shepherds, walking slowly towards Jerusalem, and at once the full force of all the beautiful imagery, and the many touching similes derived from such scenes and associations, came vividly before me. These Arab shepherds, clad in the turbans and simple abbas worn by their class, and carrying a wooden crook in their hands, walked in front.

The sheep, which are a peculiar and very handsome breed, are mostly low sized; the foreparts of their bodies are of a fawn color, the hinder parts white; they have long, pendent, silken ears, and sweeping tails; their faces more oval and longer than the species in these countries, and they have altogether a more pleasing, docile and mild expression as to countenance.

Not one of them ventured before the shepherd, but stopped or quickened their pace as he did; or if a young or forward creature lagged behind, or strayed to either side, a single word from their leader, often a very look, brought it back, and checked its wandering.

These shepherds are often to be seen about sun-set slowly approaching the city from all sides, to seek shelter for their flocks, during the night, in some of the deep vallies by which it is surrounded, carrying the lambs in their bosoms. It is almost incredible, the influence that the shepherds of Palestine possess over their flocks; many of them have no dogs, but a word is quite sufficient to make them understand and obey the will of their shepherd.

He sleeps among them at night, and in the morning leads them forth to pasture; always walking before them, guiding them to those places where they can enjoy the best food, and resting when he thinks they have obtained a sufficiency, or during the heat of the day, in some cool shady place, where they will immediately lie down around him.

He has generally two or three favorite lambs which do not mix with the flock, but follow close at his side, frisking and fondling about him like dogs; indeed the degree of intelligence and understanding that exists between the Arab and his flock is truly astonishing. "They know his voice, and follow him;" and "he careth for his sheep." It was probably to such shepherds as these that the angel announced the glad tidings of the Saviour's birth. [Wilde's Narrative.

PERSECUTION PREVENTED.—At the end of Queen Mary's bloody reign, a commission was granted to one Dr. Cole, a bigoted papist, to go over to Ireland and commence a firey persecution against the Protestants of that kingdom. On coming to Chester, the Doctor was waited upon by the Mayor, and commenced conversation with him by saying, "Here is what shall lash the heretics of Ireland." Mrs. Edmunds, the landlady of the Inn, hearing these words, when the Doctor went down stairs with the Mayor, hastened into the room, opened the box, took the commission, and put a pack of cards in its place. When the Doctor returned, he put the box into the portmanteau without suspicion, and the next morning sailed for Dublin. On his arrival he waited on the Lord Lieutenant and privy council, to whom he made a speech relating to his business, and then presented the box to his Lordship; but on opening it, there appeared a pack of cards, with the knave of clubs uppermost. The Doctor was petrified, and assured the company that he had a commission, but what had become of it he could not tell. The Lord Lieutenant answered, "Let us have another commission and we will shuffle the cards meanwhile." Before the Doctor could get the commission renewed, the Queen died, and thus the persecution was prevented. [Christian Repository.

A STRIKING REMINISCENCE.—At the recent celebration of the bicentennary of the Westminster Assembly, in Scotland, Robert Paul, Esq., related the following anecdote, which may be new to many of our readers: When the committee of the Westminster Assembly, who were appointed to prepare an answer to the question, "What is God?" were engaged in the business, and it came to be decided which of them should prepare it, all stood aback from the task, each one feeling himself incompetent for the duty. At length it was agreed, for reasons not known, that it should be performed by the youngest man among them, whoever he should turn out to be. When the individual was selected, it was found he would not consent to engage in the duty, except on the condition that while he was so employed, the whole of his brethren should separately betake themselves to silent and earnest prayer, that he might be specially guided by the Divine Spirit in his work. To this they consented, and within a short time he produced that memorable answer, which for comprehensiveness and brevity has never been surpassed—"God is a Spirit, infinite, eternal and unchangeable in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth."

LAW AND GOSPEL.

NUMBER TEN.

In the progress of our investigations, we found a fixed principle, according to which laws are distributed into different kinds. By the application of this principle, we have determined what is the Moral Law, and have found that every one of the ten commandments must be classed under this head. We have also remarked incidentally, that whatever other moral precepts may be found in the Bible, they are but the diversified applications of the great elementary principles embodied in the Decalogue.

We have also seen, that Gospel literally signifies good news, and is applied particularly to that good news which is published to mankind concerning Jesus Christ, that "he came to seek and to save that which was lost." It is not a law in the strict sense of the word; it is rather a power by which transgressors of law are saved. In the language of the Apostle, "it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. 1: 16. See also 1 Cor. 1: 18. Law is the standard of holiness; Gospel is the power which conforms us to that standard. Law is the rule which condemns us; Gospel is the power which delivers us from that condemnation.

But what is it that gives the gospel its power? The Apostle teaches us, that it is the cross. 1 Cor. 1: 18. In other words, it is that atoning sacrifice, which Christ offered for our sins. By that sacrifice the guilt of our sins is cancelled, and we are thus delivered from condemnation, and brought into a state of justification before God;—which, as the Apostle shows, is the very reason why he considers the gospel to be the power of God. Rom. 1: 17. Such a power could be exerted by nothing else;—not by the law. Rom. 8: 3. Not by any contrivance of men. 1 Cor. 1: 21.

Again, the gospel has power, not only to take away the guilt of sin, and deliver us from condemnation, but also to sanctify us, and bring us into conformity to the holiness required by the law. But in what consists its power to do this? In its securing to us the influences of the Holy Spirit, which works in us a hearty love for the law, and makes us esteem all its precepts concerning all things to be right. Ps. 119: 128. The gospel thus becomes the ministration of the Spirit. 2 Cor. 3: 8.

We read, that the law was given by Moses; but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. John 1: 17. Through the ministry of Moses a perfect standard of holiness was given to men, but not that grace or power, which takes away the guilt of sin. All the sacrifices connected with his ministration were ineffectual for that purpose: it was not possible for them to take away sin. Heb. 10: 1—4. It was reserved for the sacrifice of Christ to do that. Hence, though Moses gives the rule or standard of holiness the grace, by which we are delivered from condemnation for our want of conformity to the standard, is by Jesus Christ.

Farther, although Moses laid before men a perfect standard, yet he could not dispense to them that spiritual influence, which was necessary to produce a conformity to the standard; nor were the offerings of the Levitical economy sufficient to secure it. The grace by which that is done, is by Christ alone. It is ridiculous to suppose, that the Evangelist in this passage teaches, that the law is entirely susperseded and abrogated by that grace and truth which comes by Jesus Christ.

Because Moses could not by any of his sacrifices take away the guilt of sin, and deliver from condemnation, his ministration was the ministration of condemnation. 2 Cor. 3: 9. That law, which he laid before the people, perfect as it was, —holy, and just, and good as it was,—did but condemn to death the transgressors of it. It was the ministration of death. Ver. 7.

Because Jesus Christ by his own sacrifice could take away sin, and deliver from the condemnation of that law which Moses had ministered. His ministration was, and is, the ministration of righteousness. Ver. 9.

Because Moses could only lay before the people the simple precept of the law, without any spiritual influence to promote their conformity to it, his was the ministration of the letter. It was of the letter only.

Because Jesus Christ does more than merely minister the precept, or letter of the law; that is, because in addition to this he ministers a spiritual influence to promote the conformity of his people to the law, his is the ministration of the spirit. Ver. 8.

The gospel is called the ministration of the spirit, not because it requires any different duties from what that law does, but because it promotes conformity to those duties through the work of the Spirit. The duties themselves are the very same. Hence the binding obligation of the law is acknowledged by the gospel. See 1 John 3: 4; Rom. 6: 15, 3: 31; James 2: 8—11; Matt. 19: 17, 5: 17—19. A precept of the Decalogue ministered only in the letter, and not accompanied by any spiritual influence, is a precept of law. But that same precept, ministered by Jesus Christ, and attended with a work of the Spirit to write it on the fleshy table of the heart, (2 Cor. 3: 3,) becomes a gospel precept.

Again, the gospel differs from the law, not in regard to the duties enjoined, but in regard to the motives by which those duties are enforced. Is the motive drawn from the fear of death in case of disobedience, or from the hope of being justified in case of obedience? Then it is a precept of law. Is the motive drawn from the death of Christ as a sacrifice for our sins? Then it is a gospel precept. The same duty is either a law precept, or a gospel precept, according to the motive by which it is sanctioned. Spoken by Moses, the ten commandments are law duties; spoken by Jesus Christ, the same commandments are duties of the gospel. For Moses by his ministration could give no other sanction to them than, "the man that doeth them, shall live by them," and "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." But Jesus Christ gives them no such sanctions. In regard to the life of his people, he does not say, "keep these commandments, and live," but "because I live ye shall live also;" while he urges their obedience to the commandments by his own love in dying for them.

In referring to the precepts "written and engraven upon stones," Paul teaches, that something was done away. But what was it that was done away? Not the precepts themselves, but the Mosaic ministration of them, which was a ministration of death. He does not say, that the commandments were done away.

If they were done away, how would Christ's superiority over Moses be tested? Moses ministered them according to the sanctions of the Old Covenant, yet he could not thus write them in the hearts of the people. Now how shall Christ's superiority be tested, unless he takes those same precepts, and does with them what Moses could not do—viz. writes them on the hearts of his people? The superiority of one over another is evinced by their power and skill expended upon the same things, not upon different things. *

THE SABBATH ENTERPRISE.

The object in view of the true friends of the Sabbath, is to bring the people up to the enjoyment of the blessings which God has vouchsafed to those who keep the Sabbath according to His commandment. The first question that presents itself to the inquiring mind in regard to an enterprise of so much seeming difficulty, is—not whether it can be effected, but—would the accomplishment of it be a public good?—or, in other words, would it be the establishment of a truth by which men would be benefited? This being answered in the affirmative, who, believing the truth, could set himself in array against it, merely because great difficulties stand in the way of the desired reform? Suppose the majority of the world's inhabitants professed to hate God and their neighbors with a perfect hatred; would that justify the minority in abusing and hating God and their neighbors? Surely not. Then how unreasonably do men object to the restoration of the Sabbath as it came from God, merely because the work would be attended with great difficulties.

Many seem to suppose, that unless all men can be brought to keep the seventh day at once, no blessing at all can be secured, or, at least, that in the observance of the first day, blessings which God has no where promised, can be obtained as easily as promised blessings. God's blessings for keeping the Sabbath can only be obtained in the observance of what God has enjoined as the means of obtaining those blessings. It therefore follows, that the good promised to mankind in the observance of the seventh day, cannot be expected in the keeping of the first day in its stead. Consequently, while the world neglects to keep the seventh day, which God has appointed, they must be content to remain without his blessing, or without any of the benefit of it as a divine institution. If prosperity and spiritual growth attend a congregation worshiping on the first day of the week, it can with no show of reason be attributed to that feature of their practice, but to that part of their worship which is in accordance with the divine promises. But even this is not guaranteed, where men come to the knowledge of the truth, and do not yield obedience to it; for the words of Christ himself are an injunction upon any such pretension, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Even their worship will be in vain while "teaching for doctrine the commandments of men."

A thorough Sabbath reform would then be a blessing to the whole world, and ought to be effected. Having the favor of men, it would be accomplished speedily; but if not favored by all, still the blessing of God promised to such as observe his Sabbath, will not be lost to those who do obey him in its sanctification according to the commandment. There is encouragement, therefore, for the few engaged in this great work to put forth the little strength they have—for they shall not lose their reward. Peradventure God may give success beyond the most sanguine expectation of his people, and the whole world be brought to the light of this truth. LUTHER.

REVIVAL IN HEBRON, PA.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

The Lord has been doing great things for us in this place, whereof we are glad. About three weeks since, we commenced a series of meetings in Hebron, Potter Co., Pa., although not particularly anticipated by us previously; and it was soon discovered that backsliders began to return, and haughty sinners to mourn. The meetings assuming that character, we thought it best to continue them every evening for a short time at least. They were continued for about ten or twelve evenings, when backsliders were reclaimed and sinners converted to God. Last Sabbath I had the privilege of baptizing, and receiving to membership in the church, eight willing converts; some others may be expected to follow soon. There is considerable excitement on the subject of the Sabbath in Potter County, I having had occasion to preach upon that subject several times this fall and winter, and some three or four having already embraced it, while others are still inquiring. The Macedonian cry reaches us from many parts, "Come over and help us." ROWSE BABCOCK.

Hebron, Pa., Jan. 12, 1846.

SABBATH PETITIONS IN THE LEGISLATURE OF PENNSYLVANIA.—Through our attentive correspondent, Dr. Wm. M. Fahnestock, we are furnished with the Harrisburg Democratic Union of January 14, from which we learn that the petitions of Sabbath-keepers in that State are being forwarded to the Legislature with commendable promptness. In the House of Representatives, on Monday, Jan. 12, Mr. Stewart of Franklin County, presented the petition of nine of the Seventh-day Baptists of Snow Hill, to exempt them from the payment of fines for working on Sunday. Mr. M'Farlan presented several petitions from Seventh-day Baptists for an exemption from fines for the non-observance of Sunday. Mr. Ives and Mr. Edie presented several, relative to the Seventh-day Baptists. Mr. Smith presented one from citizens of Lancaster for the passage of a law exempting Seventh-day Baptists from fines imposed by the act of 1794.

SABBATH PETITIONS IN THE LEGISLATURE OF NEW-JERSEY.—On Thursday last, Jan. 22d, in the House, Mr. Corey presented a petition from citizens of Essex in relation to their religious rights and privileges in observing the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, which was read and referred to the select committee on that subject. On Friday, Jan. 23d, Mr. Cannon presented a supplementary memorial from Wm. M. Fahnestock, M. D., in relation to the religious observance of the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath; also a copy of a letter from "the Father of his country," in relation to religious toleration; both which were read, and referred to the select committee on that subject. [Mr. Fahnestock's Petition, together with the letter from General Washington, shall appear next week.]

HOW IT WORKS.—A case has just occurred in Boston, which shows in an admirable manner the working of the law of that city for the protection of Sunday. It is stated in the papers, that Mr. E. W. Parkman, a worthy and deserving young man, was brought before the Police Court and fined three dollars for the crime of selling a newspaper on Sunday. To a superficial observer, this would look very well, and indicate that the good people of Boston are exceedingly conscientious about keeping holy the Sunday. But the facts in the case put entirely a different face upon it; for it appears from the Boston Times, that the person who complained of Mr. Parkman, and secured his punishment, is himself the driver of a Sunday omnibus between Boston and a neighboring town! Conscientious man! He could hear the deafening noise of his own omnibus thundering along over the pavement of a city street, without compunction; but the idea of a newsvender offering his wares for sale on Sunday, was shocking—and so the poor man must be fined three dollars therefor! This is consistency with a witness. It shows, however, the natural working of the Sunday laws; they put it in the power of any blind bigot or designing hypocrite to wreak his vengeance upon the man who may have offended him, and that under the cloak of religion.

STATUTE LAW AND THE LAW OF GOD.—In a book entitled, "The People's Rights Reclaimed," written by Judge Herttell, may be found some wholesome truths mixed up with much which we deem error. He speaks, in one section of the position often taken in vindication of the statutes against Sunday labor, that the law of God requires the observance of a Sabbath, and that it matters not what particular day is observed provided one day of the seven is observed. The following paragraph, which occurs in this section, we pronounce wholesome truth:—

"The incompatibility of the statute law, with the alledged command of God, will appear singularly striking when we undertake to read them together. Thus, God commands us to keep the seventh day (of the week) as a Sabbath—our legislature commands us to keep the first. God commands us to do no work on the seventh day—our legislature tells us we may do as much work as we please on that day. . . . . Pray now let me ask, which is the paramount authority, the alledged command of God, or that of the legislature? If the latter, then the alledged command of God is set at nought. If the former, the legislative command is left without even the shadow of justification. The reader can take his choice of these difficulties, or escape from the dilemma here presented, in the way he may think most likely to affect that object. It would seem, however, rather unfortunate for the character of the law in question, that it should be condemned by the very authority quoted and appealed to, in its justification."

DESPERATE.—It is said that "drowning men catch at straws;" and if we mistake not, this saying has been pretty fully illustrated by the avidity with which even the religious newspapers have caught up and published a paragraph concerning the "alteration of the Jewish Sabbath" by certain nominal Jews in Germany. That paragraph was probably written by some penny-a-liner, who did not know enough about the facts in the case to distinguish between what he calls a "large body of German Jews," and a few restless spirits, more infidels than Jews, who wished to save themselves from inconvenience by keeping the Sunday instead of the Sabbath. However, the paragraph once written, it has been copied and circulated from Dan to Beersheba, as conclusive proof that after all the Jews themselves do not think it makes much difference whether they keep the seventh day or the first day. Surely persons who make such a use of this movement by a few spiritualzing Germans, do but illustrate the saying, that "drowning men catch at straws."

RELIGION AND THE STATE.—A cotemporary very justly remarks, that "history records few truths of more importance, and none, certainly, that the people should more generally know, than that when Religion gets the staff of State in her hands, she is ever more for breaking the heads than mending the hearts of her subjects."

N. J. YEARLY MEETING AND ITS RESULTS.

The churches in New Jersey have been in the practice, for more than a century, of holding a Yearly Meeting in the month of October, alternately at Piscataway and Shiloh. Accordingly the meeting was held the present year with the church in Piscataway. Although this church has been in a pleasant and growing condition for years, yet there was but little spiritual engagedness. The sloth that hung like an incubus upon us, became alarming, and the more spiritual part of the church made it a subject of prayer and conversation. Looking forward to the approaching meeting, they ceased not to pray to God, that it might be made the means of much good to this branch of Zion.

On the 17th of October, the usual time of holding the meeting, it commenced. We had for our assistance Bro. Alexander Campbell of Pawcatuck, R. I., and Bro. Solomon Carpenter of Shiloh, N. J. They came to us "filled with the Spirit." They preached the truth with power. Our expectations were in a measure realized. The saints were quickened; some who had wandered were reclaimed; and a few, who were in the road to death, were pricked in their hearts, and led to cry out, "What shall we do to be saved." Since that time we have received six by baptism, and one has been restored. We trust that the seed sown will yet spring up and bring forth a more plentiful harvest. Some have obtained a hope, who have not yet publicly professed Christ before men.

W. B. GILLETT.

New Market, N. J., January 17, 1846.

THE BAPTIST GUARDIAN AND CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER, is the title of an able religious paper recently commenced in London, Eng., by Francis Newton. In the number for December 12, 1845, forwarded to us by our brother Wm. Henry Black, Pastor of the Mill Yard Sabbath-keeping Church, we find the account which we published of the organization of a Seventh-day Baptist Church in the City of New-York. The following editorial note accompanies the article from the Recorder:—

"In our last week's Guardian we stated that the Seventh-day Baptists of America number sixty churches, with fifty-two ministers; they have about six thousand members in association. We are informed that there are several other unassociated churches; but they have not hitherto had a church in the capitol of the State in which they are most numerous."

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—At the close of the third quarter of the Society's current year, January 15, it had received for sales of publications and donations $92,486, being very nearly the same amount as for the corresponding months of the year preceding. The issues of publications in the same period amounted to $90,493 39, of which 14,358,342 pages, value $9,572 23, were grants for the destitute. The number of colporteurs and agents for volume circulation in commission was 129, laboring in 29 States and Territories, chiefly in the most destitute parts of the country. There was due on bills sanctioned and notes payable before April 15, $9,127 81; estimated expense of sustaining colporteurs and agents for the remaining quarter $14,000; grants for the destitute $6,000; balance of $20,000 for Foreign and Pagan lands remaining to be raised, upwards of $16,000—making upwards of $46,000 which will be needed in donations before April 15, the close of the Society's financial year.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.—The friends of temperance in England have resolved on holding a World's Temperance Convention in the summer of next year—probably in the latter end of June, or the commencement of July. Delegates are invited from all the principal societies in every country. The object of the Convention is threefold—To ascertain the state of the temperance question in all parts of the globe—To receive suggestions as to the most effectual method of extending the temperance reformation—To attempt the formation of a temperance mission throughout the world.

CELEBRATION OF FRANKLIN'S BIRTH-DAY.—The Printers of Rochester celebrated the anniversary of Franklin's birth-day on the 16th inst. in good style. There were present about eighty members of the craft, among whom were Vice-Chancellor Whittlesey, formerly proprietor of the Republican—Everard Peck, who published the Rochester Telegraph as early as 1818—and several other distinguished persons connected with the press. The toasts and speeches were in character for the occasion, and many of them exceedingly interesting. Mr. William A. Welles closed his amusing and instructive remarks as follows:—

"When we look at the conductors of the public press, who would not be proud to be called a Printer? Who has not heard of John Lang, Benjamin Russell, Buckingham, Col. Wm. L. Stone, John Neal, Salma Hale, Selleck Osborn, Greeley, Geo. P. Morris, Thurlow Weed, Ritchie, Judge Beal, Croswell, Solomon Southwick, Senators Isaac Hill and Simon Cameron, and many others who might be mentioned? These talented writers were all of them, I believe, practical Printers. The late Prof. James D. Knowles, of Newton Theological Institution, who served his apprenticeship with Hugh Brown, Providence, R. I., was also a Printer. Dr. Baird, author of "The Star-Spangled Banner;" Samuel Woodworth; Rev. Dr. Potts; Prof. Stuart, of Andover; N. P. Willis; Edwin Forrest, as well as the present Lord Mayor of London, were also included in Mr. Welles's vocabulary."

PREJUDICE AGAINST COLOR.

We mentioned some weeks ago, that the New Bedford Lyceum had refused, by a formal vote, to admit colored persons to its advantages, or even to its lectures unless they would consent to sit in a sort of "Negro Pew" called the "North Gallery." A more unrighteous or contemptible decision, we think, was never made. We are heartily glad to learn that the institution is receiving that rebuke which it justly merits. Two distinguished scholars—Ralph Waldo Emerson and Charles Sumner—have peremptorily refused to lecture before the Lyceum, on the ground that it has undertaken to establish within its jurisdiction a distinction of caste. Mr. Emerson, in his letter declining the honor of delivering an address, says that the recent vote so embarrasses him that he should not know how to speak to the company. He thinks, that as the Lyceum exists for popular education, it should bribe and importune the humblest and most ignorant to come in, and exclude nobody; or, if anybody, certainly the most cultivated. Mr. Sumner thinks, that in lecturing before a Society which has embodied prejudice against color among its laws, and has thus formally reversed an injunction of the highest religion and politics, he would seem to lend his sanction to what is most alien to his soul, and to join with them in disobedience to that command which teaches us to regard as one blood all the children of the earth. He therefore begs to be excused. The following paragraphs from his letter we commend to the careful perusal of such persons as imagine that their prejudices are natural and therefore justifiable:—

"One of the cardinal truths, both of religion and freedom, is the equality and brotherhood of man. In the sight of God, and of all just institutions, the white man can claim no precedence or exclusive privilege from his color. It is 'the accident of an accident' that places a human soul beneath the dark shelter of an African countenance, rather than beneath our colder complexion. Nor can I conceive any application of the benign injunction, do unto others as ye would have them do unto you, more pertinent than to the white man, who founds a discrimination between his fellow on a difference of skin.

"It is well known, that the prejudice of color, which is akin to the stern and selfish spirit that holds a fellow man in slavery, is peculiar to our country. All will remember the two youths, of African blood, who gained the highest honors in the College at Paris in the winter of 1838, and dined on the same day with the King of France, the descendant of St. Louis, and of Louis the Great, at the palace of the Tuileries. In Paris, I have sat for weeks, at the School of Law, on the same benches with colored persons, listening, like myself, to the learned lectures of Degerando, and of Rossi; nor do I remember observing, in the throng of sensitive young men by whom they were surreunded, any feelings toward them except of companionship and respect. In Italy, at the Convent of Palozzuola, on the shores of the Alban Lake, and on the site of the ancient Alba Longa, I have seen for several days a native of Abyssinia, only recently conducted from his torrid home, and ignorant of the language that was spoken about him, yet mingling with the Franciscan Friars, whose guest he was, in delightful and affectionate familiarity. In these examples may be discerned the proper influence of the Christian spirit."

SCRAPS OF USEFUL INFORMATION.

COURSE NO. 3.

In looking over the expenditures of the British Government, for 1835, we find that about $20,000,000 were paid to 114,752 Non-Effective men in the Army, Navy and Ordinance Department, embracing, probably, half pay officers and other pensioners. The expenditures, during the same year, for the Civil Government, including all allowances to the several branches of the Royal Family, and to the King of Belgium; for the establisment of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; salaries and expensives of both Houses of Parliament, including printing; for the whole Judiciary Department, including the expenses of the Police and Criminal Prosecutions, and all the salaries and superannuation allowances to foreign ministers and consuls, and for all other pensions and annuites on the civil list, did not amount to $13,000,000! seven millions of dollars a year less than the sum paid to these non-effective, do-nothing men connected with the British Army and Navy. There are 363 Judges in the United Kingdom, whose salaries amount to $1,785,022 per annum. Nor are they non-effective men in their department, but men who honor the British name and give dignity to human laws throughout Christendom. Yet for all their profound learning and assiduous labor, they do not receive in eleven years what is paid in one to do-nothings of the British Army and Navy!

But let us come back to this model republic and see if the like abuses exist in its economy. In looking into the Register of the U. S. Navy, we find this to be a fact with regard to the actual service and pay of our naval officers in the earlier periods of our national existence. From 1815 to 1823, a period of about 8 years, there were 28 Captains, whose average time of service during this period, was less than two years; thirty Commandants, a little over two years; one hundred and seventy-two Lieutenants, less than three and a half; and eight Chaplains, less than one and a half year. In the Naval Register for 1845, it will be seen that, of 1,391 naval officers under the pay of the Government, three hundred and sixty-nine were waiting orders! Their salaries, at the fixed allowance for officers thus waiting orders, amounted to $444,170! Add to this the salaries of 8 Marine officers and engineers, waiting orders the same year, we have the sum of $448,336 paid to the non-effective officers of our navy. Now the sum paid in 1845 to 278 members of Congress and to 38 Judges of the Supreme and District Courts of the U. S., was $445,500, less than the amount received by these naval officers while waiting orders. It would be easy to prove that the non effective men in this department alone receive annually more pay than is allowed to all the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, and to all the Judges of the Supreme and District Courts of the United States.

Is not this fact worthy the consideration of our national Legislature and Judiciary? E. B.

Worcester, U. S. A., Dec. 6, 1845.

General Intelligence.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

On Monday of last week the funeral services of Wm. Taylor of Virginia, took place in the Hall of the House of Representatives, and were attended by the members of the Senate and the House.

There was no business of general interest transacted by the SENATE last week, except a short debate on Oregon, which sprung up in considering the Navy Bill. Most of the time was spent in secret sessions until Wednesday, when they adourned till Monday.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, much time was spent in discussing the Florida contested election case. The final vote in this case was taken on Saturday, when Mr. Cabell, who had a certificate of election in his pocket, was turned out, and his place given to Mr. Bockenbrough, who claimed to have been duly elected by the people. Nothing else of importance was done.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Twenty-two Days Later.

The steamship Hibernia reached Boston on Friday last, after a passage of eighteen days from Liverpool.

The news is of great importance, and that part of it which relates to the reception of the President's Message will be received with emotions of heart-felt pleasure by the friends of peace in this country.

The most remarkable if not the most important item of intelligence is the restoration of the Peel Ministry, Lord John Russell having failed in his efforts to organize a Cabinet. The main cause of this failure was the refusal of Lord Grey to form a part of the Government if Lord Palmerston was placed at the head of the Foreign Department. Wilmer & Smith's European Times says of this movement:—"Since the sailing of the Acadia on the 4th ult., a series of most extraordinary events have been witnessed in England of which its constitutional history affords no parallel. The country has been astounded by the sudden resignation of the Peel Ministry—one of the strongest executive governments that ever swayed its destiny; by the assumption of power on the part of Lord John Russell and the principal members of the late Whig Cabinet—followed, almost immediately, by its abandonment, and by the re-installation of Sir Robert Peel, minus two or three of his former colleagues—the whole forming the strangest anomaly in the punctilio of 'Cabinet making' that has occurred in England during the present, or indeed, any former generation."

The President's Message was received in England with great calmness, and produced no belligerent or warlike demonstrations. Public sentiment in that country is manifestly strong for peace. The tone of the English press, although each speaks with its own peculiar bias, is on the whole not so belligerent as was expected. Like all bad news long anticipated, anticipation has outrun reality.

The Committee of the London Peace Society have memorialized Sir R. Peel in favor of settling the Oregon question by peaceful rather than by other means, whatever provocation the British Government may receive to adopt a warlike tone and policy. They earnestly deprecate war between the two nations, and urge the propriety of settling the dispute by arbitration.

The question of the Repeal of the Corn Laws is still in suspense.

During the late gales the losses to shipping have been to a great extent; upwards of 50 vessels have been totally lost, and at least 100 human beings have perished. The most distressing loss was that of the St. David steamer, trading with passengers and goods between Havre and Liverpool. She sailed from Havre on the 13th December, and there is now no doubt that she has foundered, and that every soud on board has perished. Portions of her cargo have been found on the coast of Fecamp.

Previously to Capt. Judkins, of the Cambria, sailing from Liverpool, on his last outward passage for America, he made a trifling wager with a gentleman, that on Sunday morning, the 28th December, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, he would be off George's pierhead, delivering the mail bags. Such was his correctness of calculation, that he actually arrived two hours before the time.

France.

On the 30th of Dec., His Majesty, Louis Philippe, opened the session of the French Chambers with the usual foamalities.

On Tuesday evening President Polk's Message arrived in the city. Most certainly it has not created anything like so much sensation as was expected. With the exception of the Monitcur and the Journal des Debats, none of the newspapers have given it entire, the Presidential verboseness being too much for their scanty dimensions.

The President's brother, Mr. W. H. Polk, is now in Paris, where he will stop some time. He will afterward go to Naples, as ambassador extraordinary, to exchange the ratification of the treaty of commerce lately concluded. Washington Irving is also, we understand, in Paris, on leave of absence from Madrid.

Germany.

Religious tolerance appears to be gaining ground. Catholic priests no longer refuse to bless mixed marriages, i. e. marriages between Protestants and Catholics; and it is even asserted that the Pope has the intention of acknowledging the Protestant Church, so as to induce it to aid him in putting down the new religion of German Catholicism.

The new religion of Ronge is advancing, but does not making so much noise as it did. One or two Catholic priests have joined it, and have thereby drawn on themselves the vengeance of their bishops. Ronge is received well in some places and badly in others; and it is the same with respect to his partisans.

Italy.

The great events in Italy of late, have been the movements of the Emperor of Russia. The principal thing has been, that he has had an interview with the Pope, in which the latter addressed him in terms of strong remonstrance against the cruel and abominable treatment of Catholics in Russia, and particularly in Poland. Nicholas is represented to have been much moved by the earnest manner of the venerable old Pope, to have protested his ignorance of the brutal tyranny that had been exercised in his name, and to have promised to punish by exile to Siberia the persons guilty of it, should he find, on investigation, that the Pope's statement was correct.

LATE FROM MEXICO.—A great revolution is now in progress in Mexico, which will probably result in entirely changing the rulers if not the form of government.

The Moniteur of the 21st ult., says that the Supreme Government has appointed Gen. Bustament Commander in Chief, and Gen. Rorregon his second in command, of the army to oppose Gen. Paredes. That paper says the Government is indefatigably working to repell the revolt, and that it has already taken the necessary measures to put the Capital in a state of defence, and given out 3,000 guns to be distributed among the citizens. On the 21st ult., the Senate concurred with the Government in giving Dictatorial powers to President Herrera. El Siglo says that Paredes had siezed upon the public Treasury of the Fair at St. Juan, which had been committed to his charge. El Vera Cruzano of the 24th says that on the 23d a salute from the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa, under the command of Cassanova, announced the first movement of the Army and Navy in favor of the proclamation of san Luis Potosi by Gen. Paredes, and that it was immediately seconded by the garrison of the place at whose head was the brave Laudero, with the exception of a part of the battalion Sigero, numbering about 100 men, who left their barracks with their officers refusing to join their companions. This body, as they were marching out, fired a volley on those who remained, killing a captain and ten veterans, and wounding three others.

REMARKABLE DISCOVERY.—Last June, Edmund Dougan, residing on lot 17, in the 4th concession of the township of Nottawasaga, in the County of Simcoe, discovered on the lot he occupies, a sunken hole in the earth, having the resemblance of a small pond of water or low fen. It was situated on a rising ground, in the forest, which he was engaged in clearing, preparatory to cultivation. The roots of trees had spread over the marsh; and many of considerable thickness were cut away by the occupant of the lot, and his assistants.

Dougan's son, on stooping to drink out of the hole, discovered some bones in it, which caused a farther examination, and ultimately led to the discovery of a very large quantity of human bones, including between 500 and 600 skulls! They also found about 40 pounds of brass; several brass kettles, in a decayed state, and several hatchets.

In about a month after the occurrence above narrated, a similar hole was discovered by William Thompson, on the third lot in the same concession and township, which being examined, was found to contain eleven copper kettles, each of which would hold about nine pails of water.—Eight of the kettles were found as perfect as when made, and the other three were much corroded. In this hole were also discovered ten or a dozen sea shells, and a large quantity of pipe clay buttons. The holes are situated about one mile and a half from each other, with the North branch of the Nottawasaga River dividing them.

"THE BARE-FOOTED PRINTER BOY."—The Pittsburg Morning Ariel under this heading gives a short history of a distinguished citizen of Pennsylvania as follows:—

"Some thirty years ago a bare-footed boy floated down the Susquehannah river on an humble raft, and arrived at Harrisburg, Penn. He came from the North, and belonged to a large family; with all his worldly goods tied up in a little pocket handkerchief; he sought and obtained employment in a printing office as an apprentice. From an apprentice to a journeyman, from a journeyman to a reporter, then as an editor, the bare-footed printer boy worked his way against obstacles which the struggling poor only know. The persevering follower of Franklin began to realize the fruits of his patient toil and privation. The young aspirant became printer to the State, and by frugal management was enabled to accomplish the object dearest to his heart—the establishment of his mother in a home above want—in the possession of every comfort she could desire. His brothers were next his care, and like Napoleon he had a strong arm with which to aid them—an indomitable perseverance that nothing could long successfully obstruct. In a few years, they too, with his sisters, were independent of the world—the once bare-footed printer boy was in possession of affluence, surrounded by a young and affectionate family. He did not stop here. He became the friend of the friendless, the patron of merit, and the encourager of industry. He rose in honor and in office, until the poor, bare-footed boy, who entered a printing office in Harrisburg, hungry and weary, laid down his little bundle on a pile of wet paper, and asked to become a printer's apprentice, was elected a Senator in Congress! That man is SIMON CAMERON, of Pennsylvania."

ESCAPE OF FRENCH SLAVES.—The contiguity of the French West India Islands, where Slavery exists, to the Free Islands under the British crown, affords many opportunities for the escape of slaves from the former to the latter; the British emancipated islands proving a strong temptation to the poor fugitive French slave, who there finds an asylum from oppression, a home and liberty, notwithstanding all attempts to the contrary. Since emancipation, about 1,000 slaves have reached the British Colonies safely in their light sailing boats, as many have probably perished in the attempt, and as many more have been caught and thrown back into the horrible dungeon of slavery, to pay the penalty of their crime in the additional severity of their labor and their punishments.

A NEW ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY.—The atmospheric railway near Dublin, and that at Croydon, near London, owe their propelling force to the exhausting of the air in a tube. Another method has been invented in England, of which we find an account in the Miner's Railroad Journal. It is called Nickell's system of propulsion. A tube is laid along the track of the railway, charged with condensed air, which is made to act on the wheels, on the principle of a wedge, forcing them along with great velocity. For safety, economy, absence of friction, and power, the London Mining Journal is of opinion that it is not inferior to any other.

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.—On the 13th inst. at half past twelve o'clock, noon, a commission merchant from Alexandria, at Washington, inquired the price of corn at Baltimore—wanted 1000 or 1500 bushels—and an answer at half past 2 o'clock, also the probable cost of feirghting to Alexandria. His agent at Baltimore made the inquiry, and reported, and being a few minutes too soon, was answered that Mr. Fowle, the merchant, was not in. At the time appointed, he was informed of his presence, and communicated the price and cost of delivery at Alexandria; told him that a vessel might as well take 1000 bushels, and asked if he should send it. He was answered, yes. But, to make sure that all was understood, asked again, and was answered, "Fill her up." The agent at Baltimore found a vessel at the wharf with 1600 bushels on board, and bought it, on condition that the captain would take it to Alexandria. The captain engaged his pilot, and before six o'clock P. M., the vessel was under sail for Alexandria, with the cargo of corn.

BUTTERNUT OR WHITE WALNUT.—This is an abundant tree in our country. Its sap affords sugar equal to the maple. The bark of the root of this tree will excite a blister, and the bark and shells of the nut, dye a good brown color. A decoction of the inner bark is advantageously employed as a cathartic in the disease of horses called the yellow water. The extract should for medicinal purposes be made from the inner bark, especially the root, in the month of May or June. It is an efficacious and mild laxative in doses of from ten to twenty grains.

SAD.—A German woman was arrested a day or two since at Buffalo, on a charge of abandoning her infant child by leaving it upon the steps of a house. She acknowledged the act, and said she was driven to it by poverty, alledging that for two days prior to her forsaking her infant she had not tasted food, and was not able to nourish it! She piteously begged that her child might be restored to her, alledging that she had deeply regretted ever forsaking it. She was committed to prison in default of $500 bail.

SLAVERY SQUIRMING.—In the Maryland Legislature the other day, Mr. Clagett submitted preambles and Resolutions, that as in the opinion of this House the "Saturday Visiter," a paper published in Baltimore by J. E. Snodgrass, is an incendiary paper, in view of ch. 325, of 1835, and is calculated to create discontent and stir up insurrection among the people of color of this State; therefore,

Resolved, That the Governor be requested to institute such legal proceeding against the said Snodgrass, as in his judgement shall seem best to convict him of a violation of the said act of 1835, and to abate said newspaper as a public nuisance.

The Baltimore Sun says, that a flagrant outrage was 'perpetrated the other day in the House of Delegates of Maryland, in a solemn proposition made by Mr. Reeder, that the Legislature pass a law, enslaving all the free negroes of the State, and then providing for the sale of them, the proceeds to be applied to the liquidation of the State debt. Too monstrous for earnest, yet too solemn for a jest, the House seemed for a moment paralyzed; but promptly expressing a universal abhorrence of the proposition, Mr. Reeder withdrew it.'

SUMMARY.

A Mr. Crocker of Sunderland, has kept a regular account of the expenses and profits of seventeen hens, showing the following expenses:—The hens cost him in food for a year $10 78, while they brought him in eggs at 13 cents a dozen and chickens at 15 cents each $27 25, making a balance in his favor of $16 97.

A vegetable indigenous in New Grenada, the atraches, is said to be a valuable substitute for the potato. Each plant furnishes three or four pounds of root, of the nature of the carrot and potato united, and is said to be a wholesome food.

Joshua K. Hitchcock, a poor mechanic in Baltimore county, Md., had added to his family the other morning, three daughters, whom he named Mary Florida, Martha Texas, and Jane Polk. He has now 17 children.

Ten cents per head is paid for slaughtering hogs at Cincinnati, and the butchers thus realize a good profit. The hair is made into mattresses—the bristles into brushes—the blood into some chemical preparation—the hoofs into glue—the fat into lard and oil.

It is proposed to build a monster Hall in Boston, 821 feet long, the basement of the building to be used as a railroad depot.

One-third of Russia, Sweden, Germany, and Norway, is covered with forests; one-fourth of Austria and Prussia; one-fifth of Belgium; one-sixth of Switzerland; one-seventh of France; one-ninth of Italy; one-twelfth of Spain, and one-twenty-fifth of Great Britain.

Mr. C. F. Crosman, of Brighton, has raised, the past season, 410 bushels of carrots on one-fourth of an acre. This is at the rate of 1,640 bushels per acre. Mr. C. has grown something like 1,000 bushels of beets on one acre of land. He is extensively engaged in the seed growing business, producing several thousand dollars worth annually.

About 100,000 hogs have been killed at Louisville the present season, being an increase of 40,000 over any other year. The whole number killed in the West is estimated at about 1,000,000, which is an increase of 150,000,

In all England there are but nine daily papers published. They are all in London. The concentration of public support upon a number so small, satisfactorily accounts for their unsurpassed excellence.

Charcoal is highly recommended for fattening hogs. Say as often as twice a week. I have tried it on twenty hogs, and found that all ate it greedily except one old sow, who would not touch it.

It is a very extraordinary fact, that previous to the establishment of the copper works in Cornwall, Eng., the marshes in their vicinity were continually exciting intermittent fever, whereas, since that period, a case of ague has not occurred in the neighborhood. The men in the works say that the smoke kills all fevers. The fumes or smoke from the melting copper, contains arsenical vapor—arsenic is a medicinal remedy for intermittent fevers.

The eye distinguishes no difference betwixt the trees which produce the sweet and bitter almonds, or between the kernels themselves; it is said that the same tree has, by a difference of culture, afforded both. The almond tree nearly resembles the peach. It originally came from Syria and Barbary; but it is now much cultivated in the South of Europe.

Water is an essential constituent in the organization of all living bodies; and as it is continually expending during the process of life, that waste must be continually supplied, and this supply is of such importance that it is not left to reason or to chance, but forms the object of an imperious appetite.

Reuben Rowley, of Wrentham, the man who said he was robbed last fall, on board the steamboat Massachusetts, of $28,000, and told the story about eating a part of a peach, which so stupified him, has been confined in the State Lunatic Hospital at Worcester for some time past. On Friday afternoon he had leave to go out and take air, promising to return in due season; but at the last accounts he had not been heard of.

A bill has been reported in the Kentucky Legislature by Gen. Combs, and referred to the Judiciary Committee, taxing the luxuries of Dueling Pistols, Bowie Knives, and all other deadly weapons usually worn about the person. It seemed to meet very general approbation.

Jacob Copenham, of Virginia, recovered a verdict of $8,000 against Samuel Belter, for seducing his daughter. He was able to pay the amount of damages.

A summary of casualties for the last year upon the lakes, during the period of navigation, gives the number of lives lost as 60,—vessels ashore 36,—total wrecks 20,—and an aggregate of $190,000 damages.

Ginger is a perennial plant, indigenous in the East Indies, but now cultivated in the West India islands. It is cultivated there very much in the same manner as potatoes are here, and it is fit for digging once a year, unless for preserving in syrup, when it should be dug at the end of three or four months, at which time it is tender and full of sap.

Moss which sometimes attaches to the roof on the north side of houses, causing a premature decay of the shingles, may be completely removed by dry white lead sprinkled near the top of the roof just before a rain.

Cloves are the unexpanded flower bud of the clove tree. They are gathered in October and November, before they open, and when they are still green; they are then exposed to smoke for some days, and dried in the sun.

Silk is naturally coated with a substance which has been called a gum, and to which it owes its stiffness and elasticity. The silk most common in our climate contains, besides the gum, a yellow colored matter.

There are now about 70,000 Welsh emigrants and their children in this country. They are among our best emigrants.

A single paper printed in Charleston, S. C., of a late date, contains auction advertisements of the sale of no less than 349 "human chattels"—men, women and children—field-hands, sea-island cotton-hands, cooks, draymen, &c.

It is a significant fact, which has been strangely overlooked, the words—Ham, Shem and Japhet, mean in the original Hebrew—Black, Red and White.

William W. Wadsworth, of Geneseo, has had an attack of paralysis of the brain, from which it is feared he cannot recover.

During a session of the General Court, holden at Newton, in 1639, "Peter Poshaker was sentenced for drunkenness, to be whipped, and to have twenty stripes sharply inflicted; and fined five pounds, for slighting the magistrate on what they could do, saying they could but fine him."

A colored slave belonging to John Warfield, of Joshua, Howard District, Maryland, died aged one hundred and twenty-four years. She retained her sight and usual activity until a few days previous to her death. There is no doubt of her age, as she was raised in the same family in which she died.

'Some men, by affecting to be wise, actually prevent themselves becoming wise; for he who labors to make others think he knows more than he does, necessarily takes a position beyond their power to instruct him.'

'A noble mind emulates merit, but low minds only envy it; the one seeks to rise by imitating merit, the other seeks by detraction to bring merit down to its own level.'

The Pittsburgh Chronicle says that the other day, to decide a trifling wager, a man crossed the new suspension bridge upon the timbers, which are placed six feet apart crossing the bridge, so that he had to make his way by successive leaps from one piece of timber to another. A single misstep might have given him a fall of thirty or forty feet into the water below.

The N. O. Picayune states that the receipts of the bar at the St. Charles Hotel, in that city, pay the expenses of the entire establishment—being in the middle of the day at the rate of $100 an hour, and from six hundred to eight hundred dollars a day.

Mr. Nathan Platt, of Binghampton, was instantly killed on Saturday morning, while assisting in raising a small building.

Mr. Sturgis, in his valuable and instructive lecture before the Mercantile Library Association, stated that it might not be uninteresting to many of the audience to know, that the widow of Capt. Robert Gray, the discoverer of the Columbia river, and the first navigator who bore the American flag in triumph round the world, resided in Federal-street, near the Odeon, Boston. Mr. S. remarked that he had a business call from the old lady one cold morning recently, at a much earlier hour than many of his younger female acquaintances make their appearance at the breakfast table.

The loss of steamboats on the Ohio and Mississippi during the present season, has been greater than any previously known. The number of coalboats is estimated at ninety-eight—of flatboats with stock and produce, fifty-seven. Other losses have occurred which are not definitely stated.

The Liberty Convention in Tompkins county, have resolved to support such delegates to the State Convention as are in favor of unrestricted suffrage, without making distinct Liberty nominations.

Rev. Mr SHUCK, missionary in China, is now on his way to this country, with his children. He finds the care and education of them impossible without serious detriment to his labors as a missonary.

THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY has received $5,000 from its station in Southern India, as a contribution to the Jubilee Fund. One fourth of this sum was given by the native church at Nagercoil.

A case of breach of marriage contract was recently tried in Lewis Co. Circuit Court. The parties were Miss Lydia Adams and Homer C. Waters, and the jury decided that the lady's heart had been damaged to the amount of $450.

The brig Henry is to sail from Newburyport, Mass., early in February, for Columbia River and Sandwich Islands. A lady is to go as passenger, with the view of opening a school at the Wallamatte settlement, and is now engaged in collecting a library of useful books suitable for the purpose.

The Somerville and Elizabethtown Railroad, with all its property and privileges, is advertised to be sold at public vendue, on the 22d of March, by Isaac H. Williamson, a Master in Chancery. This is in pursuance of a foreclosure of the mortgages which were upon the Road.

It appears that the somewhat novel practice of reporting public discourses on religious subjects is extending its influence quite round the earth. A discourse delivered in this city in 1844, after entering probably many thousands of domestic circles, and wayside audiences, during a year's journey in the United States and in distant climes, has lately returned in an exchange paper published at the Sandwich Islands.

A new prison has lately been built in Berlin, in which the "Pennsylvania system," as the German papers call it, is to be applied in all its strictness. The prisoners are allowed to communicate with no one but the directors and persons employed in the prison, ministers of religion, and the members of the society for the moral amelioration of prisoners, who make them frequent visits. Their food is to consist of bread and vegetables. They are to have meat but three times a year. They are never to have a light even during the long winter evenings. But on the other hand, corporeal punishment, which is in use in all the prisons in Prussia, will not be permitted in the Pennsylvanian establishment.

Maryland has expended, according to the report of the State Treasurer, the sum of $147,950 in transporting free people of color to Liberia.

Review of New-York Market,---Tuesday, Jan. 27.

FLOUR AND MEAL—The market is very heavy and there are but few orders for shipment in market and these are generally limited at 5 50. Small sales are making to the home trade at 5 62½@5 69. In Southern there is not much doing. The good descriptions are quoted at 5 69@5 75. Meal is 3 75@4 00 with little inquiry. Rye Flour 4 00@4 25, with sales. Buckwheat 3 75@4 00 per bbl. Bags 1 87½@2 00 per cwt.

GRAIN—In Wheat we hear of a sale of 1300 bushels Virginia, for milling, supposed at 115 cts. The market is rather quiet. Corn is in good supply but dull. Old is held without sales at 70 cts. Rye is nominally 80 cts. Barley 68@70c. with nothing doing. Canal Oats are quoted at 48 cents.

SEED—Since the steamer arrived Clover has been rather duller. Sales yesterday 12,000 lbs. Pennsylvania for Liverpool at 10 cts. Flax is dull. We quote 10 00@11 00 for Rough and Clean.

PROVISIONS—In Ohio Pork there is very little doing and prices are heavy. We notice sales 100 bbls Mess at 12 18¾. Prime is nominally 10 00. A sale of 300 bbls State, Monroe Co. was made to arrive at 10 00 and 13 for Prime and Mess. Beef is doing better within a few days and quotations are nominally 25 cts. higher. We quote Sour 2 75@3 37½. Sales 300 bbls State Pork Hams arrive at 7c. per lb. Lard is very quiet and nothing doing.—Cheese is held at 7@7¼, with some inquiry for England.

DIED,

In North Stonington, Ct., January 18, of consumption, Mrs. SOPHIA A. LEWIS, wife of George H. Lewis, aged 32 years. Her illness was very painful, but she bore it patiently. In the hour of death she rejoiced in hope of immortality and eternal life.

EXECUTOR'S SALE.

WILL be sold at public vendue, on Tuesday, the 17th of February, at 1 o'clock P. M., on the premises, the Residence late of Jonathan R. Dunham, deceased, containing about 10 acres of excellent land, with a large and convenient Dwelling House and Barn; also a Tan Yard, Bark House, Shoemaker's and Currier's Shop, together with a Carriage House, and other out-buildings, and a good variety of fruit trees. It is situated on the main road from Plainfield to Bound Brook, about 2½ miles from the former and 3½ from the latter place, and about ¼ of a mile from the New Market Depot on the Elizabethtown and Somerville Railroad, from which place the cars make three trips to New-York daily. It would make a pleasant country residence for any gentleman wishing to live in the country and do business in the city; or an excellent Tannery, it being in the immediate vicinity of sufficient quantity of the best of bark, a stream of water runs through the premises, and the Water-Pit in said yard contains a living Spring of excellent water, which is said to make the best of Leather. Terms of payment made easy.

Also, a small Dwelling House and seven acres of good land adjoining the before described property.

Also, a small Dwelling House and Garden, adjoining the first mentioned property.

For a further description of the said premises, application may be made to Mrs. Dunham, on the premises, or to

RANDOLPH DUNHAM, Plainfield, or
DAVID DUNN, New Market, Executors.

N. B.—All the described properties are offered at private sale until the day of sale, and if any are sold notice will be given.

WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?

"Thou shalt love thy neighhor as thyself"—BIBLE.

* * * * * * * *

Who is our neighbor? Son of God!
In meekness and in mildness come!
O, shed the light of life abroad,
And burst the cerement of the tomb!
Then bid earth's rising myriads move
From land to land on wings of love.

Our neighbor's home's in every clime,
Of sun-burnt tint or darker hue;
The home of men since ancient time,
The bright green isles 'mid ocean's blue;
Or rocks, where clouds and tempests roll
In awful grandeur near the pole.

My neighbor, he who groans and toils,
The serf and slave on hill and plain
Of Europe, or of India's soils—
In Asia, or on Afric's main—
Or in Columbia's marshes deep,
Where Congo's daughters bleed and weep.

Poor, sobbing thing, dark as thy sire,
Or mother sad, heart-broken, lorn—
And will they quench a sacred fire?
And shall that child from her be torn?
'Tis done—poor wrecks, your cup is gall;
Yet ye're my neighbors, each and all.

Who is my neighbor? It is he
Who moves triumphant down the vale,
While shouting myriads bend the knee,
And poison all the passing gale
With adulation's rankest breath,
To one whose trade is that of death.

* * * * *

My neighbors all—each needs a sigh,
Each in due form a friendly prayer;
'O, raise the low, bring down the high
To wisdom's point, and fix them there;
Where men are men, and pomp and pride,
Are marked, and doomed, and crucified.'

Thou art my neighbor, child of pain!
And thou, lorn pilgrim, steeped in woe;
Our neighbor she, with phrenzied brain,
Whose pangs we little reck or know;
Who loved while hope and reason shone,
Nor ceased to love when both were gone.

And if on this green earth there be
One heart by baleful malice strung,
A breast that harbors ill to me,
A slanderous, false, reviling tongue—
My neighbor he—and I forgive;
O may he turn, repent, and live.

ESCAPE OF A YOUNG WOMAN FROM A SLAVE COFFLE.

"Slaves are slippery things." A member of the Maryland Legislature once told me, that when he was a boy, "slaves were pretty good property; and now a-days they do well enough whilst the owner is living, but as soon as the owner dies, and you come to look for the slaves, they are up and off like a flock of partridges—like Paddy's flea, when you come to put your finger upon them, they aint there!"

The following is a true story; (from prudential reasons names are not given.)

A gentleman residing in one of the free States, had a free colored girl living with him, and being about to take his wife to the Federal city to visit her relations, this young woman requested permission to accompany them. A few days after their arrival at Washington City, a slave gang or "coffle," passing along the street, "on their way to a Southern market," stopped immediately in front of the house where this gentleman, his wife, and free servant were staying; it was in the dusk of the evening, but not yet dark. The slaves, male and female, were tied, some by a small cord, others by a chain, to a long rope, that passed between the ranks of the slaves, "looking very much like a parcel of firemen drawing their engine by a single rope." While the gentleman was viewing this sad spectacle, he heard a shriek of agony in the house, and immediately went to see what was the matter. He found his servant had fainted, and was lying on the floor:—he dashed some water into her face, which revived her, when he asked, what was the matter? She replied, "My God! they have got my sister in that coffle." "Hush up!" replied he, "show me which she is, and make no noise about it." He then went into the street, with his knife concealed in his hand, and quietly cutting the cord that bound her to the coffle rope, without any body except the captive seeing it; he then said to her in an angry tone, "go into the house, you huzzy, or I'll knock your d——d brains out." She instantly obeyed—his language and bearing, and her obsequious submission, was in such good keeping with Southern manners, that "the bystanders never suspected that any thing was wrong" "The head devil, who had charge of the coffle, was at the other end of the rope, and no notice was taken of the transaction by any body." The gentleman then went into the house, and told the fugitive to get into an ice chest, and immediately shut the lid—this was done in order that his brother-in-law, at whose house he was staying, might not see her, and should know nothing about it, in case she was inquired of. It was several hours before the cars would start for the North, and the gentleman says they were the longest hours he ever remembered.

About an hour and a half after the girl had been thus far rescued, a horseman was seen passing up the street on a full run,—they had gone some distance from the town before the young woman was missed,—this man (or rather demon) had returned in search of her; nobody had seen her—nobody knew any thing about her—the search was fruitless. They "knew that they had brought her to Washington, and as there were always plenty of people about, it was impossible she could have escaped in the city;" so he concluded she must have eloped after they got out of the city; and back he went, on a full run, as if "old Harry" was after him, in order to search the country between the city and the place where they first missed her. He was no sooner gone, than our Northern gentleman opened the ice-chest, and told the affrighted girl to get up and dress herself in her sister's clothes, and follow him to the Rail Road Depot as his servant. Now came the great trial; it was a dangerous experiment for him and for her; the scrutiny was severe. Before the cars started, the agent came up to her and demanded, "who do you belong to?" She replied, "to Mr.——," pointing to him. The agent asked him, "does this wench belong to you?" "Yes sir!" was the laconic reply, with all the hauteur of a Southern nabob. The gentleman had a sallow complexion, dark hair, dark eyes, and might readily pass for a Southerner; but the direction of the route he was traveling, or something else, made the agent hesitate. It was a fearful moment, when the gentleman assuming all the bluster and "chivalry" of which he was capable, and "feeling indignant" at the craven tool of Southern slaveocracy, his eye flashed fire, as he put his hand into his bosom, (as though he was in the act of drawing an unanswerable argument out of his breast pocket,) and turning round to the agent, demanded in a tone which made him quail, "do you doubt my word, sir?" To which the agent replied, "oh no, sir, your word is sufficient." This appeared to calm our friend's resentment, so lowering his tone, he asked the agent if he did not remember his bringing his servant with him to Washington about a week ago? adding, "you ought to know that bonnet—your Washington niggers don't often carry such head gear;" at which the agent. smiling, went away saying, "all's right, sir, all right!" and away went the cars, gentleman, servant and all! and she is now living where the slaveholder will not find her; or if he does, he dare not take her. Thus was a young woman rescued from "worse than death," and thus was a Northern man made into an abolitionist, which he was not when he left home for the South. He is such now, and no doubt will continue to be such as long as he lives.

Reader, Washington city is the capitol of "the freest Republic under the sun!" It is a great slave market—belongs to the people of the free States as much as it does to those of the slave States. "Hail Columbia happy land!" What have you of the North to do with slavery at the South? "Go home and mind your own business." What right have "Northern doe-faces" to meddle with our "peculiar" institutions in the District of Columbia, or in any of the territories of the United States? Our slaves are "fat and sleek." The above transaction took place within sight of the Capitol over which floats the flag of our Country: the bloody stripes upon that star-spangled banner prove that our forefathers were in favor of stripes—and stripes are a necessary concomitant of slavery—therefore the framers of our Constitution intended to protect slavery forever. If that be not plain I can't make it plainer. Q. E. D.

HOW MAY I TEACH MY CHILD SINCERITY?

This question was proposed recently in a Maternal Association, and I will attempt briefly to answer it.

That children are naturally indisposed to sincerity, must be admitted. A propensity to deceive by word and act is among the bitter fruits of our common apostacy. "The wicked," saith the Psalmist, "are estranged from the womb; they go astray as soon as they are born, telling lies."—One of the first things observed in children is an effort to deceive. To exonerate themselves from blame, or free themselves from anticipated punishment, they falsify their word, or cover up what truth and duty demand should be exposed. Very important, therefore, is it to prevent this—to nip this evil propensity in the bud, and cultivate a frank, open, sincere disposition. How may this be done? I suggest four things:

1. Impress them deeply with the criminality and odiousness of insincerity. This may be done by reading and expounding to them portions of Scripture bearing upon this point, and making them commit to memory those portions of Scripture.

2. Always be sincere with them; never allowing yourself to deceive them in any particular, or for any cause. There is often a temptation, on the part of the parents, to do the opposite of this. It is often quite convenient to deceive a child; but he who does it, does it to the child's moral injury and his own guilt. He teaches falsehood by example—the most effective of teaching—and the pupil will most surely learn and practise deceit himself.

3. When your children commit an offence and confess it, commend them for the confession and forgive them the wrong done. This will inculcate the belief that the sin of lying is far greater than sins in general, which is the fact, and cause it to be so regarded. It is a violation not only of paternal precept, but of God's sacred law. Lev. xix. 11. Col. ii. 9. Phil. iv. 8.

When you detect your child in a lie, invariably punish him for it. Whatever other offence goes unpunished, let not this. If Jehovah regards lying as a crime so flagrant as to denounce against the liar eternal separation from himself, in the world to come, that parent who omits severe discipline in case of falsehood, is certainly deserving of censure.

Our Saviour tells us that he who lies, bears Satan's image. "He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh his own, for he is a liar, and the father of it." And Jehovah hath said, "All liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone."

While the path of sincerity is straight and plain, and the sun-light of heaven rests upon it, and while it leads upwards to the home of God and truth—the paths of dissimulation are dark and crooked, and lead down to the abode of the Prince of Darkness.

Can we be too careful that our children should be kept in the way of the Father of lights, and out of the tortuous, snaky course, of the infernal serpent? [Mother's Magazine.

SUGGESTIONS TO YOUNG MOTHERS.

Rise so early in the morning, that you may be able to secure at least half an hour for reading the Scriptures and prayer before your domestic concerns require your attention. You will find this exercise admirably adapted to prepare and strengthen you to encounter, with a becoming temper and spirit, the trials and vexations of the day.

Accustom your children to make prayer and praise to God, the giver and preserver of life, the first employment in the morning, and the last at night. Remember that the duties of a mother are untransferable, therefore, except in cases of unavoidable necessity, never suffer the devotional exercise of your children to be superintended by another.

See that your daughters rise early, and that they employ themselves about such domestic affairs as are suited to their years and capacities.

Never suffer your children to require services from others which they can perform for themselves. A strict observance of this rule will be of incalculable advantage to them through every period of life.

Let all the young members of your family be regularly washed and combed before breakfast; never permit them to treat you with so much disrespect as to appear at your table in a slovenly condition. It should ever be remembered that the highest respect which a child can pay is due to its parent. This respect may be insured by forming correct habits in youth.

DUTY OF PARENTS.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it," is a part of God's word, which we think, if one passage can be more prominent than another, will be most conspicuous to the eye of parents in the day of judgment; and wherever they turn their eyes it will meet them in all its fearful realities. Parents, that declaration is true.—God has declared it, and upon your heads be the awful responsibility of violating it. That it is violated, is a fact too apparent to demand proof; a fact which every where meets us, demonstratively proves that "a child left to himself will bring his mother to shame." There are many parents who spend more time, and take more pains, in training their horses and oxen than they do in training their children. There are great and awful responsibilities devolving upon parents, the importance of which is commensurate with the value of the immortal soul. Weigh well the instructions you give, and the example you place before your children. You are preparing them to be a blessing or a curse to the world. You are training them for heaven or hell. The seeds which are now being sown in their youthful minds will soon germinate, and then will be fulfilled the Scripture—"Whatsoever a man soweth, that he shall also reap." It is an old and true adage, that "Just as the twig is bent the tree 's inclined:" let it be bent to obedience and virtue. Much of the wickedness practised in our land is justly chargeable—either directly or indirectly--upon parents. No impressions are so lasting as those made in youth. How important, then, that they should be of the right character. A. D.

THE UPBRAIDINGS OF CONSCIENCE.

About eighty years ago, according to popular report, a pedlar, who had the character of being possessed of a large sum of money, which he always carried about him, entered a farm-house above Rothbury, at which, in his regular visits to that part of the country, he had been accustomed to call. From that hour he was never more seen, and tradition ascribes his murder to the farmer's wife.—She was the only person at home when the pedlar called; and, as she and her husband had before spoken of killing him for the sake of his money, she resolved to avail herself of the present opportunity of executing the foul deed. As he was sitting in the kitchen, with his back to the door, eating some food she had set out, she came suddenly behind him, and felled him to the ground with a blow from a churn staff; and after taking the purse from his pocket, threw him into a deep well in the yard. On her husband's return from the field, she informed him of what she had done; and next day when the servants were absent, they drew the body from the well and buried it. Though their neighbors noticed that their worldly circumstances were much improved, and that they had more money than formerly, yet they were never suspected of having murdered the pedlar. Their ill-gotten gain, however, brought them no happiness.—The husband a few years afterwards, fell from his horse and broke his neck; and at times the widow was seized with fits of terror, which appeared to deprive her of reason. She survived her husband several years; and on her death-bed communicated to a person who attended her, the circumstances of the pedlar's murder, and the cause of her terrors. Frequently, when she entered the kitchen where the deed was done, she fancied she saw the pedlar sitting at the table: and after she had removed to another house, he used to seat himself opposite to her, with his hair wet and hanging down over his face, as he appeared when she and her husband drew him from the well. In passing a cottage, in which I remembered an old woman had dwelt who was suspected of having caused the death of one of her children, I enquired of a person, a native of the village, who was with me, if he knew anything of the circumstances, and received from him the following account. "I knew the woman, who is now where the Lord pleases, very well. She was the wife of a day tale man, and they had more small bairns than they could well provide for; and in harvest she used to go out a shearing. One year about the harvest time, she had a young bairn at the breast, which she thought was one too many; and that she might not be hindered of the shearing by staying at home with it, and that she might get rid of it altogether, she smothered it in the cradle. There was no public enquiry made, nor inquest held, but all her neighbors, especially the women-folk, believed that the bairn was wilfully made way with, for she had the character of being a cold-hearted mother. She never did well, though she lived for nearly forty years afterwards. She fell into a low way, and was at times almost clear past herself. She was always the worst about the time of the harvest moon; and would then often walk about the house, and would sometimes go out and wander about the common, all night, moaning and groaning in a fearful way. I have many a time seen her holding her head between her hands, rocking herself backwards and forwards on a low chair, groaning and sighing, and every now and then giving an awful sort of shriek, which folk who knew her best said was her way when she fancied she heard the bairn cry in the same way that it did when she was smothering it. About the harvest time, she often used to see the spirit of the innocent she had put to death: and her neighbors often heard her talking to it, bidding it to be gone, and not torment her longer with its cries. She is now dead and in her grave, and has been many years; and whatever may be her punishment in the next world for taking away the life of a harmless bairn of her own flesh and blood, she certainly dreed a heavy penance in this.—Rambles in Northumberland.

YOUR READING.

Yes, young man, young woman, your reading! your reading!!

It forms your character. It matters comparatively little what your fathers, and mothers, and teachers read. Their character is formed, they have knowledge to distinguish the good from the bad—experience to understand the arts of seducing writers, and power to withstand the assaults of the unprincipled. But you have everything to learn—are inexperienced, unsuspicious, and susceptible. You take not a book into your hand—at least not one with which you are pleased—without being affected by it in your principles—in your moral character—in your conduct. These beautiful magazines, with their fashion plates, salacious engravings, and slop literature, if you sip from them monthly with delight, will assuredly make you vain, impure, and superficial. These imported and translated novels, with their villain heroes and courtesan heroines—their extravagant fictions and impossible catastrophes and rewards—their bombast and their bathos, will not fail to vitiate every young person who reads them. They may have some good design, and may, if read by our philosophers and politicians, excite to some action towards reforming some of the abuses of society, but what have you to do with them? Your business is, now, to form your own character after a right model. It will be time enough to read Bulwer, and Dickens, and Eugene Sue, and George Sand, when you shall be able to take fire into your bosom and not be burned—or visit pot-houses, and not take infection Possibly it may be best that some wise men should revel in this filth for the sake of fishing up now and then a practical idea—perhaps hereafter it may be your duty to be familiar with vice and corruption, irreligion and vulgarity, but at present it is at imminent peril that you come into contact with these things, or in sight of them. They will neither make you better sons and daughters, brothers and sisters, nor make you scholars, nor fit you for life, nor prepare you for death. There is reading which will do all these, and to that you ought to resort.

It indicates your character. When the Christian is seen daily familiar with the Bible, and interested in religious books, is it not proof satisfactory that he is a good man? When the statesman makes history and political economy his study, are we not satisfied that he is an honest politician? When the student makes the classics his companions, is it not evidence that he appreciates true excellence in literature? Let us see the books a man loves to read, and we will give you his character—literary, religious, political, or what not. Understand then, that all sensible people: nay the kitchen-maid and the servant boy—satisfy themselves, and very correctly, as to your character by the reading they see you interested in. Many allow themselves to indulge in reading what they would not hear—to exchange ideas with an author which they would not for their reputation interchange in conversation. But they deceive themselves. Their minds are transparent! to all who know what they read. Young man, throw away that indecent novel; it is a mirror that reflects your very thoughts to every by-stander. Young woman, burn up those trashy, immodest magazines—clear your centre-table of these elegant, but corrupt volumes, for every visiter rates your purity of heart according to these indices.

It affects your happiness. Directly and indirectly, immediately and remotely, is happiness dependent on your reading. It is a low kind of enjoyment at best, which worthless and corrupt reading affords, and just according to its intensity, inversely will be its continuance and repetition. Those susceptibilities of your nature which are excited and fired by the kinds of reading we have adverted to, soon lose their delicacy, and need a spicier stimulus to afford repeated pleasure. They are also for the most part peculiar to your time of life, and you will soon be without either capacity or means of that to which you are accustoming yourself for enjoyment. Science, literature, moral and religious truth, these, though they may not to the young bring so much immediate gratification, do gently excite all the sensibilities of their nature, develope them in symmetry, draw out and strengthen those on which age depends for enjoyment—and thus ensure serenity, peace and happiness, as years carry them on to manhood and old age. If you would lay up a good foundation for happiness in time to come, be counselled by the wise and good what to read. O, the misery of that being who has spent youth in revelling in the stimulating, exhausting scenes of fiction, or in imbibing principles, and forming character, by reading unprincipled and trashy books.

It will affect your conduct. You cannot resist the operation of the principle that "evil communications corrupt good manners." If you associate with the vicious, you will insensibly fall into their practices. What is more proverbial? But your reading brings you companions. There is no difference worth the computation between a villain in person using all the blandishments of art and experience to seduce the virtuous, and a villain by description, successfully practicing upon innocence and inexperience. If there be any excess of danger, it is in the latter. It is not every rake that has good manners, or wears fine clothes, nor every designing man that can make himself agreeable. They often disgust and repel those they would seduce. But a rake described by all the skill and ability of an author, is a gentleman—he is stamped in the mint of fashion, and passes current in society; every body is in danger to whom he is introduced. You make his acquaintance if you read without advice or caution.—The Bible makes Christians. Baxter's Call and the Dairyman's Daughter, have converted thousands. The Pirate's Own Book has made pirates. Byron has made courtesans. Bulwer has made villains. It is a book that often starts the first thought of impurity, and suggests the first step in crime.

Young man—young woman—your reading! YOUR READING!! [Religious Recorder.

MATERNAL INFLUENCE

Timothy Dwight and Aaron Burr were first cousins, their mothers being daughters of the elder Jonathan Edwards. The mother of Dwight lived to educate and train her son and to enjoy the rich fruits of her watchful care; the mother of the latter, together with his father, an excellent and exemplary man, died while he was young. Thus early bereft of parental guidance, Burr with high intellectual capacities entered upon a course which has made his name a terror, both in the social and political world. Few men, perhaps ever attained to his enormity of crime; fewer still have experienced, more fully, the miseries which are the inevitable result of a career of sensuality and lust.

"Reft of his sire, too young such loss to know;
Lord of himself, that heritage of woe,"

his evil propensities early acquired the mastery over his moral powers, and he fell, even in the meridian of his days, a wreck, a moral ruin, over which were shed a nation's tears, and over whose memory, withered though it be by the pestilence of mighty vices, Christianity will long mourn.

"As o'er the grave of one whom God endowed
With powers noble and for noble ends;
But who, in sin, conceived a mighty crime,
And fell—no more to rise."

As a contrast to the fate of Burr, we may present that of Dwight. In the language of a terse and beautiful writer: "He became eminently successful in extending the beauties of learning and religion, which he loved, and left behind him a noble monument of piety and genius in his written works. Who can say but that if Mrs. Burr had lived to watch over and pray with her son, those highly gifted youths might have pursued the same narrow path, and they might have been equally useful on the earth, and equally happy in the heavens!

Mothers! though your children may not possess mental endowments of so high an order, with which to bless or curse mankind, to honor or offend God, elevate or degrade themselves, yet they do possess souls as precious, for whose salvation the same blood has been shed, and while your lives have been spared, they are as much dependent on you for their guidance aright, and you are as deeply responsible to God as were those mothers, for the manner in which you discharge the sacred trust.—O, have you individually prepared with reference to your children, to obey the summons, "Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest no longer be steward?"—Pres. of the West.

THE SECRET OF HAPPINESS.

Go, search the ponderous tomes of human learning,—explore the works of Confucius—examine the precepts of Seneca, and all the works of Socrates. Collect all the excellencies of the ancient and modern moralists, and point to a sentence equal to the simple prayer of our Saviour, 'Father, forgive them!' Reviled and insulted—suffering the grossest indignities, crowned with thorns and led away to die, no annihilating curse breaks from his lips. Sweet and placid as the aspirings of a mother for her nursling, ascends the prayer of mercy for his enemies, 'Father, forgive them!' O, it is worthy of its origin, proving incontestably that his mission was from heaven.

Acquaintances, have you ever quarreled? Friends, have you ever differed? If he who was pure and perfect, forgave his bitterest enemies, do you well to cherish anger? Brothers, to you the precept is imperative. You should forgive, not seven times, but 'seventy times seven.'

Husbands and wives, you have no right to expect perfection in each other. To err is human. Illness will sometimes make you petulant, and disappointment ruffle the smoothest temper. Guard, then, with unremitting vigilance, your passions. Controlled, they are the genial warmth that cheers us along the way of life--ungoverned, they are consuming fires. Let your strife be one of respectful attention and conciliatory conduct. Cultivate with care the kind and gentle affections. Plant not, but eradicate, the thorn in your partner's path. Above all, let no feeling of revenge, ever find harbor in your breast. A kind word, an obliging action, even if it be a trifling one, has a power superior to the harp of David, in calming the billows of the soul.

Revenge is as incompatible with happiness as religion. Let him whose soul is dark with malice, and studious of revenge, walk through the fields, clad with verdure and adorned with flowers. To his eye there is no beauty; the flowers to him exhale no fragrance. Like his soul, nature is robed in the deepest sable. The smile of beauty and cheerfulness lights not up his bosom with joy; but the fires of hell rage there, and render him as miserable as he wishes the object of his hate.

But let him lay his hand upon his breast, and say, 'Revenge, I cast thee from me; Father, forgive me as I forgive others,' and nature assumes a new and delightful garniture. Then, indeed, are the meads verdant and the flowers fragrant; then is the music of the grove delightful to his ear, and the smile of virtue lovely to his soul. [MINER.

THE SON OF A TEMPERANCE FATHER.—The Rev. E. Beecher, of Boston, in a late temperance speech, said:—

"I was baptised, as it were, a temperance man. You all know the temperance principles of my father. When I was a boy, and he put into my hand the little coin I was to spend on holidays, he used to say to me, 'Edward, take care that you taste nothing but water.' I need not tell you that I followed his injunctions to the letter. There is not a muscle nor nerve in all my frame that ever felt the power of alcohol. And so long as this arm adheres to my body, and this tongue does not cleave to the roof of my mouth, I pledge myself anew to the cause."

What father would not be proud of such a speech as this from his son, and what a generation shall we have in America, when all our young men can use the same language?

A FRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, Principal, and Professor of Languages.
IRA SAYLES, Associate Principal, and Professor of Mathemat
GURDON EVANS, Professor of Natural Sciences.
J. R. HARTSHORN, Professor of Anatomy and Physiology.
O. STILLMAN, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
Miss C. B. MAXSON, Preceptress, Instructress in French, Italian, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. M. B. KENYON, Assistant in the Female Department.

From the very liberal patronage extended to this Institution during the past seven years, the Trustees have been induced to make arrangements for greatly increasing its facilities. The Chemical, Philosophical, Astronomical, and Mathematical apparatus is amply sufficient for a full illustration of the different departments of those Sciences. The apparatus will be farther increased at the commencement of the ensuing Fall Term, by the introduction of whatever may be necessary in other Sciences than those above mentioned, especially, by a MANIKIN of the most approved structure, now being imported from Paris, expressly for this Institution. This will enable the student of Physiology and Anatomy to pursue his studies with advantages nearly equal to those afforded by an actual subject, having this farther advantage of being divested of all those revolting circumstances ever attendant on the dissecting room.

THE TEACHERS' CLASSES, as usual, will be exercised in practical teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective Instructors. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. Daily Lectures will also be given during the Fall and Winter Terms; and the public may be assured that this department of the Institution shall be conducted upon the principles of the best regulated Normal Schools, in this, or any other country.

Finally, the proprietors pledge themselves, that the reputation of this Institution shall be sustained by the introduction of whatever may be necessary to meet the demands of an intelligent public.

The Institution is liberally endowed and subject to the visitation of the Regents.

Its Library is choice and extensive, and accessible, also, to all the students gratis.

THE ACADEMIC YEAR for 1845—6 consists of three Terms, as follows:—The First, commencing Wednesday August 13, 1845, and ending Thursday, November 20. The Second, commencing Wednesday, November 26, and ending Thursday, March 6, 1846. The Third, commencing Wednesday, March 25, and ending Thursday, July 2.

EXPENSES.—Tuition, per term, from $3 50 to $5 00. Board, per week, $1 00. Piano, (extra,) per term, $10 00. Washing, lights and fuel, per term, from $2 00 to $5 00. The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel and tuition, (except on the Piano,) need not exceed $70 00; and may even be reduced much below this, where individuls board themselves, either separately or in clubs. For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense. SAMUEL RUSSELL,

SUNDAY LEGISLATION ANTI-REPUBLICAN—NO. 5.

A republican government is a government by the elected representatives of the people to be governed. This form of government is always desirable for enlightened and civilized nations, because it insures the most attainable certainty of the government being exercised for the people's benefit. It is from its very nature opposed to the imposition of unnecessary and unprofitable restraints upon the liberties of the people, as likewise the imposition of onerous taxation. In proportion as the people understand their just rights, a republican government is more conducive to the prosperity and happiness of a nation than any other form of government ever devised by man.

The failure of certain republics, is no exception to the principles here laid down. Their failures are to be accounted for by their departures from the principles and objects proper to a Republic; and almost the only danger attending the ultimate success of our own government, is a tendency to the same thing. Our success hitherto has been owing, under God, to our constitutions and laws being framed, and our policy guided, by men of independent minds, who, disavowing the maxims and policy of past ages and other nations, struck out a high and honorable policy for a young and vigorous nation, based upon the natural and just rights of MAN. They were not guided by overweening regard to particular classes, who have usually acquired importance by adventitious circumstances; but they looked upon all men as created by one just and omnipotent Creator, who, by his own appointments, has endowed them all from their birth, with equal right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Experience has so far shown the wisdom of their course; let this course be faithfully followed, and our career as a nation will still be marked by an onward march of prosperity and happiness.

Public men in general are too much enamored by the glare of the fictitious glory which flares up from past ages and great nations; and so are disposed to imitate their examples, and count nothing safe which does not wear the shape of those ancient models. But we have set it down in our political creed, that so sure as this policy should ever predominate in our nation, we shall dash upon the same rocks, or be hurried into the same whirlpools, which have destroyed other nations. One great fault of past ages and other nations is, they legislated too much; and in no branch of government more so than in the framing of their penal codes. The punishment of crimes should always be adjusted to the peculiar nature of the crimes committed. They may be classed under four heads,—offences against religion—against manners—against the peace of society—and against individual safety. With the first of these only have we any concern in this article.

Whoever studies our National and State Constitutions, must see that the framers of them have decided that no human government can make any law for conscience; that is an affair which lies solely between the Creator and the creature. Where there is no public act, there is no ground for judicial accusation. They have decided farther, that no human government can enforce any forms of religion or modes of worship; because these are matters of conscience, and affairs altogether between the Creator and the creature. It follows of necessity, therefore, that all that human governments can of right do for religion, is to protect the rights of conscience. They can of right inflict no penalty for the non-observance of religious rites.* Let no one of our citizens be alarmed at such a conclusion as this. Our government does not discard Revelation. Our National and State Constitutions recognize the rights of Jehovah, and his only. No Jupiter, Juggernaut, Mahomet, or Pope, can ever be acknowledged by our National or State Constitutions. In the language of William Penn, they declare, "Almighty God the only Lord of Conscience, Father of lights and spirits, and the author as well the object of all divine knowledge, faith and worship, who only can enlighten the minds, and persuade, and convince the understanding of people in due reverence to his sovereign over the souls of mankind." Our government, therefore, is neither infidel nor hierarchial; but, with respect to religion, altogether protective. To quote once more the language of Penn, it says, "If any person shall abuse or deride any other for his or her different persuasion and practice in a matter of religion, such shall be looked upon as a disturber of the peace, and be punished accordingly." No reputable American jurist or statesman has ever called in question the soundness of these principles; nor, as it appears to us, can they, without renouncing the true basis of a republican government—the natural and just rights of an enlightened people.

What, then, is the kind of protection guaranteed to religion by our Constitutions? Clearly, that revealed religion shall never be subverted by law; nor shall any form of religion, which acknowledges Almighty God for its author, ever be forbidden or proscribed, so long as its advocates demean themselves peaceably. It is consistent, therefore, and indeed necessary, that they should forbid the establishment of any one mode of worship, or any single religious observance, above another; because, in the fallibility of human judgement, there is danger that one mode or observance would clash with another mode or observance; and to establish one such is to subvert the other. Yet this, so far as they are enforced, is the operation of the Sunday laws. They are, therefore, anti-republican. They conflict with the rights of conscience; more than one class of citizens are restrained and proscribed by their operation; and the religious faith and practice of one class of citizens are established and promoted at the expense of another, which is subversive of natural right, and therefore anti-republican.

There is another principle of republican government, which we must notice, because it has been disregarded in the enactment of Sunday laws. It is always supposed that the government shall be administered with the people's consent, and for their special benefit. In party questions of common interest, it is a necessary result of human infirmity, that the majority must rule, and the minority must yield their preferences for the common good. But in all matters of local and private interest, a republican government is bound by the ends of its own existence, to consult the wishes and protect the interests of that part of the citizens who are most immediately interested. Now it can never be pretended, with any real show of truth, that the religious observance of the first day of the week is a question of common interest. It is a religious question, and a party question; and those parties religious, and not political parties; so that, although there is a majority in the State in favor of the observance, they can have no right to enforce their particular views on that matter in a truly republican government. They have no right to compel the submission of the minority, for two reasons, viz: 1st. It is a religious question, and a question of conscience with which a republican government may not interfere. 2d. It is not a question of common interest, and in a republican government majorities may rule only on questions of common interest. That it is not a question of common interest, is obvious to all, because a part of the citizens do not believe in a divine obligation religiously to observe any one day of the week, and others believe that the seventh day of the week is the only day obligatory upon any part of mankind. It is not a question whether those who believe in the observance of the first day shall be permitted to observe that day undisturbed; that they are entitled to by the constitution, and protected in by statutes, every way adequate to the object, as are likewise the observers of the seventh day. The question is, whether those who observe the first day, being a majority, have a right to compel those who are in the minority to do as they do, or to restrain them from following out the convictions of their own consciences, by secularizing the first day, according to that law of God by which they feel bound religiously to observe the seventh day. If they have such right by virtue of their being the majority, we have only to obtain a majority in favor of the seventh day, and the right is exactly reversed. To us it is obvious that the question of the religious observance of the first day or the seventh day is purely a religious question, a question of private interest, and a question human legislation may not determine. To do so, is to subvert the rights of conscience, and to exalt one religious party at the expense of another; consequently it is a departure from the first principles of a republican government.

RELIGIOUS TOLERATION.

[The following excellent remarks, by the distinguished Dr. John Walker, were written during the pendency of a bill before the English Parliament in the year 1813 for the relief of some Dissenters from certain penal disabilities. They embrace BIG THOUGHTS, and recommend themselves to all sects and individuals, as well as to secular authorities, who presume to interfere in the matter of faith and conscience between man and his Maker.—W. M. F.]

"Toleration is not the OPPOSITE of intolerance, but it is the COUNTERFEIT of it. Both are despotisms. The one assumes to itself the right of withholding liberty of conscience, and the other of granting it. The one is the Pope armed with fire and faggot, and the other is the Pope selling or granting indulgences. The former is church and state, the latter is church and traffic. But toleration may be viewed in a much stronger light.—Man worships not himself, but his Maker; and the liberty of conscience which he claims is not for the service of himself, but of his God. In this case, therefore, we must necessarily have the associated idea of two beings; the mortal who renders the worship, and the immortal Being who is worshiped. Toleration, therefore, places itself, not between church and church, nor between one denomination of religion and another, but between the being who worships, and the Being who is worshiped; and by the same act of assumed authority by which it tolerates man to pay his worship, it presumptuously and blasphemously sets itself up to tolerate the Almighty to receive it. Were a bill brought into any Parliament, entitled 'An Act to tolerate or grant liberty to the Almghty to receive the worship of a Jew or Turk,' or 'to prohibit the Almighty from receiving it,' all men would startle and call it blasphemy. There would be an uproar. The presumption of toleration in religious matters would then present itself unmasked; but the presumption is not the less, because the name of 'man' only appears to those, for the associated idea of the worshiper and the worshiped cannot be separated. Who, then, art thou, vain dust and ashes—by whatever name thou art called, whether a king, a bishop, a church, or a state, a parliament or any thing else—that obtrudest thine insignificance between the soul of man and its Maker? Mind thine own concerns. If he believes not as thou believest, it is a proof that thou believest not as he believeth, and there is no earthly power can determine between you."

THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST MEMORIALS.

MR. EDITOR—Agreeably to your request, you have, below, a copy of the Memorial presented to the Legislature, from myself and others, (noticed by your correspondent at Trenton, in a late number of your paper,) asking for an amendment to the law "for the suppression of Vice and Immorality," passed the 16th of March, 1798, which will modify its penalties so far as not to conflict with the religious rights of those professing Christians, who religiously observe the seventh day as the Sabbath.

To the Honorable the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey:

Your petitioners, citizens of the State New Jersey respectfully represent to your honorable body, that while the Constitution of this Commonwealth secures to every citizen of the State full liberty to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and guarantees equal rights and privileges to all classes and denominations of Christians, still there is in force, on the Statute Book, a law inflicting civil penalties upon ALL persons who may perform labor on the first day of the week: thus imposing grievous burdens on large congregations of Evangelical Christians within the borders of the State, who regularly observe the seventh day as the Sabbath, and who are equally entitled to the panoply of the laws: We, your petitioners, therefore, pray your honorable body, that so much of the law, entitled "an Act for the suppression of Vice and Immorality," passed 16th March, A. D. 1798, as imposes penalties on this class of citizens, and all sections of the laws which relate to this subject, in the New Code of Laws of the State of New Jersey, when revised by your honorable body, may be so modified and amended, that those citizens who religiously observe the seventh day as the Sabbath, may enjoy the same exemption, and be protected to the same extent, while pursuing their lawful occupations on the first day of the week, as others are protected on the seventh day.

And, in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray, &c., &c.
